"The Commissioner of Internal Revenue had the power and authority by virtue of the statute above referred to, and with the advice and consent of the Secretary of the Treasury, to compromise the criminal case as well as the civil case arising under the internal revenue laws. The compromise may have been made before the institution of the criminal proceedings or after. The provision relating to the necessary consent of the Attorney-General evidently intends a compromise after the institution of a civil or criminal action. If the defendant, in good faith, made the payment of the tax and penalty for the purpose of compromising the impending action, he is entitled to full protection and the benefits derived therefrom. If the money was accepted with the promise of immunity from further punishment in a criminal proceeding, it would be a complete defense to this indictment. Willingham v. United States, 208 Fed. 137, 127 C. C. A. 263. The acceptance, not only of the tax, but of the penalty, coupled with the statement of the internal revenue officer, that payment would end the matter, and that there would be no indictment, if true, would be a good defense. The fact that the money was retained by the United States is some evidence of its acceptance in compromise. We believe that under the facts disclosed in this record, as far as the defendant was permitted to show them, it was required of the court to submit as a question of fact to the jury, under proper instructions, whether or not a compromise was entered into. It was not a question of law for the district judge. As was said in United States v. Chouteau, 102 U. S. 603, 26 L. Ed. 246:

"He has been punished in the amount paid upon the settlement for the offense with which he was charged, and that should end the present action, according to the principle on which a former acquittal or conviction may be invoked to protect against a second punishment for the same offense."

Effect on forfeiture proceeding.—A compromise under this section releases all forfeitures and bars a pending forfeiture proceeding brought under section 3281 of the Revised Statutes (see Vol. IV, p. 41). U. S. v. One Five-Passenger Ford Automobile, (W. D. Wash. 1920) 263 Fed. 241.

Vol. III, p. 1044, sec. 3242. [First ed., vol. III, p. 608.]

Single sale as "carrying on business."—A single sale disconnected from any habitual practice of selling liquor at retail, does not constitute the carrying on of "the business of a retail liquor dealer," within the meaning of this section. Bailey v. U. S., (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1919) 259 Fed. 88, 170 C. C. A. 156. In defining the meaning of this phrase, the court said:

"The statute says: 'Every person who carries on the business of a . . . retail liquor dealer . . . without having paid the special tax as required by law, shall, for every such offense, be fined,' etc.

"Obviously, the 'such offense' which is punished is to 'carry on the business of a retail liquor dealer.' This phrase would not seem to be difficult of definition either from the standpoint of the words used or from that of the purpose of the law. There must not only be a 'business,' but it must be 'carried on.' The purpose of the law was to raise revenue by an occupation tax. Both these considerations imply that there must be something more than a single casual sale, disconnected from any habitual or intended practice: There cannot be a 'business carried on' unless there is either an actual or intended adherence to that course of conduct which alone can constitute the adoption and practice of a business or occupation. Of course, it need not be the sole business or occupation, or even one of any comparative importance as relating to the other business or occupation of the same person; nor would it be necessary that any particular quantity of material should be kept on hand for sale for any particular length of time; but both the ability and the willingness to make sales from time to time, whenever appropriate conditions might arise, seem to us to be required, by the plain meaning of the words, in order to make out an offense against this statute.

"Perhaps it is rightly to be assumed that no other construction would ever have been attributed to this section, save for the supposed effect of another section of the act. Revised Statutes, § 3244, fixes the amount of the tax to be paid. The fourth subdivision says:

"Retail dealers in liquors shall pay $25. Every person who sells or offers for sale foreign or domestic distilled spirits or wines in less quantities than five wine gallons at the same time shall be regarded as a retail dealer in liquors."

"From this it is argued that the more general language of section 3242 is defined and that therefore a single sale, inherently and necessarily and always, makes the seller a taxable retail liquor dealer. The language of section 3244 does not require this conclusion. 'One who sells' is not necessarily synonymous with 'one who makes a sale.' Even where standing by itself, 'one who sells' may well imply an habitual rather than an isolated act. It seems equivalent to 'one who is selling'; but when this definitive phrase is considered in connection with the fact that it is found in the law taxing occupations and in relation to the tax which is imposed only upon carrying on business, and that the phrase serves the main, if not the only, purpose of distinguishing between different kinds of business—wholesale and retail—section 3244 seems to us to lend no substantial support to the thought that it is thereby made immaterial whether or not there is any 'business carried on,' in the ordinary and usual sense of these words.

"It is further to be noted that the language of section 3244 is inappropriate for a single sale. It is 'one who sells . . . in quantities less,' etc. In strictness of language, this plainly refers to a plurality of transactions. One who makes only a single sale does not sell 'in quantities.' This distinction would be overnice as a substantial basis of interpretation; but it demonstrates that section 3244 does not imperatively and finally require that the language of section 3242 should have a forced and unreasonable construction.

"R. S. sec. 3244 seems to have been superseded by section 4 of the Act of March 1, 1879. The arrangement here found emphasizes the conclusion that the phrase 'one who sells' was adopted, not to define what 'carrying on business' means, but rather to distinguish between different kinds of business. It is repeated four times, always as incidental to the definition of a business; and in defining 'dealers in malt liquors' it says that one who sells malt liquors, 'but who does not deal in spirituous liquors,' shall pay a lesser tax, thus again implying that the higher tax is to be paid by those who 'deal in' spirituous liquors. . . Again, we observe that by section 3242, 'every such offense' draws separate punishment. If a single sale is not merely evidence of the offense, but is the offense itself, a single day of carrying on the business might support a great number of indictments, and such a result indicates an unreasonable construction. The preceding sections 3232-3241 also are all instructive to the effect that the thing taxed is not the sale, but the occupation.

"The question has not been authoritatively decided. In Ledbetter v. United States, 170 U. S. 606, 610, 18 Sup. Ct. 774, 775 (42 L. Ed. 1162) speaking of this statute, the court says:

"The offense does not consist in selling or offering for sale to a particular person distilled spirits, etc., in less quantities than five gallons at one time, but in carrying this on as a business; in other words, in the defendant holding himself out to the public as selling or offering for sale, etc. While it has been sometimes held that proof of selling to one person was, at least, prima facie evidence of criminality, the real offense consists in carrying on such business, and if only a single sale were proven it might be a good defense to show that such sale was exceptional, accidental or made under such circumstances as to indicate that it was not the business of the vendor. United States v. Jackson, 1 Hughes 531 [Fed. Cas. No. 15,455]; United States v. Rennecke [D. C.] 28 Fed. 847. It is quite evident that an indictment averring in the language of section 18 that the defendant sold or offered for sale the liquors named, without averring that he made this a business, and that he had not paid the special tax required by law, would be insufficient."

"It must be conceded that the quoted language was not necessary for a decision of the point before the Supreme Court in the Ledbetter Case; but it is evident that at least the writer of the opinion (Mr. Justice Brown) thought the statute should be construed as we have indicated our view to be. This view is also confirmed by the approving citations of United States v. Jackson, 1 Hughes, 531, Fed. Cas. No. 15,455, and United States v. Rennecke (D. C.) 28 Fed. 847."

Evidence held sufficient.—"The proofs tended to show that he [accused] was conducting a milk and dairy business upon his farm a few miles from Memphis, that he had on hand between two and three cases of whisky in half pint flasks, and that he sold two flasks to two persons who wished to buy. There was no reason suggested for making these sales, unless he was carrying the liquor for the purpose of selling to any one who should apply. These applicants were strangers to him, and offered no justification or excuse for their purchases. Defendant's explanation of the stock on hand was that it was no more than he needed for his own use and for his dairy helpers, and he met the testimony as to the two sales by an absolute denial. We think the proof for the government was sufficient to support the verdict which the jury found, under the rules declared in several of our recent decisions. Bailey v. U. S., 259 Fed. 88, 170 C. C. A. 156; Sodini v. U. S. (Dec. 12, 1919), 261 Fed. 913." Rooks v. U. S., (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1920) 263 Fed. 894.

Independence of state and federal revenue systems.—To same effect as original annotation, see Pinasco v. U. S., (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1920) 262 Fed. 400, wherein the court said:

"It is contended that inasmuch as the purpose of the internal revenue law is to raise revenue only, and the adoption of prohibition by the state of Washington makes it impossible for any one in that state to procure a license to distill intoxicating liquors, it is a legal absurdity to say that a man may be punished criminally for failure to secure a license or give a bond therefor, or otherwise to comply with the federal statutes. A similar contention was made and adversely answered in License Tax Cases, 5 Wall. 462, 18 L. Ed. 497, where, upon a certificate from the Circuit Court of Massachusetts certifying that the defendant was indicted for carrying on the business of retailing liquors without a license, and it appeared that the defendant was a retail dealer as charged, and that the business was prohibited by the laws of Massachusetts, the question presented was whether the defendant could be legally convicted upon the indictment for not having complied with the act of Congress by taking out the required license to carry on the business. The court held that the recognition of the power of the state to prohibit the business was consistent with an intention on the part of Congress to tax such business for national purposes, and that it was not necessary to regard the acts of Congress as giving authority to carry on the prohibited business within the state in which it was prohibited. Said the court:

"There is nothing hostile or contradictory, therefore, in the acts of Congress to the legislation of the states. What the latter prohibits, the former, if the business is found existing notwithstanding the prohibition, discourages by taxation. The two lines of legislation proceed in the same direction, and tend to the same result. It would be a judicial anomaly, as singular as indefensible, if we should hold a violation of the laws of the state to be a justification for the violation of the laws of the Union."

Vol. III, p. 1053, sec. 16. [First ed., vol. III, p. 609.]

"Carrying on business"—Single sale.—In Sodini v. U. S., (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1919) 261 Fed. 913, it appeared that the defendant, either alone or in association with another, owned a considerable quantity of intoxicating liquor; that he had the liquor on hand at the place of its alleged sale, with the purpose of selling it to such persons as he might conclude to accept as customers; and that he himself participated in the sale which culminated in his arrest. It was held that under these circumstances it was not necessary to prove more than one sale in order to show a violation of this section.

Instructions.—In a prosecution for a violation of this section an instruction that if the jury finds that one of the defendants made a bona fide sale of his interest in the business in question at a time before the first date named in the indictment, and that during the period covered by the indictment he was only a clerk for the purchaser, he should be acquitted, should be denied since in spite of such facts he may be found guilty through the effect of section 332 of the Penal Laws (7 Fed. Stat. Ann. (2d ed.) 984). Mayer v. U. S., (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1919) 259 Fed. 216, 170 C. C. A. 284.

Evidence—Sufficiency.—In Faraone v. U. S., (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1919) 259 Fed. 507, 170 C. C. A. 483, it was held that the evidence was sufficient to sustain a conviction for a violation of this section.

Banking department in business having several departments.—Where a business is divided into several departments, one of which is a banking department, and the funds and profits of each are separately kept, only the capital used in the banking department is liable to the tax imposed by this section. Real Estate Title Ins., etc., Co. v. Lederer, (C. C. A. 3d Cir. 1920) 263 Fed. 667.

Compare, however, Germantown Trust Co. v. Lederer, (C. C. A. 3d Cir. 1920) 263 Fed. 672, wherein it did not appear that the corporation sought to be taxed had separated its funds sufficiently to exempt its general capital from the bank tax.

The fact that a bank also acts as a fiduciary does not entitle it to the repayment of part of a tax levied on its capital, surplus and undivided profits under the first paragraph of this section, in the absence of proof that any part of its capital, surplus, and undivided profits was not used in banking because it was used in its fiduciary business. Nor is it entitled to the repayment of a part of such tax because it engages in underwriting or promoting new enterprises and deals in stocks and bonds, where no evidence is offered to show the use of any specific portion of its capital, surplus, and undivided profits in such businesses. Fidelity Trust Co. v. Miles, (D. C. Md. 1919) 258 Fed. 770.

Title guaranty companies conducting savings bank business.—Where a company engaged chiefly in the business of examining and insuring real estate titles, also conducts a savings bank business for which it keeps a separate set of books, it should be taxed under this paragraph only on the part of its capital, surplus, and undivided profits used in its banking business. Title Guaranty

Criminal and civil actions—Election of remedies.—In Rinasco v. U. S., (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1920) 262 Fed. 400, the plaintiff in error, who had been convicted of violating various provisions of the internal revenue laws regarding distillers, contended that the trial court erred in failing to require the government to elect whether it would proceed under the indictment or proceed for a forfeiture of the distillery, apparatus, etc., under this section. Answering this contention, the court said: "It is sufficient to say in answer to this that no case was made for election of remedies. There was no ground to require the district attorney, while proceeding to prosecute the plaintiff in error under the indictment, to say that he would dismiss the forfeiture proceeding. If the government could not lawfully pursue both proceedings, that defense was thereafter available in bar of the forfeiture proceeding. Coffey v. United States, 116 U. S. 436, 6 Sup. Ct. 437, 29 L. Ed. 684, is authority for the proposition that an acquittal under an indictment under section 3257 is conclusive in favor of the accused on a subsequent trial of a suit in rem for forfeiture, where the existence of the same act or fact is the matter in issue. But that is far from saying that a conviction on an indictment under section 3257 may be availed of as a defense to a civil action for forfeiture based upon the same acts or transactions. That question, however, although discussed in the briefs in the present case, is not properly here for decision on a review of the ruling of the court below upon the motion to elect."

Constitutionality.—This act is constitutional. U. S. v. Loewenthal, (N. D. Ohio 1919) 257 Fed. 444.

A state statute restricting the manufacture, sale, and dispensing of certain habit forming narcotic drugs was held not in conflict with the Harrison Act. State v. Martinson, (1919) 144 Minn. 206, 174 N. W. 823, wherein the court said: "Conceding, without considering or deciding the point, which we think of doubtful merit, that the right of legislation upon the subject in hand is paramount in the federal Congress, and that the state statute is void in so far as it conflicts with the act of Congress, we are unable after careful examination and comparison of the two statutes to discover any conflict in the respect here claimed. It would serve no useful purpose to attempt to analyze the respective enactments, and we are content with announcing the conclusion stated without further comment."

Evidence to rebut claim that drug was furnished for medical purposes.—"During the progress of the trial the government tendered as witnesses three physicians of New Orleans to testify as experts as to the proper method recognized by the medical profession for the treatment of narcotic addicts. The defendant objected to such expert testimony, on the tender of each of said witnesses, on the ground that expert testimony was inadmissible, and that the facts only as to what the defendant did in the practice of his profession, in the treatment of addicts, under the indictment, was admissible. This is the only objection shown in the record to any testimony given by either of the three witnesses. The defendant was a physician, and indicted under the Harrison Act for illegally dispensing the drugs; his claim being that said drugs were dispensed in the course of his practice as such physician. The objections were overruled by the trial court and exception noted. This general objection was properly overruled by the trial court. The plaintiff in error was on trial, charged with having illegally dispensed the drugs therein mentioned. It was material and proper for the jury to be informed of the method recognized by the medical profession for the treatment of drug addicts, and this method could only have been detailed by men skilled in medicine; otherwise, any physician could dispense the forbidden drugs in any quantity to persons not his patients, and thus defeat the purposes of the act. It seems to us that the instant case is governed by the decision in the case of Melanson v. United States, 256 Fed. 787, 168 C. C. A. 129. The issue being whether the drug was dispensed in the legitimate course of defendant's practice as a physician, the evidence was admissible on that issue. We can therefore see no merit in the objection urged to this ruling of the court." Reeves

v. U. S., (C. C. A. 5th Cir. 1920) 263 Fed. 690.

Vol. IV, p. 178, sec. 2. [First ed., 1916 Supp., p. 102.]

For prosecutions for conspiracy to violate this section, see annotations under PENAL LAWS, sec. 37, post.

Constitutionality.—This section is constitutional. Workin v. U. S., (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1919) 260 Fed. 137, 171 C. C. A. 173; Saunders v. U. S., (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1919) 260 Fed. 386, 171 C. C. A. 252; Friedman v. U. S., (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1919) 260 Fed. 388, 171 C. C. A. 254; Oakshette v. U. S., (C. C. A. 5th Cir. 1919) 260 Fed. 830, 171 C. C. A. 556.

Physician's prescription.—To same effect as 1919 Supplement annotation, see Doremus v. U. S., (C. C. A. 5th Cir. 1920) 262 Fed. 849, holding that a physician who issues such a prescription, knowing it is to be filled by a druggist who knows of its illegality, aids and abets the druggist in violating this section.

In Trader v. U. S., (C. C. A. 3d Cir. 1919) 260 Fed. 923, a physician was convicted of a violation of this section in that he dispensed morphine sulphate to various individuals without the written orders required by this section. Error was assigned because of the refusal of the trial judge to charge that the Harrison Act "does not limit the amount of morphine sulphate which a physician may prescribe or administer to his patients." In affirming the conviction, the court said:

"The learned trial judge charged the jury that, while the act 'does not in specific terms' create such a limitation, 'it does provide that such drug must be prescribed in the course of his professional practice only.' It is true that the act does not in specific terms state how much morphine sulphate may be prescribed or administered by a physician to his patients. It does, however, exempt physicians, in the dispensing and distributing of the drugs covered by the act, from the requirements of section 2 only in such cases as are 'in the course of his professional practice only.'"

"The regulations promulgated by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, pursuant to the authority conferred by section 1 of the act, provide for separate and distinct registration by dealers and physicians. Hence, if the defendant dispensed the drug in question not in the legitimate practice of his profession, he became a dealer in the drug and was required to register as such. Therefore whether he was a dealer depended upon whether or not he was dispensing the drug in the course of his legitimate practice as a physician. Likewise the legality of his acts in obtaining the drug by means of the statutory order forms was dependent upon whether he acquired it for use 'in the legitimate practice of his profession.' Mani- festly, therefore, so far as the issues in this case are concerned, there is in the act just such a limitation as the learned trial judge stated. Accordingly the qualification which he made in the request or point for instruction to the jury was not only entirely proper, but, as it seems to us, was quite necessary in order that the jury might not be misled and confused."

Physician obtaining opium for personal use.—An indictment charging the defendant, a physician, with using order forms to obtain opium for his own personal use, is defective. U. S. v. Parsons, (D. C. Mont. 1919) 261 Fed. 223, wherein, sustaining a demurrer to the indictment, the court said:

"Plaintiff's contention is that the act creates and denounces as a crime purchase of opium with the prescribed order forms for personal use; that this is found in section 2, which provides:

"It shall be unlawful for any person to obtain by means of said order forms any of the aforesaid drugs for any purpose other than the use, sale, or distribution thereof by him in the conduct of a lawful business in said drugs or in the legitimate practice of his profession."

"The objections to this are: (1) The alleged offense is not clearly and definitely expressed in section 2, and intent and construction should not be resorted to to characterize acts and persons as within a new statute and criminal, without reasonable notice from the language of the statute. See U. S. v. Carney (D. C.) 228 Fed. 165, and cases cited. (2) Congress having no power to directly prohibit the purchase of opium for personal use, it cannot indirectly do so by incorporation of such prohibition in a revenue measure, the prohibition having no reasonable relation to the revenue. (3) If the section is so intended, it is to that extent unconstitutional and void. (4) Capable of another reasonable construction, viz. to prohibit business or practice in disregard of the details of procedure prescribed by the act to protect the revenue, which is constitutional, this will be adopted, rather than the one contended for which is unconstitutional. Business and practice conforming to the prescribed formalities are lawful and legitimate; otherwise unlawful and illegitimate. Section 2 must be construed to be in aid of the only object of the act that is constitutional, viz. to create and safeguard revenue. How the purchase herein alleged could in any wise affect the revenue is inconceivable.

"Nothing in section 2 forbids purchases for any lawful use. Among such may be purchase to destroy, or to absorb the supply, or to prevent purchase by others, or to obstruct illegal traffic, all of which are lawful purposes, and none of which are within section 2, even as purchase for personal use is not."

tion of this section need not allege that the defendant was in the business of selling narcotics. Hosier v. U. S., (C. C. A. 4th Cir. 1919) 260 Fed. 155, 171 C. C. A. 191, wherein it was said:

"The defendant argues that all the indictments were defective, in that none of them alleged that he was in the business of selling narcotics. He cites a number of cases in which, in prosecutions under section 3242 of the Revised Statutes and similar enactments, it has been held that it was necessary to allege and to prove that the accused was carrying on the business of a liquor seller. It was not sufficient to say and to show that he had made a single sale. These authorities are not in point. In them, what the statute forbade was the carrying on of the business of a wholesale or retail liquor dealer, etc., without paying the tax imposed thereon. The act here in question declares it to be unlawful for any person to sell narcotics to any one except upon the written order of the latter, given on a blank form issued by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

"In the instant case, each indictment charges an offense in the language of the statute, and by setting forth the kind of narcotics sold, and to whom the sale was made, the accused was given sufficient information to enable him to prepare his defense. There is nothing in U. S. v. Jin Fuey Moy, 241 U. S. 394, 36 Sup. Ct. 658, 60 L. Ed. 1061 Ann. Cas. 1917D 854, which intimates that one who is not a regular dealer in narcotics, may lawfully make a sale of them otherwise than is permitted by section 2 of the act. It is true that it was held that the words 'any person,' in section 8, prohibiting the possession of the drug, must be restricted to the class of persons named in section 1, because, unless that was done, a grave constitutional question would be raised, and the familiar principle was reiterated that a statute must be construed, if fairly possible, so as to avoid, not only the conclusion that it is unconstitutional but also grave doubts upon that score. It is not open to dispute that Congress may levy a tax upon one who sells anything, the selling of which it chooses to tax. It may, in its discretion, provide that this tax shall be required only of such persons as make a business of dealing in the commodity in question, but it is equally open to it, if it will, to say that every one who sells at all shall pay, or that any one who makes even an occasional sale shall comply with reasonable regulations intended to prevent evasions of the law."

Admissibility of evidence—Other offenses.—In a prosecution under this section evidence showing other offenses not contained in the indictment, is admissible to show the criminal intent of the defendants and to prove a continuing conspiracy. Workin v. U. S., (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1919) 260 Fed. 137, 171 C. C. A. 173.

In a prosecution for a violation of this section evidence of other sales than those specified in the indictment is admissible. Hosier v. U. S., (C. C. A. 4th Cir. 1919) 260 Fed. 155, 171 C. C. A. 191. The court, in passing upon such evidence, said:

"The indictments were good. The defendant says that, if they were, it is because each forbidden sale is a separate offense, and that reversible error was committed in admitting, over his objection, evidence of other sales than those specified in the indictments. The evidence complained of was in every instance given by the purchasers named in the indictments. Each of such purchasers said that in addition to the sale, at or about the time mentioned in the indictments, the defendant had, on other occasions, made similar sales to the witness. As the government in its proof was not restricted to the precise dates set forth in the indictments, the defendant could not object to the receipt of such evidence. The most that he would be entitled to do was to ask that the government should elect upon which dates it would stand. That he did not do."

In a prosecution for selling morphine in violation of this section evidence that morphine was found in the defendant's possession in a district other than that in which the offense in the indictment is alleged to have been committed, is inadmissible where there is no proof of a sale of morphine by the defendants in such district nor any evidence connecting their possession of morphine in that district with the offense charged in the indictment. Paris v. U. S., (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1919) 260 Fed. 529, 171 C. C. A. 313.

Proof of acts of an agent of accused is admissible after the agency is shown, though the indictment does not charge a conspiracy between the accused and the agent. Pennacchio v. U. S., (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1920) 263 Fed. 66.

Nonexpert opinion.—A habitual user of opium, though he is not a chemist and has no knowledge or training rendering him capable of making a chemical analysis, may testify that a substance exhibited to him is opium. Pennacchio v. U. S., (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1920) 263 Fed. 66.

Instructions.—In a prosecution for a violation of this section it is not error for the trial judge in his instructions to the jury to state the purpose that Congress had in passing the act. Trader v. U. S., (C. C. A. 3d Cir. 1919) 260 Fed. 923, wherein it was said:

"It is assuredly within the discretion of a trial judge, in charging a jury, to state the purpose, as he conceives it, that Congress had in passing any given act. If an erroneous statement of such a purpose may be considered reversible error in any case, we are entirely clear that, although the Harrison Act was passed pursuant to the taxing power of Congress and is clothed in the garb of a revenue act, the learned trial judge did not misconceive or misstate the broad underlying purpose which Congress had in passing it (United States v. Jin Fuey Moy, 241 U. S. 394-402, 36 Sup. Ct. 658, 80 L. Ed. 1061, Ann. Cas. 1917D, 854), and therefore that no harm was done the defendant by the statement in question."

In Oakshette v. U. S., (C. C. A. 5th Cir. 1919) 260 Fed. 830, 171 C. C. A. 556, the defendant in a prosecution under this section complained that the trial court's charge was erroneous in that it was not responsive to the only issue presented by the indictments. Answering this contention the court said:

"The indictments charged the sales to have been made by the plaintiff in error, not in pursuance of written orders, given by the purchasers, on forms prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. The proof showed that plaintiff in error was a physician and had registered with the collector of internal revenue. He was authorized to administer the prohibited drugs, without obtaining a written order, if they were administered 'in the course of his professional practice,' but not otherwise. The government contended that the drugs administered by him were not administered in good faith, in the course of his professional practice, but to gratify the desire or appetite of the patients or purchasers. The plaintiff in error contended that they constituted legitimately medical treatment for his patients. The district judge submitted the issue so made to the jury.

"The contention of the plaintiff in error is that it was not within the issues presented by the indictments, since they merely charged sales illegal because not in pursuance of written orders. The only prohibitions of the statute are (1) sales by unregistered persons and (2) sales by registered persons not in pursuance of written orders. The plaintiff in error could only be charged with having made the one kind or the other. As he had registered, he was not guilty of the first. If, having registered, he made sales or dispensed the drug without obtaining a written order he was guilty of the second kind, unless because he came within one of the excepted classes. If he administered the drug only in the course of his professional practice, he came within one of the excepted classes, and was not guilty. If, however, he administered the drug, not in the course of his professional practice, then he did not bring himself within any of the excepted classes, and so came within the operation of the prohibition of section 2, against selling or dispensing, not in pursuance of a written order, and was properly charged with that offense. As a registered person he could have been charged with no other offense, since the act creates no other out of the act of selling or dispensing by registered persons. It does not make it a separate offense for a physician to administer the drug when it is not done in the course of his professional practice. His doing so merely removes him from the classes exempted from the operation of section 2 and leaves him subject to the punishment prescribed by section 2.

"Dispensing the drug, though by a physician, if not in the course of his professional practice, is in legal effect a sale, and, being one, can only be legally made in pursuance of an order form, and the offense of doing it without one is necessarily that of selling or dispensing not in pursuance of a written order, in violation of section 2 of the act. The indictments properly so charged the offenses, and proof tending to show that the drugs were not dispensed in the course of defendant's professional practice tended to sustain the charges, and the court properly held that the issue so made was presented by the indictment and properly submitted it to the jury. In the case of Melanson v. United States, 256 Fed. 783, 785; this court said of the indictment:

"The second count charged a joint sale by the physician and druggist without the use of the order form, required by the law to be used and filed in making sales, other than to patients in the regular practice of a physician on prescription, or by personal administration."

"A conviction under the second count of the indictment in that case was sustained upon proof like that in this case, tending to show that the defendant physician administered the prohibited drugs, under the guise of treatment, but in fact to gratify the appetite of his supposed patients."

Indictment—Averments negating exceptions.—To same effect as 1919 Supplement annotation, see Oakshette v. U. S., (C. C. A. 5th Cir. 1919) 260 Fed. 830, 171 C. C. A. 556; U. S. v. Loewenthal, (N. D. Ohio 1919) 257 Fed. 444.

Vol. IV, p. 196, sec. 17. [First ed., vol. III, p. 126.]

Sale of forfeited business as including trademark.—A sale by a collector of internal revenue under the provisions of this section of the business of a company manufacturing oleomargarine, does not include a trademark used on its products. Ammon v. Narragansett Dairy Co., (C. C. A. 1st Cir. 1919) 262 Fed. 880, wherein the court said:

"The statute under which the collector of internal revenue proceeded against the defendant contains no mention of trademarks, good will, going concern value, or any other sort of intangible property. It provides that the delinquent taxpayer 'shall forfeit the factory and manufacturing apparatus used by him, and all oleomargarine and all raw material for the production of oleomargarine found in the factory and on the factory premises, and shall be fined,' etc. As this is a penal statute, it cannot be extended by construction. No attempt was made by the collector to sell any trademark, good will, or other intangible assets. The schedule of property sold by the collector to Matthews and transferred by Matthews to the new corporation contains no mention of trademark, good will, or other intangible property. The old corporation has not been dissolved. It is, so far as this record shows, still legally alive. The sale of its tangible property simply killed its business; and it abandoned thereafter all attempts to preserve its good will, including any right in its trademarks previously used."

Indictment.—An indictment which in various counts charges that the defendants while engaged individually and "as officers, agents and employees" of a corporation in the manufacture of oleomargarine, committed certain acts in violation of this section, sufficiently charges that the defendants were engaged in manufacturing oleomargarine within the meaning of this section. Kelly v. U. S., (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1919) 258 Fed. 392, 169 C. C. A. 408.

Effect of acquittal of conspiracy.—Where persons are indicted for a violation of this section and also for a conspiracy to commit an offense against the United States in violation of sec. 37 of the Penal Laws (7 Fed. Stat. Ann. (2d ed.) 534), the fact that they are acquitted of the charge of conspiracy does not prevent them from being convicted under this section. Kelly v. U. S., (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1919) 258 Fed. 392, 169 C. C. A. 408, wherein it was said:

"Counsel strenuously insist that, unless the present defendants acted in concert so as to constitute the offense of conspiracy charged in the first indictment, it was 'not possible' for them to commit any of the frauds alleged in the second indictment. The most obvious answer to this is to be found in the verdicts themselves, if upon the evidence they are sustainable; if they show anything, it is that what is claimed to have been 'not possible' actually happened. The same insistence was made for defendants on their motion for new trial. This was met in several ways by the learned trial judge. One was that, if the point was well taken, it would follow 'that a conviction on a fraud count laid against two or more persons under section 17 of the Oleomargarine Act cannot be sustained unless it be accompanied by averments of a conspiracy'—calling attention to decisions of this court (Hart v. United States, 183 Fed. 368, 105 C. C. A. 588, and Hardesty v. United States, 168 Fed. 25, 27, 93 C. C. A. 417, and also Enders v. United States, 187 Fed. 754, 109 C. C. A. 502 [C. C. A. 7]), where a plurality of persons had in each case been jointly indicted and convicted of frauds committed in violation of section 17 of the Oleomargarine Act. and the judgments were affirmed, although, as the district judge said, in none of the cases 'did the fraud counts hint at a conspiracy.'"

"Counsel say in their brief that the use so made of these decisions shows that the principle upon which they rested their contention of inconsistency was misunderstood, and that they did not intend to assert that a fraud count could not be laid against two or more persons under section 17 of the Oleomargarine Act without 'being accompanied by averment of conspiracy.' Thus the contention of inconsistency is reducible to a question of fact, whether in this particular instance the absence of a conspiracy rendered it impossible for defendants to commit the frauds charged in the second indictment. In its last analysis this question at once challenges the wisdom of the statutes and the power to enact them, since they punish a conspiracy to do an act independently of penalizing the act itself. The power to enact such legislation cannot be questioned (Clune v. United States, 159 U. S. 590, 595, 16 Sup. Ct. 125, 40 L. Ed. 269), and if the assertion of an impossibility of two or more persons to do a particular thing without first agreeing to do it could prevail, the law might readily be frustrated.

"The true test of this question is to be found in the instant case, not only in the verdicts, but also in the very rule counsel rely on; for it must be remembered that the gist of the offense charged in the first indictment was the formation of a conspiracy in violation of section 37 of the Criminal Code (35 Stat. 1095), while the substantive frauds charged in the second indictment were direct violations of the Oleomargarine Act. 24 Stat. 209, and as amended in 32 Stat. 194, c. 784, § 8. It therefore needs only to be stated, in view of the decisions before cited, as well as the rule of Mr. Bishop that the evidence offered to prove the fraud counts of the second indictment was not of a character, certainly was not sufficient, to prove the conspiracy alleged in the first indictment. These distinct offenses cannot be confused by the relation of evidence offered to show execution of the conspiracy alleged (not the conspiracy itself) to the evidence offered to show actual commission of the frauds charged in the other indictment. The contention of fatal inconsistency must therefore fail."

"Vested."—The interest of legatees in legacies paid over to them or to a trustee for them by the executor prior to July 1, 1902, although not demandable by them as of right until after that date, because the time for proving claims against the estate had not expired, had become absolutely vested in possession of such legatees prior to such date, within the meaning of the Act of June 27, 1902, providing for the refunding of taxes collected on contingent beneficial interests not vested prior to July 1, 1902, notwithstanding the remote possibility that the amounts so paid might have to be returned to the executor for payment of debts. Henry v. U. S., 251 U. S. 393, 40 S. Ct. 185, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) — (affirming (1918) 53 Ct. Cl. 641) wherein the court said:

"There is no doubt that if the claimant had retained the funds in his hands, as he had a legal right to do, the interest of the legatees would not have been vested in possession within the meaning of the statute, whatever the probabilities and however solvent the estate. United States v. Jones, 236 U. S. 106, 35 Sup. Ct. 261, 59 L. Ed. 488, Ann. Cas. 1916A, 316; McCoach v. Pratt, 236 U. S. 562, 35 Sup. Ct. 421, 59 L. Ed. 720. He contends that the same is true if he saw fit to pay over legacies before the time came when they could be demanded as of right. We will assume that, if the estate had proved insufficient, the executor not only would have been responsible but could have recovered such portion of his payments as was needed to pay debts. Still the consequence asserted does not follow. There can be no question that the interest of the sisters was held in possession, and so was that of the trustee, although he happened to be the same person as the executor. The interest was vested also in each case. The law uses familiar legal expressions in their familiar legal sense, and the distinction between a contingent interest and a vested interest subject to be divested is familiar to the law. Gray, Rule Against Perpetuities, § 108. The remote possibility that the funds in the hands of the legatees might have to be returned no more prevented their being vested in possession and taxable than the possibility that a life estate might end at any moment prevented one that began before July 1, 1902, being taxed at its full value as fixed by the mortuary tables. United States v. Fidelity Trust Co., 222 U. S. 158, 160, 32 Sup. Ct. 59, 56 L. Ed. 137. In that case it was contended that the life estate was contingent so far as not actually enjoyed."

The interest in a fund transferred from an estate to a trustee for ascertained persons was vested in possession although they had received no income from it prior to July 1, 1902, within the provision of the Act of June 27, 1902, for the refunding of taxes collected on a contingent beneficial interest not vested prior to such date. Henry v. U. S., (1920) 251 U. S. 393, 40 S. Ct. 185, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (1918) 53 Ct. Cl. 641.

Trust fund legacies which it was the legal duty of the executors to pay over to the trustees before July 1, 1902, and for compelling payment of which a statutory remedy was given to the legatees before that date, were vested in possession and enjoyment within the meaning of the provision of the Act of June 27, 1902, for the refund of succession taxes collected on contingent beneficial interests not vested prior to July 1, 1902. Simpson v. U. S., (1920) 252 U. S. 547, 40 S. Ct. 367, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (1918) 53 Ct. Cl. 640.

Vol. IV, p. 236, sec. 1.

Purpose and effect of Act.—This Act is a remedial statute for the relief of a certain class of persons, and is in no way affected by the internal revenue law or the statute of limitations contained in R. S. sec. 3227 (see vol. III, p. 1037). It is in no sense an extension of the remedy under the internal revenue law to recover for taxes illegally collected. Union Trust Co. v. U. S., (1919) 54 Ct. Cl. 43.

Manner of prosecution of claims.—All claims under this Act should be prosecuted by suit against the United States rather than against the collector under the general revenue statutes. Hunnewell v. Gill, (D. C. Mass. 1918) 257 Fed. 857. In passing upon this question, the court said:

"Passing over several points of rather technical character urged by the defendants, which seem to me not well taken, the question on which the case turns, as I view it, is whether the act of 1912 opens the way for a suit like the present one against the collector under the general revenue statutes. R. S. §§ 3220, 3226, 3227, 3228. United States v. Hvoslef, 237 U. S. 1, 35 Sup. Ct. 459, 59 L. Ed. 813, Ann. Cas. 1916A, 286, expressly decided that the act of 1912 gave a new right of action against the United States, independent of the provisions of the Revised Statutes. In view of that decision, the only contention open to the plaintiffs is that the act has a double aspect, and also authorizes suit against the collector. The question is of practical importance, because, if the plaintiffs can maintain the present action, they would be entitled to interest, which as stated amounts to $83,000. Old Colony R. R. Co. v. Gill, Collector, 257 Fed. 220 (D. Ct. Mass., June 28, 1916); Boston & Providence R. R. Co. v. Gill, Collector, 257 Fed. 221 (D. Ct. Mass. September 13, 1916). If they can only sue the United States, as the act of 1912 does not provide for the payment of interest, it cannot be recovered.

"In the Hvoslef Case, the Supreme Court, after referring to various refunding statutes which created rights of action against the United States, said:

"The same rule must obtain as to all claims described in the act of 1912, and in this view we are not concerned in the present case with questions arising under the general provisions of the internal revenue laws.' Hughes, J., 237 U. S. 11, 35 Sup. Ct. 462, 59 L. Ed. 813, Ann. Cas. 1916A, 286.

"An examination of the briefs in that case shows that the solicitor general made substantially the same contention as the present plaintiffs. It was with reference to that argument that the language quoted was used by the court. I understand it to mean that all claims under the act of 1912 are to be prosecuted in the same manner; i. e. by suit against the United States. So construed, the decision just referred to is decisive on the question before me. If I am in error in this, and the question is an open one, I should still reach the same conclusion. I do not think that the act contemplates two sorts of claims, one of which may be recovered with interest through suits against the collector based on the first section and the general revenue statutes (Rev. Stats. §§ 3220, 3226, 3227, 3228), while the other is to be recovered without interest through suits against the United States, based on the second section."

Construction.—Where any language of this Act is regarded as of doubtful import, it should be construed most strongly against the government and in favor of the taxpayer. U. S. v. Coulby, (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1919) 258 Fed. 27, 169 C. C. A. 165, affirming (N. D. Ohio 1918) 251 Fed. 982 in 1919 Supplement.

A stock dividend is not taxable under the various provisions of the Internal Revenue Tax Law, as it is capital and not income. The sixteenth amendment to the United States Constitution (see vol. XI, p. 1110) does not apply to it, and to be taxable under the Constitution the tax must be apportioned among the several states as required by art. I of the Constitution, secs. 1 and 9 (see vol. X, pp. 335, 887). Eisner v. Macomber, (1920) 252 U. S. 189, 40 S. Ct. 189, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, following Towne v. Eisner, (1918) 245 U. S. 418, 38 S. Ct. 158, 62 U. S. (L. ed.) 372. Losses "incurred in trade."—A loss incurred by the acceptance of stock, which later became worthless, in payment for goods sold, is a loss "incurred in trade" within the meaning of this paragraph and should be allowed as a deduction in computing net income for the purpose of the normal tax.

Bryce v. Keith, (E. D. N. Y. 1919) 257 Fed. 133.

State transfer tax.—In determining the amount of net income under the provisions of this paragraph, no deduction should be allowed for transfer taxes paid to a state upon an inheritance vesting within the year. Prentiss v. Eisner, (S. D. N. Y. 1919) 260 Fed. 589, wherein it was said:

"At the outset we have the important fact that property inherited or transmitted by will is not treated as income in the Income Tax Act, but, on the contrary, is not only not included, but specifically exempted. In other words, in the hands of the legatee, devisee, heir, or distributee such property is capital and not income. Under these circumstances it would seem inconsistent if charges against this capital, which accrued prior to, or simultaneously with, the devolution of it, could be deducted from income tax returns. Notwithstanding this, the language of the act would apparently make the transfer taxes a necessary deduction, if they are charges against the person receiving the property, or against either the property or the right accruing to him.

"The cases are extremely confused and their reasoning is unsatisfactory. It is admitted by them all that the tax is not upon the property itself which is transmitted. To avoid the unconstitutionality of a direct tax upon the property itself which was not apportioned among the states, the Court of Appeals of New York said as to the federal tax of 1898, in Matter of Gihon, 169 N. Y. 443, 62 N. E. 561:

"... The full amount of the legacy is in law paid to the legatee, and the deduction made from it and paid to the state or federal government is paid on account of the legatee from the legacy which he receives."

"It is argued that the personal liability of the executor or administrator under the New York law for the payment of the tax makes the view taken by the foregoing case erroneous; but, as Judge Cullen there said, the obligation of the executor or administrator to pay the tax is a mere rule of administration to insure its payment, and the imposition of such an obligation affords no proof that the tax is either on the right to transmit or upon the property itself. I do not think it follows, because the right to transmit or the right to receive the property of a decedent is a privilege granted by the state, and not a common right, that the tax is imposed upon either right. Judge Gray's statement in Matter of Swift, 137 N. Y. 77, 32 N. E. 1096, 18 L. R. A. 709, is an accurate description of what occurs:

"What has the state done, in effect, by the enactment of this tax law? It reaches out and appropriates for its use a portion of the property at the moment of its owner's decease, allowing only the balance to pass in the way directed by the testator, or permitted by its intestate law."

"To say that the legatee, devisee, heir, or distributee receives the property without any deduction and then pays the tax is really a most artificial way of viewing the transaction. In the case of personal property he really only gets the balance, with a credit as a matter of convenient bookkeeping to the amount of the tax. In the case of real estate he receives properly speaking an equity. He can pay the tax and get the land freed from the incumbrance, or the state can foreclose the lien and he will receive the balance. In either case the only natural way to treat him is as a recipient of a net amount. The condition of the devolution of the property is the receipt of the transfer tax by the state.

"In United States v. Perkins, 163 U. S. 625, 16 Sup. Ct. 1073, 41 L. Ed. 237, the testator bequeathed his property to the United States. The Supreme Court held that the New York transfer tax was upon the testator's right to dispose of his property, and thus sustained the tax, for, if it had been treated as upon any right of succession of the United States, the tax could not have been lawfully imposed. This case has been cited with approval in New York decisions, both under the old and new transfer tax acts.

"I have carefully examined the interesting briefs submitted by counsel, and am convinced that the tax cannot properly be regarded as an imposition upon either the property or the right to receive a gross amount of the property of a decedent represented by a legacy, devise, or distributive share, but that the property and the right to receive it passed, reduced by the amount of the tax measured by a percentage of the value of the gross share. It is impossible to reconcile the conflicting expressions in judicial opinions; but this treatment of the situation will, I think, accord with the results reached by the various cases. I can see no substantial difference between the New York Transfer Tax Act (Consol. Laws, c. 60, §§ 220-245) in operation in 1913, and the earlier act, and I do not regard any of the acts as imposing a tax upon the plaintiff's right of succession which is deductible in her income tax return."

"Arising or accruing."—With respect to domestic corporations no change was intended by the use of the expression income "arising or accruing" instead of income "received," as used in the Corporation Excise

Tax Act of August 5, 1909 (see vol. 4, p. 255) and the tax should be levied under both acts upon the income "received" during the year. Maryland Casualty Co. v. U. S., (1920) 251 U. S. 342, 40 S. Ct. 155, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, modifying and affirming (1917) 52 Ct. Cl. 201, 288; (1917) 53 Ct. Cl. 81.

Insurance premiums collected by local agents and not turned over as gross income.—Insurance premiums collected by the local agents of an insurance company, but which, conformably to the agency contracts, were not transmitted to the company's treasurer within the calendar year, were nevertheless a part of the gross income of the company received by it during such year. Maryland Casualty Co. v. U. S., (1920) 251 U. S. 342, 40 S. Ct. 155, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, modifying and affirming (1917) 52 Ct. Cl. 201, 288; (1917) 53 Ct. Cl. 81.

Deductions from gross income—"Loss claims reserve" of insurance company.—An insurance company's "loss claims reserve," intended to provide for liquidation of claims for unsettled losses (other than those provided for by the reserve for liability losses) which had accrued at the end of the tax year for which the return was made and the reserve computed, is one required by law to be maintained, within the meaning of the provision that "the net addition, if any, required by law to be made within the year to reserve funds," may be deducted from gross, in determining the amount of net income to be taxed, where a state insurance department, pursuant to statute, has, at all times since and including 1909, required the company to keep on hand, as a condition of doing business in that state "assets as reserves sufficient to cover outstanding losses." Maryland Casualty Co. v. U. S., (1920) 251 U. S. 342, 40 S. Ct. 155, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, modifying and affirming (1917) 52 Ct. Cl. 201, 288; (1917) 53 Ct. Cl. 81.

Reserves of insurance company.—An insurance company's reserves required by rules or regulations of state insurance departments, promulgated in the exercise of an appropriate power conferred by statute, are "required by law," within the meaning of the provision that "the net addition, if any, required by law to be made within the year to reserve funds," may be deducted from gross, in determining the amount of net income to be taxed. Maryland Casualty Co. v. U. S., (1920) 251 U. S. 342, 40 S. Ct. 155, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, modifying and affirming (1917) 52 Ct. Cl. 201, 288; (1917) 53 Ct. Cl. 81.

A decrease in the amount of reserves required by law of an insurance company for the year 1913 from the amount required in 1912, unless clearly shown to be due to excessive reserves in prior years, or to some other cause by which the free assets of the company were increased during the year 1913, cannot be treated by the government as "released reserve" and charged to the company as income for 1913. Maryland Casualty Co. v. U. S., (1920) 251 U. S. 342, 40 S. Ct. 155, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, modifying and affirming (1917) 52 Ct. Cl. 201, 288; (1917) 53 Ct. Cl. 81.

Insurance company's unpaid taxes, salaries, brokerage and reinsurance.—Unpaid taxes, salaries, brokerage, and reinsurance due other companies at the end of each tax year may not be deducted from the gross income of an insurance company, under the provision that "the net addition, if any, required by law to be made within the year to reserve funds," may be deducted from gross, in determining the amount of net income to be taxed, although various state insurance departments require that "assets as reserves" be maintained to cover "all claims," "all indebtedness," "all outstanding liabilities," where these departments in these expressions plainly used the word "reserves" in a nontechnical sense as equivalent to "assets." Maryland Casualty Co. v. U. S., (1920) 251 U. S. 342, 40 S. Ct. 155, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, modifying and affirming (1917) 52 Ct. Cl. 201, 288; (1917) 53 Ct. Cl. 81.

Cash dividends to policyholders in mutual life insurance company.—The amounts paid by a mutual legal reserve level-premium life insurance company in cash dividends to its policyholders during any taxable year, representing excess in premiums over actual cost of insurance, if not applied by such policyholders during that period of reduction of renewal premiums, may not be excluded from gross income under the provisions of this paragraph, that life insurance companies "shall not include as income in any year such portion of any actual premium received from any individual policyholder as shall have been paid back or credited to such individual policyholder, or treated as an abatement of premium of such individual policyholder within such year." Penn Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Lederer, (1920) 252 U. S. 523, 40 S. Ct. 397, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) — (affirming (C. C. A. 3d Cir. 1919) 258 Fed. 81, 169 C. C. A. 167), wherein the court said: "The reason for the particular provision made by Congress seems to be clear: Dividends may be made, and by many of the companies have been made largely, by way of abating or reducing the amount of the renewal premium. Where the dividend is so made the actual premium receipt of the year is obviously only the reduced amount. But, as a matter of book-keeping, the premium is entered at the full rate, and the abatement (that is, the amount by which it was reduced) is entered as a credit. The financial result both to the company and to the policyholders is, however, exactly the same whether the renewal premium is reduced by a dividend, or whether the renewal premium remains unchanged, but is paid in part either by a credit or by cash received as a dividend. And the entries in bookkeeping would be substantially the same. Because the several ways of paying a dividend are, as between the company and the policyholder, financial equivalents, Congress, doubtless, concluded to make the incidents the same also, as respects income taxation. Where the dividend was used to abate or reduce the full or gross premium, the direction to eliminate from the apparent premium receipts is aptly expressed by the phrase 'shall not include,' used in clause (c) above. Where the premium was left unchanged, but was paid in part by a credit or cash derived from the dividend, the instruction would be more properly expressed by a direction to deduct those credits. Congress doubtless used the words 'shall not include' as applied also to these credits because it eliminated them from the aggregate of taxable premiums as being the equivalent of abatement of premiums.

"That such was the intention of Congress is confirmed by the history of the non-inclusion clause, (c) above. The provision in the Revenue Act of 1913, for taxing the income of insurance companies, is in large part identical with the provision for the special excise tax upon them imposed by the Act of August 5, 1909, chap. 6. § 38, 36 Stat. at L. 112. By the latter act the net income of insurance companies was, also, to be ascertained by deducting from gross income 'sums other than dividends, paid within the year on policy and renewal contracts;' but there was in that act no non-inclusion clause whatsoever. The question arose whether the provision in the Act of 1913, identical with (c) above, prevented using in the computation the reduced renewal premiums instead of the full premiums, where the reduction in the premium had been effected by means of dividends. In Mutual Ben. L. Ins. Co. v. Herold, 198 Fed. 199, decided July 29, 1912, it was held that the renewal premium, as reduced by such dividends, should be used in computing the gross premium; and it was said (p. 212) that dividends so applied in reduction of renewal premiums 'should not be confused with dividends declared in the case of a full-paid participating policy, wherein the policyholder has no further premium payments to make. Such payments having been duly met, the policy has become at once a contract of insurance and of investment. The holder participates in the profits and income of the invested funds of the company.' On writ of error sued out by the government the judgment entered in the District Court was affirmed by the Circuit Court of Appeals on January 27, 1913, 120 C. C. A. 256, 201 Fed. 918; but that court stated that it refrained from expressing any opinion concerning dividends on full-paid policies, saying that it did so 'not because we wish to suggest disapproval, but merely because no opinion about these matters is called for now, as they do not seem to be directly involved.' The noninclusion clause in the Revenue Act of 1913, (c) above, was doubtless framed to define what amounts involved in dividends should be 'nonincluded,' or deducted, and thus to prevent any controversy arising over the questions which had been raised under the Act of 1909. The petition for writ of certiorari applied for by the government was not denied by this court until December 15, 1913 (231 U. S. 755, 58 L. ed. 468, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 323); that is, after the passage of the act."

The deduction from the gross income of a mutual legal reserve level-premium life insurance company of cash dividends to policyholders, representing excess in premiums over actual cost of insurance, is expressly forbidden by the clause of this paragraph defining allowable deductions from gross income of insurance companies as "the net addition, if any, required by law to be made within the year to reserve funds and the sums other than dividends paid within the year on policy and annuity contracts," except in so far as such dividends are excluded from computation of gross income under the so-called noninclusion clause of such section, as having been applied in reduction of renewal premiums. Penn Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Lederer, (1920) 252 U. S. 523, 40 S. Ct. 397, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —.

Recovery back of excessive corporation excise tax.—The right to recover back excessive corporation excise tax payments is barred where the corporation failed to appeal to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, as required by R. S. sec. 3226 (see vol. 3, p. 1034), and also failed to observe the requirement of section 3227 (see vol. 3, p. 1037), that suit be begun within two years after the cause of action accrued. And the situation of the corporation is not helped by the fact that subsequent to the payments the original returns were amended and the assessments increased and the original payments credited upon the increased assessments. Maryland Casualty Co. v. U. S., (1920) 251 U. S. 342, 40 S. Ct. 155, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, modifying and affirming (1917) 52 Ct. Cl. 201, 288; (1917) 53 Ct. Cl. 81.

I. SUBDIVISION FIRST

3. Nature of Tax (p. 261)

Excise and income taxes distinguished.—In U. S. v. Philadelphia, etc., R. Co., (E. D. Pa. 1920) 262 Fed. 188, the court in distinguishing an excise tax under this Act from an income tax, said: "We are concerned wholly with an excise tax. Whether it is a scientifically accurate concept of it or not, the concept of it as a charge for the privilege of following an occupation or trade, or carrying on a business, gives us a fairly good working idea of what it is. It is, in consequence, an indirect tax, and has no reference to earnings or income, except that the sum of such earnings or income may (as anything else may) be made the measure of the tax. An income tax, on the contrary, is a direct tax imposed upon the thing called income, and is as directly imposed as is a tax on land."

5. "Carrying On," "Engaged in" or "Doing" Business (p. 263)

What constitutes "carrying on," "engaged in" or "doing" business—Leasing of property and franchise by corporation.—To same effect as first paragraph of original annotation, see Old Colony R. Co. v. Gill, (D. C. Mass. 1916) 257 Fed. 220, also holding that taxes assessed against the lessor after the execution of the lease were illegal, and, having been paid under protest, could be recovered with interest. See also Boston, etc., R. Corp. v. Gill, (D. C. Mass. 1916) 257 Fed. 221.

The fact that a corporation is organized and all of its stock owned by two corporations does not exempt it from taxation under this section on the ground that it is not organized for profit and not doing business within the meaning of this section, where it is shown that it has accumulated money through its corporate activities. Associated Pipe Line Co. v. U. S., (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1919) 259 Fed. 800, 170 C. C. A. 94. Regarding this question, the court said:

"The return made by the Associated Pipe Line Company was as by a corporation organized for profit, and the return showed that it had accumulated money. It is hard to conceive that the formation of the corporation was had with a view other than the realization of profit. It may be that the stockholders in the Associated Pipe Line Company took the profit away from the corporation, but it is clear that the way in which the money was made was by a corporate organization; and the corporation having achieved the object of its creation, became subject to the imposition of the tax with respect to doing business. In Von Baumbach v. Sargent Land Co., 242 U. S. 503, 37 Sup. Ct. 201, 61 L. Ed. 460, a corporation was created 'to unite in one ownership the undivided fractional interests of its various stockholders in land,' and to 'own such property, and, for the convenience of its stockholders, to receive, and distribute to them,' the proceeds of the disposition of such property at such times and in such amounts and in such a manner as determined by the board of directors. The Supreme Court found no difficulty in concluding that such a corporation was organized for profit and did not come within the exceptional character of charitable or eleemosynary corporations, and the court after examining the earlier corporation tax cases held that the corporation was carrying on business and said:

"The fair test to be derived from a consideration of all of them [the cases] is between a corporation which has reduced its activities to the owning and holding of property and the distribution of its avails and doing only the acts necessary to continue that status, and one which is still active and is maintaining its organization for the purpose of continued efforts in the pursuit of profit and gain, and such activities as are essential to those purposes."

"The court emphasized the view that the Corporation Tax Law requires no particular amount of business in order to bring a company within its terms. The activities considered brought the corporation there in question within that line of the decisions which have held that such corporations were doing business in a corporate capacity within the meaning of the law. McCoach v. Mine Hill R. R. Co., 228 U. S. 295, 33 Sup. Ct. 419, 57 L. Ed. 842, illustrates the distinction. There a railroad corporation turned over its entire property under a lease to another company, and even ceased to exercise its power of eminent domain. It was held not to be engaged in business. The Associated Pipe Line Company appears to have been active, and to be maintaining its organization for the purposes for which it was created; it has expended and received money, has borrowed money, has constructed pipe lines, has allowed itself to be charged interest, has had dealings with its stock and stockholders concerning moneys received, and in 1909 was actually transporting oil and performing its corporate functions."

6. Income (p. 267)

Profit only "as a matter of form and of bookkeeping," where in reality there was no profit whatever, was not taxable income. Alpha Portland Cement Co. v. U. S., (C. C. A. 3d Cir. 1919) 261 Fed. 339, a case held to fall within the principle of the decisions in Southern Pac. Co. v. Lowe, (1918) 247 U. S. 330, 38 S. Ct. 540, 62 U. S. (L. ed.) 1142, and Gulf Oil Corp. v. Lewellyn, (1918) 248 U. S. 71, 39 S. Ct. 35, 63 U. S. (L. ed.) 133, and indistinguishable on principle from the decision in Baldwin Locomotive Works v. McCoach, (C. C. A. 3d Cir. 1915) 221 Fed. 59, 136 C. C. A. 660.

Dividends received by a corporation on stock held by it in another corporation are a part of its income during the year in which they are received and are subject to an excise tax under this Act, regardless of the fact that they are paid out of earnings of previous years. U. S. v. Philadelphia, etc., R. Co., (E. D. Pa. 1920) 262 Fed. 188.

Excess premiums collected by an insurance company and apportioned to its policyholders by way of dividend are not taxable. New York L. Ins. Co. v. Anderson, (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1920) 263 Fed. 527.

9. Action to Recover Tax Wrongfully Assessed (p. 289)

Recovery of penalty exacted for nonpayment of illegal tax.—The fact that taxes illegally assessed under this section were not paid within the time required by law does not prevent the corporation from recovering the penalty of one per cent per month paid by it for the nonpayment of the illegal tax, "for, if the tax was illegal, it was never due, and therefore the penalty was as much unauthorized as the tax itself." Camp Bird v. Howbert, (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1919) 262 Fed. 114.

II. SUBDIVISION SECOND (p. 270)

Deductions—Interest on advances.—Where a corporation at the time of making a return is indebted to another corporation on account of advances but has no paid-up capital stock, it is not entitled to deduct interest on the advances. Associated Pipe Line Co. v. U. S., (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1919) 258 Fed. 800, 170 C. C. A. 94.

Taxes paid on stock of other corporations.—A corporation is not entitled under this section to deduct taxes paid on its behalf by various corporations upon shares of their stock owned by it. U. S. v. Aetna L. Ins. Co., (D. C. Conn. 1919) 260 Fed. 333, wherein it was said:

"The deductions allowed a corporation by the Act of August 5, 1909, include 'all sums paid by it within the year for taxes imposed under the authority of the United States or of any state or territory thereof, or imposed by the government of any foreign country as a condition to carrying on business therein.' The taxes in question were not paid by the defendant, but in its behalf by other corporations.

"While it is true that 'a statute providing for the imposition of taxes is to be strictly construed, and all reasonable doubts in respect thereto resolved against the government and in favor of the citizen' (Mutual Benefit Life Ins. Co. v. Herold [D. C.] 198 Fed. 199, and cases therein cited), no doubtful meaning is here involved. The language of the act is clear and explicit. . . . If it had been the intention to permit such a deduction as defendant urges, the act would have provided that there be included 'all sums paid by it or in its behalf within the year. . . .'

"Defendant relies upon a decision by the Treasury Department rendered March 24, 1916, reading in part:

"You are advised that, when a corporation pays taxes for its stockholders, such payments represent a portion of the earnings of the corporation, which, instead of being distributed to the stockholders in the form of dividends, is used in payment of taxes which the stockholders individually owe. Should you, instead of paying the taxes, pay over this sum to the stockholders, the stockholders would be required to return the amount as income received, and would then be entitled to deduct the same under the item of taxes paid during the year. Under the Excise Tax Law a stockholder which is a corporation is entitled to deduct from gross income all dividends received from another corporation subject to tax, and therefore is entitled to deduct as a dividend that portion of the earnings of the corporation in which it owns stock, which is represented by the stockholder's tax. For the years 1909 to 1912, inclusive, therefore, the corporation which is a stockholder will be entitled to an additional deduction on account of the taxes paid for it by the corporation issuing the stock, for the reason that it produces the same result as if the corporation owning the stock was required to return as income for these years the full amount of the dividend, including that portion of the dividend diverted to pay tax, and then took credit as a deduction for this entire amount under the item of dividends received from other corporations, and also took credit for the amount of taxes paid under that item. Under the Income Tax Law, however, a corporation is not entitled to deduct from gross income dividends received from other corporations. Consequently, if it claims the benefit of deducting from gross income taxes paid for it by another corporation, it must include such amount in income, as the deduction counterbalances the receipt. As you, the stockholder in this case, did not return as income the amount in question, you are not entitled under the income tax law to deduct the same. The claim on account of the tax assessed for the year 1913 is accordingly rejected, and you will find inclosed notice of demand for payment of this tax. The claim for the abatement of the additional tax assessed for 1912 has received favorable consideration for the reason above stated."

"This decision points out that a corporation, making a claim such as is advanced by defendant, must have included in its return as income the taxes which were paid in its behalf by other corporations. No such return was made by defendant herein; therefore the decision is not in point, even if it were controlling on the court.

"There was no refusal nor neglect to make a return within the meaning of the act, and therefore no penalty will be allowed."

Depreciation of securities.—A corporation is entitled to deduct the depreciation in value of its securities. New York L. Ins. Co. v. Anderson, (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1920) 263 Fed. 527, wherein the court said:

"It is here admitted that, judged by any standard familiar to business men, the securities of plaintiff were worth at the end of 1910 several million dollars less than they were at the beginning of that year. It is further admitted that, not only was it the business custom of plaintiff to revalue its securities in accordance with the market annually, but that such procedure was and is a reasonable business conservatism, and a frequent, though not universal, statutory requirement.

"Under this taxing act the question is not strictly whether depreciation in market value is a loss, but whether, when Congress specifically includes within 'losses actually sustained within the year, . . . a reasonable allowance for depreciation of property,' depreciation does not become a loss, no matter what persons other than Congress may think on the subject.

"We have no doubt that this loss in market value is depreciation. The word means, by derivation and common usage, a 'fall in value; reduction of worth;' and it seems to us to require mention only to prove that the average citizen, for whom statutes are assumed to be made, would judge depreciation of his own bonds by the opinion of the public, however thoroughly convinced of the ultimate wisdom of holding on to what had depreciated."

But the term "depreciation," as used in this subdivision, does not include the depreciation of securities purchased at market value by a corporation during the year. New York L. Ins. Co. v. Anderson, (S. D. N. Y. 1919) 262 Fed. 215. Regarding this question the court said:

"It is quite apparent that, if this depreciation be accepted as a deduction, and no appreciation be added, the insurer may slowly, over a series of years, credit itself with possibly the whole value of its securities and without any corresponding offset. This is obviously an unreasonable result, which could not have been intended. The question is whether the depreciation falls within the deductions covered by paragraph 2 of section 38 of the Act of 1909 (38 Stat. 112, c. 6). Of the deduction so allowed the only one appropriate is:

"All losses actually sustained within the year, and not compensated by insurance or otherwise, including a reasonable allowance for depreciation of property if any."

"This clause of the statute undoubtedly goes to 'depreciation' which has not yet been realized by sale of the depreciated property; so much one must allow. If the securities had been sold, I need not say that the loss would not have been a proper item of allowance. The clause is not intended to cover that situation. The question is whether it should be limited to the loss in actual use value, due to wear and tear, reflected in a fall in money value. It seems to me quite clear that it should be so limited. The fluctuations in the market value of a commercial security, as in the case of a stock of goods, are constant from month to month. No one regards them as a final depreciation in value from which the property will not recover. It may or may not; but, if there has been no certain deterioration in those elements which contribute to the beneficial use of the property, and which prevent it from ever commanding the same opinion of its value as before, the loss has not, I think, been 'actually sustained.' When consumable goods are in part worn out, they can never recover their earlier condition. It is true that their value may recover, owing to the increased value of all their class, new and used; but the proportion between the value of new and used goods of that kind is presumptively unchanged. The loss has then been 'actually sustained,' in the sense that it cannot be recouped. This is what I think the language means. It refers to such goods as by reason of their physical deterioration are permanently impaired in use, from which impairment there was no chance of recovery.

"Such an interpretation, moreover, accords with common business understanding. A manufacturer charges his profits with the loss to his machinery and buildings, due to wear and tear, recognizing that the necessity of the upkeep of his capital will in the end inevitably require some such allowance. A merchant, on the other hand, does not ordinarily include the variations in the market values of his stock in counting his profits. They may shortly be restored to their value, and the time to charge his profit with them is when they are sold, and the gain or loss finally ascertained.

"Cases like Stratton's Independence v. Howbert, 231 U. S. 399, 34 Sup. Ct. 136, 58 L. Ed. 285, and those which follow it, or Doyle v. Mitchell Bros. Co., 247 U. S. 179, 38 Sup. Ct. 467, 62 L. Ed. 1054, and those which follow it as well, are quite different. The question was how the gross income was to be estimated, particularly what allowance should be made for the original value of the raw material, which had been worked up and sold as a finished product. Hays v. Gauley Mountain Coal Co., 247 U. S. 189, 38 Sup. Ct. 470, 62 L. Ed. 1061, was a case where securities were actually sold, and the question was also one of gross income. It did not determine what was to be considered the proper deduction for depreciation not realized by conversion into cash. Nor do any of the cases cited in the lower courts seem to me to be in point. While the case appears, therefore, to be one of first impression, I do not hesitate to hold that the defendant is right upon this item."

Depreciation of equipment.—In Camp Bird v. Howbert, (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1919) 262 Fed. 114, a mining corporation was held to be entitled to recover excess taxes paid by it by reason of the collector's failure to allow a sufficient amount for depreciation of its equipment.

Money set apart to meet discount in sale of bonds.—Money set apart by a corporation upon its books each year until the maturity of certain of its bonds to meet a loss caused by selling the bonds below par, is not a payment of interest, nor does it represent a loss actually sustained within the year, and may not be deducted under paragraph 2 of this section in ascertaining the corporation's net income. Southern Pac. R. Co. v. Muentzer, (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1919) 260 Fed. 837, 171 C. C. A. 563.

Vol. IV, p. 278, sec. 4. [First ed., 1916 Supp., p. 74.]

Buyers' and sellers' slips as sufficient memorandums.—Buyers' and sellers' slips which conform to the provisions of this section and section 5, are sufficient memorandums and evidence of contracts to comply with the provisions of this Act, although such contracts were made verbally, under a rule of the cotton exchange, before they were reduced to writing. Thorn v. Browne, (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1919) 257 Fed. 519, 168 C. C. A. 469.

Memorandum by whom signed.—A memorandum in order to comply with this section need not be signed by both parties to the contract, but only "by the party to be charged or his agent." Thorn v. Browne, (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1919) 257 Fed. 519, 168 C. C. A. 469, wherein the court said:

"It is a general rule of law that a written contract signed by both parties to it is valid, and that a written contract between two parties signed by one of them is likewise valid and enforceable against him who signed it by the other party to it, who accepts and seeks to enforce it, although he has never signed it. If Congress had intended to require every transaction in the sale of cotton futures to be evidenced by a writing or by written memoranda signed by both parties to it, it would naturally have required the writing of which it treats to be signed by the parties to it or their agents in their behalf, and not 'by the party to be charged or by his agent in his behalf' only. This provision of the statute states clearly and without ambiguity that the contract must be signed by the party to be charged or his agent in his behalf. The selection of one party is the exclusion of the other, and the strong legal presumption is that the Congress intended what it so plainly declared, that the statute ought to be held to mean what it expresses, and that the signature of no one but the party to be charged is requisite to it to evidence a valid contract. . . .

"When a legislative body selects and uses in a statute words or clauses which before the enactment of the law had acquired by judicial interpretation or common consent and use a well-understood meaning and legal effect, the legal presumption is that it intended that they should have that meaning and effect in the statute it enacts. Butler v. United States (D. C.) 87 Fed. 655, 661; United States v. Trans-Missouri Freight Association, 58 Fed. 67, 7 C. C. A. 15, 71, 24 L. R. A. 73. For many years before the Cotton Futures Act was passed, the statutes of fraud of England and of many of the states of this nation had provided that certain classes of contracts specified therein should be void unless they were evidenced by a writing or by a written memorandum 'signed by the party to be charged or his agent,' and long before the passage of the act under consideration it had become the universal and well-understood judicial construction of these statutes that the signature of the party to be charged alone was sufficient to evidence a valid contract thereunder, and that the other party to the contract, although he had not signed it, could enforce it in the courts against him who had signed it. . . .

"Congress took this well-adjudicated clause, 'signed by the party to be charged or by his agent,' and inserted it in the Cotton Futures Act in the form 'signed by the party to be charged, or by his agent in his behalf,' and it is incredible that it intended thereby that this clause should have a meaning so radically different from that which it then had as to require the writing or memorandum to be signed by others than that one of the parties so clearly designated by the law.

"And when the fact is considered that, if this section 4 be construed to mean that the writing or memorandum must be signed by both parties to the contract, one who makes or takes a contract of sale of cotton futures signed by the party to be charged only becomes guilty of the penal offense denounced by section 14 of the Cotton Futures Act, there remains no doubt that the meaning of the clause under consideration may not lawfully be extended by construction, so as to require every writing or written memorandum of a contract for the sale of cotton futures to be signed by both parties to it. For courts may not lawfully extend the denunciation of a penal statute to a class of persons excluded from its effect by its plain terms, even though in their opinion the acts of the latter are as heinous as those of the members of the class whose deeds the statute penalizes."

Constitutionality.—The imposition of a stamp tax under this Act on certificates of shares of the capital stock of a manufacturing company organized in the form of a trust under the common law, is constitutional. Malley v. Bowditch, (C. C. A. 1st Cir. 1919) 259 Fed. 809, 170 C. C. A. 609, 7 A. L. R. 608. The court said:

"The suggestion of constitutional difficulties in adopting the construction for which the collector contends, and which we think right, does not seem of weight. It involves 'no distinction founded upon an immaterial difference between two kinds of partnerships,' since the stamp tax is contingent upon the original issue of 'certificates of stock,' just as a stamp tax on checks is contingent upon the issuing of checks.

"A stamp tax on documents discriminates between those who do and those who do not issue documents; and a distinction between unincorporated companies and associations which do and those which do not issue certificates of shares of stock is not unreasonable, nor founded upon an immaterial difference between two kinds of partnerships. Thomas v. United States, 192 U. S. 363, 371, 24 Sup. Ct. 305, 48 L. Ed. 481; Hatch v. Reardon, 204 U. S. 152, 158, 159, 27 Sup. Ct. 188, 51 L. Ed. 415, 9 Ann. Cas. 736.

"The Massachusetts cases cited (Gleason v. McKay, 134 Mass. 419; Minot v. Winthrop, 162 Mass. 113, 38 N. E. 512, 26 L. R. A. 259; Opinions of Justices, 196 Mass. 603, 85 N. E. 545) in our opinion do not give rise to any constitutional difficulty. The opinion of Chief Justice Rugg (196 Mass. 619, 620, 85 N. E. 545) tends to support the view that the words 'association' and 'company' include organizations not regulated by statute, and that a statute including these in an excise tax does not involve a discrimination founded on an immaterial difference.

"Nor do we regard it useful to consider whether the right of the certificate holder or shareholder is a chose in action or in the nature of a chose in action, or an equitable interest in property.

"The certificate is but a muniment of title—documentary evidence of ownership—and not the share itself.

"The thing taxed is not a chose in action, though it may be evidence of it. In a remote sense both a share of corporate stock and a certificate of a share in an unincorporated company may be said to represent an interest in property. It is equally true that both may represent an interest in a share of a capital fixed in amount, whether fixed by statute or by agreement.

"In Eliot v. Freeman, 220 U. S. 178, 31 Sup. Ct. 360, 55 L. Ed. 424, construing the Corporation Tax Law (Act Aug. 5, 1909, c. 6, 36 Stat. 11), it was held that the tax was imposed upon doing business in a corporate or quasi corporate capacity. But that case is clearly distinguishable from the present case, since the present statute does not impose a franchise tax, but imposes a stamp tax upon various kinds of documents, which may be issued by companies neither incorporated nor quasi incorporated, 'or for or in respect of the vellum, parchment, or paper upon which such instruments, matters, or things, or any of them are written or printed,' etc. See section 5, 38 Stat. pt. 1, p. 753.

"In interpreting the statute we find no sufficient reason for limiting the terms 'association' and 'company' to those which derive their powers from legislation.

"We have examined, also, the opinion of the Supreme Court in Crocker et al. v. Malley, March 17, 1919, 249 U. S. 223, 39 Sup. Ct. 270, 63 L. Ed. —, reserving the judgment of this court. In that case the Supreme Court found that:

"The declaration of trust on its face is an ordinary real estate trust of the kind familiar in Massachusetts, unless in the particular that the trustees' receipt provides that the holder has no interest in any specific property and that it purports only to declare the holder entitled to a certain fraction of the net proceeds of the property when converted into cash "and meantime to income."

"It was stated, however, in that case:

"The function of the trustees is not to manage the mills, but simply to collect the rents and income of such property as may be in their hands,' etc.

"Under the present declaration of trust it is provided that the name of the trust shall be Pepperell Manufacturing Company, and the trustees may be so designated, and in that name the trustees shall, so far as practicable, conduct the business of the trust; that the trustees shall employ and use the trust property and assets in the carrying on of the business of manufacturing textile or other fabrics, etc. This is essentially different from an ordinary real estate trust of the kind familiar in Massachusetts. If, under the decision of the Supreme Court, there may be doubt whether the term 'association' is applicable, there seems no ground for serious doubt of the applicability of the term 'company,' used in the statute and made a part of the name and description of those persons who are to conduct the manufacturing business of the organization.

"In applying this stamp tax we find no substantial reason for a distinction between this textile manufacturing company and other textile manufacturing companies."

Failure to attach stamps to deeds as invalidating it or making it inadmissible in evidence.—The absence of the internal revenue stamps required on deeds neither invalidated the deeds nor made them inadmissible as evidence. *Cole v. Vol. IV, p. 311, sec. 3450. [First ed., vol. III, p. 795.]

Innocence of automobile owner.—Where the owner of an automobile puts it in the possession of a prospective purchaser but retains title as security for the balance of the unpaid purchase money, the use of the automobile by the purchaser for the purpose of removing goods in violation of this section, makes it subject to forfeiture, although the owner has no knowledge of such illegal use. Logan v. U. S., (C. C. A. 5th Cir. 1919) 260 Fed. 746, 171 C. C. A. 484. The court said:

"It is conceded that the automobile and the mule were used for the removal of non-tax paid spirits, and would have been subject to forfeiture if they had belonged to the user. It is conceded that the automobile was sold to the user by the plaintiffs in error in the first case; they retaining title to secure the balance of unpaid purchase money. It is conceded that the claimant in the second case sold the forfeited mule to the user in whose possession it was seized, taking a mortgage back to secure the balance of unpaid purchase money. It is conceded that neither claimant had knowledge of the illegal use to which their property was put.

"The case of United States v. Mincey, 254 Fed. 287, 165 C. C. A. 575, decided by this court, would seem to be controlling of both cases. The plaintiffs in error ask us to reconsider the Mincey Case, and also to distinguish each of the present cases from that case.

"In deference to the earnest argument of plaintiffs in error, we have again considered the question involved in these appeals, but without being convinced that there is any good legal reason for departing from our previous decision. The cases of Dobbins Distillery v. United States, 96 U. S. 395, 24 L. Ed. 637, and United States v. Stowell, 133 U. S. 1, 10 Sup. Ct. 244, 33 L. Ed. 555, so far as they relate to personal property, are not distinguishable from the cases now under consideration, and control their decision. In the Dobbins Distillery Case, mention is made, in the court's opinion, that the lessor committed his property to the custody of the lessee for a business necessarily under strict regulations, viz., a government distillery. However, this was a lawful disposition of his property, and we cannot see how it could be said to charge him with knowledge of his lessee's subsequent infractions of the internal revenue laws. The statute forfeiting realty provides for proof of knowledge of the violation in the owner, but no such requirement rests upon the government as to personalty. In the Stowell Case, personal property of a third person, in custody of the offender, was forfeited, though the owner was ignorant of the fact that a distillery was being operated on the premises where the property was seized, and in connection with which it had been used, without the owner's knowledge or consent. Reference is made to sections 3460 and 3461 of the Revised Statutes, as being inconsistent with the construction given section 3450 in the Mincey Case, both because of a supposed lack of good reason for protecting an absent claimant, since it is contended that, if present, he is permitted to say nothing to prevent the forfeiture, and because of a supposed discrimination against a present claimant, because he could not prevent a forfeiture by showing an absence on his part of willful negligence and an intention to defraud, though the absent claimant is relieved from the forfeiture by making such a showing to the Secretary of the Treasury.

"The first contention loses sight of the right of a claimant to be heard in denial of the guilt of the property sought to be forfeited, as well as his possible right to show that the guilty user of it acquired possession of it without claimant's knowledge or consent.

"The second contention ignores the provisions of section 5292, R. S., which provide a remedy by which any person whose property is forfeited may have the forfeiture remitted, if the Secretary of the Treasury is of the opinion that it was incurred without willful negligence or any intention of fraud in the person incurring it. Section 3461 applies to an application for relief from forfeiture, after condemnation and sale, where the owner, through absence or other cause, was ignorant of the seizure until after the sale. Section 5292 is open to any person who can make the requisite showing, whether absent or not, and before condemnation as well as after. Under it, as under section 3461, the endeavor is not to prevent forfeiture, but to obtain relief from it. Neither section offers a defense to the judicial declaration of a forfeiture, but only an appeal to the discretion of the Secretary for a remission of it. The fact that section 5292 authorizes the application to the Secretary, while the government's suit to condemn is pending, is persuasive that Congress recognized that a showing of absence of willful negligence or fraud would not prevent the judicial declaration of the forfeiture, but was only to be addressed with effect to the clemency of the Secretary. . . . We regard it as settled that personal property voluntarily committed by the owner to the possession of a third person, for use by him, becomes subject to forfeiture, under section 3450, though the owner has no knowledge of the illegal use to which it is put by the possessor."

Rights of creditor of automobile owner.—Where an automobile is forfeited and sold under this section because it has been used to transport intoxicating liquor on which the tax has not been paid, a creditor of the automobile owner who holds a deed of trust on it is not entitled to have the proceeds of the sale applied to the payment of his debt but the whole amount should be paid into the treasury. U. S. v. One Saxon Automobile, (C. C. A. 4th Cir. 1919) 257 Fed. 251, 168 C. C. A. 335.

"Special excise tax" as used in this section is a condition placed upon the right of a corporation to do business of any kind and is not the tax meant by a provision in a contract for the leasing by a railroad of terminal facilities that the lessor would pay one-third of all taxes or assessments, special or otherwise, and public charges of every kind and nature that should or might be taxed or assessed against the Des Moines Company or its property during the aforesaid term of years. Des Moines Union R. Co. v. Chicago Great Western R. Co., (Ia. 1920) 177 N. W. 90.

General construction.—Under this section the Commissioner of Internal Revenue was authorized, by proper rules and regulations, to be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, to adopt and prescribe for use at fruit distilleries meters, locks and seals, to be purchased at the expense of the distiller, before such distiller might legally engage in the business of manufacturing distilled spirits from fruits. Import tax.—The provision of this section, levying an additional tax upon imported distilled liquor and directing that it shall be collected under existing law, describes an import tax and not an internal revenue tax. U. S. v. Shallus & Co., (1919) 9 U. S. Cust. App. 168; U. S. v. Billin & Co., (1919) 9 U. S. Cust. App. 286.

Nature of tax.—The tax is one imposed on the power to transfer property upon death. People v. Bemis, (Colo. 1920) 189 Pac. 32.

The tax levied by these provisions differs in its character from the legacy taxes levied by the federal government during the Civil and Spanish wars, and from the general run of state inheritance tax laws; although it is in some respects similar to the act of New York construed in Matter of Estate of Swift, 137 N. Y. 77. It seems to have been modeled as to its main intent and incidence on the English finance act of 1894 (57 and 58 Vict. ch. 30, Pt. I), though differing in material respects from that act. (1918) 31 Op. Atty.-Gen. 287.

Validity of act sustained in New York Trust Co. v. Elsner, (S. D. N. Y. 1920) 263 Fed. 620, wherein the court said:

"Clearly the tax is not one on the property of the decedent, but, as it purports to be, on the privilege of transfer by death. Equally clearly it is not on the individual legacies or on the right of the individual legatees to receive them, measured by the entire net estate, but on the right of decedent to have the estate pass by will or intestacy. Plunkett v. Trust Co., 233 Mass. 471, 124 N. E. 265, and cases cited. While, as pointed out by White, C. J. (then Justice), in Knowlton v. Moore, 178 U. S. 41, 77, 20 Sup. Ct. 747, 762 (44 L. Ed. 969), there is a clear 'distinction between a tax on the interest to which some person succeeds on a death and a tax on the interest which ceased by reason of the death,' there is no distinction whatsoever in the power of Congress, under article 1, § 8, of the Constitution, 'to collect taxes, duties, imposts and excises,' to provide for either kind of tax. The doubt as to validity expressed in that case, was limited to measuring a tax upon the succession of each individual legatee to a specific legacy by the value, not of his legacy, but of the entire net estate of the decedent; it did not extend to the power of Congress expressly to impose an estate tax rather than a legacy tax—to measure it by the value of the net estate and to cast the burden upon the residuary personal estate.

"Concededly, under Knowlton v. Moore, Congress may levy inheritance taxes on the privilege of succession to property transferred by death of the owner. It is contended, however, that a tax, not on the right of the beneficiary to receive, but on the privilege of transfer by will or intestacy, is unconstitutional, as upon an operation of the means provided by the state for the performance of functions exclusively within state control; that in some way, because ordinarily the rights which cease at death do not pass immediately, but only subject to the probate processes prescribed by the state, such a tax becomes a tax on the instrumentalities of a state. As both the right to receive a succession at or by death and the right to transfer at death are subject to exclusive state control, there is no basis, in my judgment, for any such distinction between them in respect to the constitutional power of Congress.

"Again, it is urged that, until there occurs some exercise of some right as to which a private option of renunciation exists, there is nothing to which the federal taxing power can constitutionally be applied. There is, however, ordinarily no right of renunciation under intestacy laws. Moreover, the option itself is derived from the state in the exercise of its exclusive control."

Deduction before allotting share of widow.—Where a widow is entitled to one-half the personal estate of the decedent, her share is to be awarded to her subject to the payment of its proportion of the tax. The tax is not to be deducted before estimating her share. Hampton v. Hampton, (Ky. 1920) 221 S. W. 496.

Income earned during administration, and appreciation during that period.—The government has no authority to require the inclusion in the gross estate, for the purpose of determining the net estate, of income earned during administration and appreciation during that period in the value of the property left by the decedent. (1916) 31 Op. Atty.-Gen. 64.

Foreign real estate.—Real estate as such, located outside of the United States, belonging to a decedent resident within the United States, should not be included in determining the value of the gross estate of such decedent. (1918) 31 Op. Atty.-Gen. 287, wherein it was said: "The generality of language in section 201 is clearly, for the purposes of the question propounded by you, limited by the subdivisions of section 202. While that section begins by including in the value of the gross estate of the decedent 'all property, tangible or intangible, wherever situated' it immediately explains that this is only to the extent of the 'interest' subject to the payment of the charges against the estate of the decedent and expenses of its administration, and subject to distribution as a part of it. Without in any way committing myself to an opinion as to the proper scope of these words, I do not think it can be denied that they are not exactly the words which Congress would have used had it intended to include foreign real estate. Subdivisions (b) and (c) are, in their main provisions, broad enough to cover foreign real estate, but the last paragraph of the section explicitly provides that 'for the purpose of this title . . . any property of which the decedent has made a transfer or with respect to which he has created a trust, within the meaning of subdivision (b) of this section, shall be deemed to be situated in the United States, if so situated either at the time of the transfer or the creation of the trust, or at the time of the decedent's death.'

"Clearly these words are meaningless if Congress intended by its previous provisions to tax real estate whether situated in the United States or not. This being so, there is equally little reason to suppose that Congress intended to tax real estate situated outside of the United States passing by testate or intestate transfer, instead of by transfer in contemplation of death.

"Paragraph (1) of subdivision (a) of section 203 permits as a deduction from the gross estate charges against the estate allowed by the laws of the jurisdiction under which the estate is being administered, whether such jurisdiction is national or foreign. Here the intent is clear to levy a tax upon an estate which may for some reason be subject to a foreign jurisdiction; but, as was said above in regard to subdivision (a) of section 202, the language is not that which would naturally have been used if foreign real estate was meant to be included, and may be fairly satisfied by an application to foreign personality.

"The sections in regard to the filing of a return (205) and to the payment of the tax (207, 209) are applicable to foreign real estate, to the extent of applying the rule of effectiveness (Dicey Conflict of Laws, 2d ed., p. 40, General Principle No. III; Blackstone v. Miller, 188 U. S. 189). That is to say, the above sections imposed a personal duty on the 'executor,' transferee, or trustee within the jurisdiction to pay the tax upon certain property, which duty, so far as the language of the sections in question goes, is broad enough to extend to foreign real estate.

"On the other hand, by the same sections a lien is created on the estate for the unpaid taxes, and by section 208 a suit to subject the property of the decedent to the payment of the taxes is authorized in the United States courts, neither of which provisions can, of course, apply to foreign real estate."

Trust estate for benefit of decedent.—Where a decedent disposes of a spendthrift trust estate, created for his benefit under the will of his mother who died previous to the passage of this Act, by a power of appointment under her will, such estate should not be included in determining the value of his estate under this section. Pearce v. Lederer, (E. D. La. 1919) 262 Fed. 993.

1918 Supp., p. 307, sec. 203.

State inheritance taxes are not to be deducted. New York Trust Co. v. Eisner, (8. D. N. Y. 1920) 263 Fed. 620, wherein the court said: "The question presented is whether this clause permits of the deduction of state inheritance taxes paid by the executor in a number of states and allowed to him in his accounting in the Surrogate's Court of decedent's domicile. On November 17, 1916, the Treasury Department ruled (T. D. 2395), that as 'state inheritance taxes are a primary charge against an estate and allowable as credits to executors and administrators, . . . they are clearly deductible.'

"Subsequently on September 10, 1917, this ruling was revoked and on an exhaustive study of the nature of state inheritance taxes they were declared not deductible.

"While doubts in a taxing statute are to be resolved in favor of the taxpayer the mere fact that the Treasury Department changed its original interpretation is not conclusive that the language of the act is so doubtful as to compel the application of this canon of construction.

"If this were a tax on the right of succession, an intention to tax only that which eventually passes to a beneficiary would be presumed. But, as a tax on the cessation of decedent's interest, such a presumption would extend at best to the entire net estate without deduction of any charges levied, not on it, but on the right or on the share of individual beneficiaries. What, then, are the 'charges against the estate as are allowed by the laws of the jurisdiction' included in clause? Not all charges which under the laws an executor or administrator may or even must pay, whether for his own protection or otherwise, but only such charges, like all the other deductions, which affect the estate as a whole, only charges against the estate.

"Estate taxes or probate duties levied by the state would fall within this clause. Northern Trust Co. v. Lederer (D. C.) 257 Fed. 812. But taxes levied on the shares to be received by beneficiaries, reducing, not the estate, but the individual's share, cannot be deemed a charge upon the estate merely because the duty, with the corresponding liability and right to account in respect thereto in his estate accounts, is imposed upon the executor or administrator to pay the tax before distributing the share itself. The nature of the tax, as a succession, not an estate, tax, remains unchanged, despite the additional obligation thus imposed.

"The changes made by the present law (Act Feb. 24, 1919, § 403 [see 1919 Supp. p. 132]) afford no basis for interpreting the former law, for, while it excludes state succession and legacy taxes, it also expressly excludes state estate or inheritance taxes.

"In my judgment, the later interpretation of the act by the Treasury Department is sound, and the demurrer must be sustained."

Compare Lederer v. Northern Trust Co., (C. C. A. 3d Cir. 1920) 262 Fed. 52, affirming 257 Fed. 812, which was considered and reconciled in the above quoted opinion.

1918 Supp., p. 313, sec. 2.

Stock dividends as income.—Stock dividends are not "income" and therefore are not taxable under this section. They are not included in the sixteenth amendment to the United States Constitution (see vol. XI, p. 1110) providing that "Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes on incomes, from whatever source derived, without apportionment among the several states" and can only be taxed under a statute complying with art. 1, sec. 2, cl. 3 (see vol. X, p. 335) and art. 1, sec. 9, cl. 4 (see vol. X, p. 887) of such Constitution. Eisner v. Macomber, (1920) 252 U. S. 189, 40 S. Ct. 189, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —.

Improvements as income—time of accrual.—Improvements affixed by a tenant which under the loan become the property of the lessor accrue to him at the time they are made, and a rule of the Treasury Department that they shall be deemed to accrue as of the date of the termination of the lease is invalid. Cryan v. Wardell, (N. D. Cal. 1920) 263 Fed. 248.

Building acquired under lease as income.—Where, under the terms of a lease, a building erected by the lessee on the leased premises becomes the property of the lessor immediately upon its construction, and some years thereafter the lessor acquires possession of the premises because of the lessee's default in paying rent, the building cannot be regarded as income accruing to the lessor during the year in which he acquired possession of it and taxed as such under this section. Miller v. Gearin, (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1919) 268 Fed. 225, 160 C. C. A. 293, wherein it was said:

"The lessor acquired nothing in 1916 save the possession of that which for many years had been her own. The possession so acquired was not income. It was not a gain, but was a loss. Assuming that the building was income derived from the use of the property, we think it clear that the time when it was 'derived' was the time when the completed building was added to the real estate and enhanced its value. At that time it represented a prepayment to the lessor of a portion of the rental, distributable over a period of 23 years. The lease provided that the ownership of all buildings or improvements put upon the premises was to vest in the lessor immediately upon the construction of the same, subject to the provisions of the lease. The decision in Edwards v. Keith, 231 Fed. 111, 145 C. C. A. 298, L. R. A. 1918A, 498, is not contrary to this view. In that case the court held that the commissions of an insurance broker, earned before the Income Tax Law was passed, but received thereafter, constituted income taxable in the year in which they were actually received."

Proceeds of accident insurance policy as income.—The proceeds of an accident insurance policy received by an individual on account of personal injuries sustained by him through accident are not income taxable under the provisions of this section. (1918) 31 Op. Atty.-Gen. 304, wherein it was said: "It is evident that if the proceeds of an accident insurance policy are to be brought within the provisions of the Act of September 8, 1916, as amended, it must be under the general words of subdivision (a) of section 2, supra: 'gains or profits and income derived from any source whatever.'"

"In Doyle v. Mitchell Brothers Company, (247 U. S. 179), decided by the Supreme Court May 20 last, the question of the correct meaning of 'income' as used in the corporation excise tax act of August 5, 1909, was carefully considered. It was stated:

"'Whatever difficulty there may be about a precise and scientific definition of "income," it imports, as used here, something entirely distinct from principal or capital either as a subject of taxation or as a measure of the tax; conveying rather the idea of gain or increase arising from corporate activities. As was said in Stratton's Independence v. Howbert, 231 U. S. 399, 415, "Income may be defined as the gain derived from capital, from labor, or from both combined." Understanding the term in this natural and obvious sense, it cannot be said that a conversion of capital assets invariably produces income. If sold at less than cost, it produces rather loss or outgo. Nevertheless, in many if not in most cases there results a gain that may properly be accounted as a part of the "gross income" received "from all sources," and by applying to this the authorized deductions we arrive at "net income." In order to determine whether there has been gain or loss, and the amount of the gain if any, we must withdraw from the gross proceeds an amount sufficient to restore the capital value that existed at the commencement of the period under consideration.

"It is true that this decision deals with income earned from the business activities of corporations, and not in terms with the unearned income of individuals from investments. The principles laid down, however, seem general in their application. Moreover, the corporation tax act provided as a basis of the levy merely 'gross income from all sources,' whereas the corresponding general basis in the Act of September 8, 1916, is 'gains or profits and income derived from any source whatever'—language more apt for the exclusion of 'capital' receipts than the other. . . . Are the proceeds of an accident insurance policy 'gains or profits and income' according to the principles thus laid down by the Supreme Court? The proceeds of life insurance policies are expressly exempted from the act by section 4, nor does the fact that the section refers to them as 'income' seem significant. 'The value of property acquired by gift, bequests, devise, or descent' is treated in the same way, and yet the 'income' from such property is included. This seems to imply that the property itself is capital. As to fire, marine, and casualty insurance, paragraph (a) of section five impliedly prohibits the deduction of losses when compensated for by such insurance."

An inventory taken by a manufacturer of or dealer in merchandise at cost or market value, whichever is lower, is permitted by subdivision (g) of this section and by subdivision (d) of section 13 (see 1916 Supp. p. 334) subject, of course, to regulations made in accordance with said act. The same rule applies to a dealer or merchant in securities; and it is a matter for regulations issued by the Treasury Department under the authority of the aforesaid act to determine what constitutes a dealer or merchant in securities. (1918) 31 Op. Atty.-Gen. 301, wherein it was said:

"In Doyle v. Mitchell Brothers Company, (247 U. S. 179), decided by the Supreme Court on May 20 last, the general meaning of the term 'income' as used in the income-tax acts was defined, and it was held, affirming the opinion of the Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit in Doyle, Collector, v. Mitchell Brothers Company, 235 Fed. 686, as follows:

"In order to determine whether there has been gain or loss, and the amount of the gain, if any, we must withdraw from the gross proceeds an amount sufficient to restore the capital value that existed at the commencement of the period under consideration."

"Applying this rule to the case before the court, it was stated that the Mitchell Bros. Co. deducted from its gross receipts the inventory valuation as of December 31, 1908, of the stumpage cut and converted during the year covered by the tax, and that 'this was in accordance with the true intent and meaning of the act.'"

"It follows necessarily from this opinion that an inventory taken by a manufacturer of or dealer in merchandise at cost or market value, whichever is lower, is permitted by subdivision (g) of section 8 of the Act of September 8, 1916, and by subdivision (d) of section 13, since it cannot be said that this method of computation is upon a basis which does not clearly reflect income, subject, of course, to regulations made in accordance with the act."

"I therefore answer your first question in the affirmative."

"As no valid distinction can be suggested between a dealer in merchandise and a dealer or merchant in securities, I answer your second question likewise in the affirmative. What constitutes a dealer or merchant in securities is a matter for regulations issued by yourself under the authority of the act."

1918 Supp., p. 327, sec. 11 (a).

Association of agriculturists acting as purchasing agents for members.—An association known as "Houlton Grange," composed of persons engaged in agriculture, which acts as the agent of its members for the purchase of goods needed by them, reselling the goods to them at prices fixed by the association, is not exempt from the income tax imposed by this act, because it does not operate under the lodge system or provide for benefits to its members, and because it does not operate as sales agent for the purpose of marketing the products of its members. As far as this tax is concerned the association in question stands upon the same footing as any individual, partnership, or corporation whose business it is to buy and sell merchandise, and the tax is levied not upon the gross income but the net income. (1919) 31 Op. Atty.-Gen. 403, wherein, commenting on subdivisions "First" and "Eleventh," it was said: "The first exception manifestly was intended to apply to well-known classes of associations, the purpose of whose organization—or, at least, one of its purposes—is to provide for the payment of life, sick, accident, or other benefits to the members. Laws providing for the organization of such associations have been enacted in nearly all of the states. They are in substance quasi insurance companies. The act in question has defined in very plain language the associations to which reference is made. They are to be fraternal beneficiary societies or orders, they are to operate under the lodge system, and they are to provide for the payment of life, sick, accident, or other benefits to members. To come within the exemption of the act any association must possess these characteristics. In the present case, as stated by you, the association does not operate under the lodge system and it does not provide for the payment of life, sick, accident, or other benefits such as are usually provided for in a quasi insurance company, which Congress manifestly had in contemplation. Such associations, so far as they are engaged in business at all, are engaged in a species of insurance business. The association now under consideration is actively engaged in the business of buying and selling goods—that is, dealing in merchandise. It has a relief committee, whose members visit sick members and render assistance to them when the association so directs. This is an incident of the fraternal rather than the beneficiary feature of an association. The association in question, in my opinion, is excluded from the exemption both because it does not operate under the lodge system and because it does not, as contemplated by the act, provide for benefits to members.

"The association, it is equally plain, is excluded from the benefits of the second paragraph of the act quoted above. That paragraph manifestly intended to exempt from the tax certain associations of farmers and fruit growers. It did not, however, exempt all such associations. On the contrary, it limited the exemption to such associations as should operate as sales agent for the purpose of marketing the products of its members. This association does not do this. It acts as the agent of its members for carrying on the business of purchasing such goods as the members need and reselling them to the members. In other words, it is not a sales agent, but a purchasing agent. It, in fact, is a dealer in merchandise."

Credit union as "cooperative bank."—Credit unions organized under the laws of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, being in substance and in fact the same as "cooperative banks . . . organized and operated for mutual purposes and without profit," come within the provisions of the fourth paragraph of this section. (1917) 31 Op. Atty-Gen. 176, wherein it was said: "The similarity between credit unions and cooperative banks, as they exist in Massachusetts, is striking. Having in mind the history of the insertion of the fourth paragraph of section 11 of the income tax law, it must be conceded that although credit unions do not come within the letter of the paragraph, such associations are wholly within the intention and meaning of Congress as therein expressed. Because the words 'credit union' were not specifically used is certainly no reason for saying that such organizations are subject to the tax imposed by the act, if on examination of the purpose and object of such associations it appears that they are substantially identical with domestic building and loan associations or cooperative banks 'organized and operated for mutual purposes and without profit.' It is to be presumed that Congress intended that the general terms used in section 11 should be so construed as not to lead to injustice, oppression, or an absurd consequence. Holy Trinity Church v. United States, 143 U. S. 457.

"The history of credit unions in the United States is a brief one, the first credit union being organized in Massachusetts in 1910 under the provisions of chapter 419, acts of 1909, and since that time more than 50 credit unions have commenced operations in that state. The legislatures of New York, Wisconsin, and Texas have authorized the establishment of the system."

Income belonging to a charity.—Income received by a decedent's estate which is bequeathed under the will to a charity is not taxable under this Act, since this section specifically provides that income which belongs to a charitable institution shall not be subject to the tax. Stockton v. Lederer, (E. D. Pa. 1919) 262 Fed. 173. In passing upon this question, the court said: "The argument of counsel for the United States, concisely and perhaps inadequately stated, is that, the estate being an entity or person having an income within the meaning of the tax laws, this income is taxable as such notwithstanding the fact that it ultimately goes to the charity. The thought upon which the argument is based is supported by the statement that, notwithstanding the fact that the estate is large and the income therefrom many times the sum required to meet the annuities, there is no legal certainty that anything will go to the charity. The income as income belonging to the estate is taxable under the provisions of the taxing statute, and is exempt only so far as it goes to the charity. Therefore, if it does not go to the charity, there is no ground of exemption, and as it cannot now be determined with legal certainty that it will go to the charity, it remains taxable. There are at least two obstacles in the way of the acceptance of this argument as sound. One is that there are two grounds of exemption from taxation. A part of the income is exempt because of the exemption in favor of charity. The other part is exempt because it is below in amount the taxable limit. The two take in the whole income, and it is difficult to escape the conclusion that if the whole income is exempt, none of it is taxable. The other obstacle is really the same viewed from a different standpoint. It is that this income is not the income of the estate, but of the parties to whom it is given. The legal representatives of the testator are nothing more than the reservoir and conduit pipe through which the income reaches the beneficiaries of the testator's bounty. If that income is cut off, so that it does not arise or is lost in the hands of the trustees, the loss is the loss of the beneficiaries. This is nothing more than the emphatic statement that the income which the United States is proposing to tax is their income. Moreover, it may be stated in addition that the fact theory upon which counsel for the United States base their argument is wholly fanciful and artificial. Practically speaking, there is a surplus of income which goes to charity, so that the whole fabric of the argument is based upon a legal figment, and to recur to the thought already expressed, as no part of the income is taxable if it is the income of the beneficiaries, we do not see how the fact that the charitable beneficiary may not receive its share in any way affects the question.

"We have dealt with the case as to its facts on the basis of the corpus of the residuary estate, together with the accumulations of income going under the will to the charity. Of course, if there were here an intestacy as to the whole or any part of the estate an entirely different question would arise, because the income which is claimed to be taxable would not be within the exception to the act. We have viewed the question of intestacy as a closed question for the reason that this will has been construed by the state courts, and the finding made thereon fixes the status of all possible claimants. As a consequence we must perforce accept this finding, inasmuch as a finding by this court that any portion of the estate, either corpus or income, passed to distributees under the intestate laws would be the finding of something which does not exist and which legally cannot possibly come into existence. As a further consequence we have not taken up the subject of intestacy, but accept the ruling made that the decedent did not die intestate as to any part of his estate.

"It may be conceded that the income from this estate is within the general taxing clause of the act of Congress because all persons who receive income which ultimately goes to another are required to withhold out of the income a sum equivalent to the normal income tax and render a return thereof, etc. It is to be observed, however, that the income out of which this tax sum is to be withheld is the income of some one who is subject to the tax, and subclause (a) of clause G (38 Stat. 172) provides that income moneys which go to charity and other named institutions of like general character are not within the taxing clause of the act. This statement is made with respect to the provisions of the taxing act of 1913 (Act Oct. 3, 1913, c. 16, 38 Stat. 114) assuming it to include the incomes from unsettled decedents' estates which were included by the act of 1916 (Act Sept. 8, 1916, c. 463, 39 Stat. 756).

"The act of 1917 (Act Oct. 3, 1917, c. 63, 40 Stat. 329), so far as we have been able to discover, does not change the situation. The language employed in the act of 1916, which makes clear the inclusion of incomes from decedents' estates as taxable, is open to a construction which would include the income which is derived from the assets of this estate, but section 11 (a) of the same act specifically provides that income which belongs to a charitable institution shall not be subject to the tax. The part of the income which goes to the sole remaining annuitant is not taxable because of the provision which is in every one of the acts declaring incomes up to a certain amount not to be taxable under the act."

Liability of trustee in bankruptcy to tax.—Only net income earned by a trustee while operating the business of a bankrupt corporation is taxable under paragraph (c) of this section. Accordingly, where a trustee is not carrying on the business of the bankrupt corporation, funds, alleged to constitute net income, which are the result of a compromise made by the trustee with a foreign corporation of a claim for nonpayment of salary and commissions by the foreign corporation to the bankrupt corporation as its agent, are not taxable under this section. In re Heller, (C. Right of state officers to access to returns.—The act of the state of New York (Laws 1917, ch. 726), which imposes a franchise tax on manufacturing and mercantile corporations, does not impose "a general income tax" within the meaning of the proviso of this section authorizing proper state officers to have access to and abstracts of income returns of corporations. Therefore the Secretary of the Treasury is not authorized to grant the request of the governor of New York to have access to the returns of income made to the Federal Government or to abstracts thereof in so far as the request is based upon the aforesaid proviso. Sales in foreign commerce.—The tax levied by this section, and by the analogous sections, upon articles sold by a manufacturer, producer, or importer, does not apply to sales in foreign commerce by a manufacturer, producer, or importer located in one of the several states of the United States.

(1918) 31 Op. Atty-Gen. 299, wherein it was said:

"In my opinion to you of March 12 last (31 Op. 239) I held that section 500 of the Act of October 3, 1917, levying a tax upon the transportation of property from one point in the United States to another should not be held applicable to property in the course of transportation to foreign countries, because such a construction would cause grave doubt as to the validity of that portion of the act, in view of the constitutional prohibition against a tax upon articles exported from any state.

"Since that opinion was rendered the Supreme Court, in the case of Peck v. Lowe, decided May 20 last, has announced at length the principles governing this subject, so as to leave nothing except their intelligent application.

"In the case referred to the court, having before it the unlimited power of Congress to lay taxes on the one hand and the constitutional prohibition that no tax shall be laid on articles exported from any state on the other, stated that the amendment prohibiting a tax on articles exported—

"'Excepts from the range of that power articles in course of exportation, . . . the act or occupation of exporting . . . , bills of lading for articles being exported . . . , charter parties for the carriage of cargoes from state to foreign ports . . . , and policies of marine insurance on articles being exported In short, the court has interpreted the clause as meaning that exportation must be free from taxation, and therefore, as requiring "not simply an omission of a tax upon the articles exported, but also a freedom from any tax which directly burdens the exportation."

"The court then announced as a general principle governing the validity of a tax claimed to be on articles exported that—'The true test of its validity is whether it "so directly and closely" bears on the "process of exporting" as to be in substance a tax on the exportation.'

"Finally, in deciding that a tax on the net income of an exporter was not a tax on the articles exported by him, the court, explaining the extent to which it was prepared to go, stated that such a tax upon the net income of the individual engaged in the business of exporting was not a tax 'on anything which inherently or by the usages of commerce is embraced in exportation or any of its processes.'

"The inference necessarily and justly is that a tax upon anything which inherently or by the usages of commerce is embraced in exportation or any of its processes is a tax upon 'articles exported' within the meaning of the Constitution.

"The tax levied by section 600 of the Act of October 3, 1917, and by the analogous sections is clearly one on sales, and it is measured by the price for which the article is sold. If, therefore, this tax be held to apply to sales in foreign commerce, its incidence will be directly upon a process inherently embraced in exportation to as full an extent as a tax on freights, on the charter party, or on the policy of insurance.

"The subject matter of your question is therefore governed by my opinion to you of March 12 last, confirmed by the principles stated by the Supreme Court in Peck v. Lowe, 247 U. S. 165, 173, 174."

Sale of truck in parts.—No tax is imposed by this section on the sale by different persons of parts of automobile trucks to be assembled for the purchaser. Rech-Marbaker Co. v. Lederer, (E. D. Pa. 1919) 263 Fed. 593.

Who is "manufacturer of shells."—A corporation which, having contracted to manufacture and deliver to a foreign government high explosive shells, enters into contracts with others for the performance of the necessary operations to produce a completed shell, doing none of the work itself except the manufacturing of steel in bar form suitable for the shells, and the furnishing its subcontractors with certain other materials such as "transit plugs," "fixing screws," and "copper tubing," is subject to the munitions manufacturers' tax imposed upon every person manufacturing projectiles, shells, or torpedoes of any kind. Carbon Steel Co. v. Lewellyn, (1920) 251 U. S. 501, 40 S. Ct. 283, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) — (affirming (C. C. A. 3d Cir. 1919) 258 Fed. 533, 169 C. C. A. 473), wherein it was further held that the question whether the subcontractors of a corporation which has contracted to manufacture and deliver to a foreign government high explosive shells were correctly assessed under the munitions tax did not concern the corporation in its efforts to resist such a tax on the profits made by it.

The net profits received by a corporation from the manufacture and sale of certain steel forgings to be used by the vendee to fulfill the latter's contract to supply a foreign government with high explosive shells are taxable under this section, imposing a tax on any person manufacturing shells or any part of them. Forged Steel Wheel Co. v. Lewellyn, (1920) 251 U. S. 511, 40 S. Ct. 285, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) 1, affirming (C. C. A. 3d Cir. 1919) 258 Fed. 533, 169 C. C. A. 473.

A corporation which, under inspection in behalf of the French government, made the steel for and did the forging on certain shell bodies under an order from another corporation, to enable the latter to carry out its contract with such government for certain explosive shells, was engaged in manufacturing a part of such shells within the meaning of the Munition Manufacturers' Tax Act imposing a tax upon the profits of every person manufacturing projectiles, shells, or torpedoes, or any part of any such articles. Worth Bros. Co. v. Lederer, (1920) 251 U. S. 507, 40 S. Ct. 282, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (C. C. A. 3d Cir. 1919) 258 Fed. 533, 169 C. C. A. 473.

Policies of insurance issued by state under State Workmen's Compensation Act.—Policies of insurance issued by the state of Pennsylvania under the provisions of the State Workmen's Compensation Act are not subject to the special tax imposed upon policies of insurance by this section and paragraph. Borrowing and return of shares.—The stamp tax imposed by this section applies to the so-called borrowing and return of shares or certificates of stock. (1918) 31 Op. Atty-Gen. 256, wherein, answering a letter of the Secretary of the Treasury, it was said:

"You inclose a copy of an opinion rendered you by the Solicitor of Internal Revenue to the effect that the transfer of the stock from the lender to the borrower, and later from the borrower to the lender in fulfillment of the former's obligation, are both subject to the tax. With this conclusion I agree for the following reasons:

"1. The act by its express terms, it will be observed, covers every transfer of the legal title to shares of stock with certain specific exceptions. There can certainly be no doubt that there is a transfer of the legal title from the lender to the borrower and later from the borrower to the lender under the circumstances stated. Shares of stock are fungible things, and their loan with an agreement to return things of the same class is the mutuum of Roman law, as to which no one can doubt that title passed from the lender to the borrower and vice versa. . . .

2 It cannot be said that the borrower is a mere agent between the lender and the vendee, so as to make what is in appearance two transactions in reality only one. There is no privity between the lender and the vendee. The former looks merely to the borrower and assumes no relationship further. There are, therefore, in substance, two transactions, a transfer by the lender to the borrower, and a transfer by the latter to the vendee, and the tax must be paid on each. . . . 3. As for the provisos in subdivision 4, they should receive a fair interpretation in connection with the whole, but there must be clear language before it can be assumed that exemption from taxation was intended. . . . The first proviso deals with deposits of stock as collateral security for a loan, and the second with the transfer of stock between a broker and his customer. Under no fair interpretation can either be held to cover the loan of stock under the circumstances now under consideration.

"A loan of stock cannot be called a pledge thereof within the meaning of the first proviso. The transaction is, in effect, the reverse of that covered by the proviso. In the latter case, money is loaned, and stock is deposited as collateral for its return. In the case now in question stock is loaned and money is deposited as collateral for its return. In one case the debt is money, in the other stock. . . . As to the second proviso, it is sufficient to say that the relationship between the lender and the borrower in the present case is not, in any sense, that of a broker buying and selling stocks for a customer."

Constitutionality of provision affecting judge.—The provision of this section imposing an income tax on the salaries of United States judges is unconstitutional as in violation of art. III, sec. 1 (see vol. XI, p. 72), providing that all federal judges shall at stated times receive for their services a compensation "which shall not be diminished during their continuance in office." Evans v. Gore, (1920) 253 U. S. 245, 40 S. Ct. 550, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, reversing (W. D. Ky. 1919) 262 Fed. 550.

Salaries and wages of state officials and employees are not subject to an income tax. (1919) 31 Op. Atty-Gen. 441, wherein it was said:

"In my opinion the Solicitor of Internal Revenue has reached the correct conclusion. This conclusion rests upon the well-settled rule that the governmental agencies of the states are not subject to taxation by the Federal Government, just as the governmental agencies of the Federal Government are not subject to taxation by the states. Collector v. Day, 11 Wall. 113; Pollock v. Farmers' Loan & Trust Company, 157 U. S. 429; McCulloch v. Maryland, 4 Wheat. 316, 427; Dobbins v. Commissioners of Erie County, 16 Pet. 435.

"The Act in question provides that the taxable income shall include, among other things, gains, profits, and income derived from salaries, wages, or compensation for personal service. It does not specifically mention, by way either of inclusion or exclusion, salaries or wages of state officials or employees. Since, however, there cannot be any doubt that such wages and salaries are beyond the taxing power of Congress, it cannot be assumed that they were intended to be included under the general head of wages and salaries mentioned in the Act. The Act must be construed as applying only to such wages and salaries as can be constitutionally taxed by the Federal Government."

Who may administer oaths to returns.—Section 406 of the regulations promulgated under this Act authorizes commissioners of deeds to take oaths to individual income tax returns. U. S. v. Benowitz, (S. D. N. Y. 1919) 262 Fed. 223, wherein it was said:

"Section 406 begins by the bare statement that all returns must be verified on oath, in that respect merely repealing the statute. Yet it very clearly intended—though it must be confessed it is very blindly worded—to cover the whole matter, because it at once proceeds to particulars, providing that soldiers and sailors may take oaths before any one generally authorized to administer oaths to soldiers and sailors and that persons abroad may go to consular officers. It is, of course, absurd to suppose that the section taken as a whole meant to say that only such officers might administer oaths. If so, no one need, or indeed could, verify his return unless it were soldiers and sailors and persons abroad. This would repeal the statute in substance; indeed, such a regulation would be illegal.

"Finally, the section concludes with a provision for the certification of oaths taken by a 'foreign notary or other official having no seal.' This, of course, directly implies that foreign notaries may take such oaths, and that there are also officials so authorized who have no seals other than they. It is perfectly apparent from this language that those who drafted the section must have supposed that the first sentence authorized some officers to take oaths, for the last sentence from which the question was taken would be without any conceivable meaning if they did not, just as the second and third sentences, while logically possible, would be absurd and indeed invalid in law. If so, the only question is as to what officers the draftsmen of the section must have meant.

"Much the most rational, and, so far as I can see, the only possible, interpretation is that they meant to include all such as were authorized by the local law to take oaths in their several districts. If I do not so interpret the language, I must suppose that the regulation which was meant to put the statute into effect illegally defeated it by applying it in a whimsically capricious way. I interpret the regulation, therefore, as intended to allow a commissioner of deeds, among other officials, to take such an oath."

Return by executor.—If a person is deceased and his estate is subject to the tax the return must be made by the executor of the estate if there is one. In re Hazard, (1920) 228 N. Y. 26, 126 N. E. 345.

Contributions to charities, etc.—Corporations are not entitled to deduct from their gross income for the purposes of the income tax the amount of contributions made to religious, charitable, scientific, or educational corporations or associations, even though such contributions are made to the Red Cross or other war activities. (1919) 31 Op. Atty.-Gen. 617, wherein it was said:

"The question presented is not whether corporations may lawfully make such contributions or gifts, but whether they fall within one of the deductions allowed to be made from gross income in ascertaining the net incomes of corporations subject to the tax. It is clear that there is no express deduction permitted of such contributions or gifts, and unless, therefore, they fall within the definition of some item of deduction allowed to corporations by section 234, Part III, Title II, of said Revenue Act, they are not permitted.

"The only head within which it might be suggested that such contributions could be included is that of expenses.

"The language used in this exemption is very guarded, and permits the deduction only of—

"All the ordinary and necessary expenses paid or incurred during the taxable year in carrying on any trade or business, including a reasonable allowance for salaries or other compensation for personal services actually rendered, and including rentals or other payments required to be made as a condition to the continued use or possession of property to which the corporation has not taken or is not taking title, or in which it has no equity." (40 Stat. 1077.)

"It will be observed that all expenses are not allowed, but only ordinary and necessary expenses; also, of ordinary and necessary expenses, only those paid or incurred in carrying on any trade or business, including reasonable salaries or compensation, rentals, and payments for use of property as above defined. Practically these same deductions are permitted in section 214 in the case of individuals; and had such words included the contributions or gifts mentioned in paragraph 11 of section 214, it would have been unnecessary to put in such paragraph, as they would have been covered by paragraph 1 of said section. It is also evident that the ordinary and necessary expenses contemplated by paragraph 1 of sections 214 and 234, allowing deduction of ordinary and necessary expenses paid or incurred during the taxable year in carrying on any trade or business in the case of both individuals and corporations, were not intended to include all necessary expenses, because the two immediately succeeding paragraphs provide for deducting interest and taxes, both of which will be recognized as necessary expenses; also the provision in regard to allowance for salaries, compensation, rentals, etc., indicates that all of the expenses, which are contemplated under the terms used in paragraph 1 of these two sections, are expenses incurred directly in the maintenance and operation of the business, and not all those which may be beneficial or even necessary in the broader sense.

"In addition to the above considerations, and to the fact that there is express provision for deducting contributions or gifts in the case of individuals, which is wanting in the section providing for deductions to be made by corporations, the Congressional Record shows that when the revenue bill was under consideration an amendment was offered providing that corporations might make deductions of contributions or gifts as in the case of individuals. This amendment came to a vote and was defeated, the principal reason assigned in the debate being that it would be dangerous to authorize directors to be generous with the money of their stockholders even for such laudable purposes. This presents, therefore, a legislative history, not only showing the impressions of individual members, but an action by one of the Houses of Congress expressly refusing to permit the deduction under consideration in the case of corporations."

Tax as payable out of estate rather than legacies.—The tax imposed by this section is payable out of the estate and is not a tax on legacies to be paid by legatees. *Plunkett v. Policies issued on weekly or monthly payment plan.—In calculating the tax imposed by the proviso of this section, on casualty insurance policies, issued on the weekly or monthly payment plan, only the regular weekly or monthly premium can be included and the policy fee must be excluded. (1919) 31 Op. Atty-Gen. 398 wherein it was said: "In the case of casualty insurance generally, the tax is a fixed per cent of 'the premium charged' under each policy. In the case of industrial insurance, however, it is a fixed per cent of the amount of the first weekly or monthly premium. In this class of insurance there is a fixed sum, the payment of which is to recur each week or each month, and which is known as a weekly or monthly premium. In addition, upon the issuance of the policy a fixed sum is charged and called a policy fee, and this is paid to the agent for his services. In a sense, at least, this may be called a premium, since it is a part of the consideration paid for the issuance of the policy. And in the case of marine, inland, and fire insurance, as well as casualty insurance in general, where the tax is levied on 'the premium charged,' it would probably be treated as a part of the premium. But in the case under consideration the language used is different. It is a fixed per cent of the amount of the first weekly or monthly premium. A weekly premium is one which must be paid each week during the life of the policy. Manifestly, the amount of the weekly premium is the amount which must be paid regularly week after week. The tax is not levied on the first payment, but on the first weekly or monthly premium. The first payment, as actually made, consists of two items: a fixed sum or policy fee, and the amount which must be paid regularly each week or each month thereafter. Congress could, of course, have made the amount which the insured is required to pay upon the delivery of the policy the basis for the tax. On the other hand, it could, if it saw fit, measure the tax by the amount to be paid regularly each week or month. Every person taking such insurance understands that what is meant by a weekly premium is the amount which he must pay at weekly intervals. I think Congress has manifested a clear intention to make this amount the basis for the tax and that the policy fee is entirely separate and distinct from the weekly or monthly premium. I am therefore of opinion that in calculating the tax only the regularly weekly or monthly premium can be included and that the policy fee must be excluded."

Sales to state or political subdivision.—The excise tax imposed by this section upon sales by manufacturers, producers, or importers of the articles enumerated in said section, applies to sales of such designated articles to a state or a political subdivision thereof, except those articles specified in subdivision 10 of the section. (1919) 31 Op. Atty.-Gen. 520, wherein it was said: "The United States, of course, cannot tax the property or the instrumentalities of a state, but here the tax is not laid upon either the property or the instrumentalities of the state. If it reaches the state at all it does so only in an indirect manner. The tax is laid upon the manufacturer, and while it is probable that he will pass it on to the consumer, the tax itself is not laid upon the consumer. The burden, therefore, if it falls upon the state, does so indirectly. Such an incidental and indirect effect results from the payment of all taxes, and while this tax may be traced more directly into the cost to the state, yet the fact remains that it is an incidental and indirect burden upon the state and not the taxation of either its property or its instrumentalities."

VI. VALIDITY OF STATE STATUTES (p. 340)

Statute of limitations.—In the absence of a federal statute or a rule of the Interstate Commerce Commission the state statute of limitations governs as to the time for beginning an action by a carrier to recover the difference between an undercharge and the established rate. St. Louis Southwestern R. Co. v. Shields Grain, etc., Co., (Tex. Civ. App. 1920) 220 S. W. 183.

VIII. PERSONS, ETC., SUBJECT TO ACT

2. Telegraph Companies (p. 343)

In general.—To the same effect as the original annotation, see Western Union Tel. Co. v. Hanlin, (Ind. App. 1920) 125 N. E. 45.

The federal government has assumed charge of the field of interstate commerce, and by the Act of Congress approved June 18, 1910, has assumed charge of interstate commerce by telegraph, and thereby has removed and exempted the same from the field of state regulation or interference. Congress has conferred upon the Interstate Commerce Commission full power over rates, charges, facilities, classifications, and practices of telegraph companies engaged in interstate commerce, and has given to the Interstate Commerce Commission power to approve, alter, or acquiesce in existing rates or classifications. Klotz v. Western Union Tel. Co., (Ia. 1920) 175 N. W. 825.

Restriction on state authority—Penalizing delay on delivering message.—Congress has so far taken possession of the field by enacting the provisions of the Act of June 18, 1910, bringing telegraph companies under the Act to Regulate Commerce, as well as placing them under the administrative control of the Interstate Commerce Commission, as to prevent a state from thereafter penalizing the negligent failure of a telegraph company to deliver promptly an interstate telegram in that state. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Boegli, (1920) 251 U. S. 315, 40 S. Ct. 167, 64 U. S. (L. ed.)—, (reversing (1917) 187 Ind. 238, 115 N. E. 773) wherein the court said: "The Telegraph Company challenged the right to subject it to a penalty fixed by a law of Indiana for failure to deliver promptly in that state a telegram sent there from a point in Illinois, on the ground that the Act of Congress of June 18, 1910 (36 Stat. 539, 545, c. 309), amending the Act to Regulate Commerce (Act Feb. 4, 1887, c. 104, 24 Stat. 379), had deprived the state of all power in the premises. The court conceding that if the act of Congress dealt with the subject the state statute would be inoperative, imposed the penalty on the ground that the act of 1910 did not extend to that field. The correctness of this conclusion is the one controversy with which the arguments are concerned.

"The proposition that the act of 1910 must be narrowly construed so as to preserve the reserved power of the state over the subject in hand, although it is admitted that that power is in its nature federal and may be exercised by the state only because of nonaction by Congress, is obviously too conflicting and unsound to require further notice. We therefore consider the statute in the light of its text and, if there be ambiguity, of its context, in order to give effect to the intent of Congress as manifested in its enactment.

"As the result of doing so, we are of opinion that the provisions of the statute bringing telegraph companies under the Act to Regulate Commerce, as well as placing them under the administrative control of the Interstate Commerce Commission, so clearly establish the purpose of Congress to subject such companies to a uniform national rule as to cause it to be certain that there was no room thereafter for the exercise by the several states of power to regulate, by penalizing the negligent failure to deliver promptly an interstate telegram, and that the court below erred, therefore, in imposing the penalty fixed by the state statute.

"We do not pursue the subject further; since the effect of the Act of 1910 in taking possession of the field was recently determined in exact accordance with the conclusion we have just stated. Postal Telegraph Co. v. Warren-Godwin Lumber Co., 251 U. S. 27, 40 Sup. Ct. Rep. 69. That case, indeed, was concerned only with the operation, after the passage of the Act of 1910, of a state statute rendering illegal a clause of a contract for sending an interstate telegram limiting the amount of recovery under the conditions stated in case of an unrepeatable message; but the ruling that the effect of the Act of 1910 was to exclude the possibility thereafter of applying the state law was rested, not alone upon the special provisions of the Act of 1910, relating to unrepeatable messages, but upon the necessary effect of the general provisions of that act, bringing telegraph companies under the control of the Interstate Commerce Act. The contention as to the continuance of state power here made is therefore adversely foreclosed. Indeed, in the previous case the principal authorities here relied upon to sustain the continued right to exert state power after the passage of the Act of 1910 were disapproved, and various decisions of state courts of last resort to the contrary, one or more dealing with the subject now in hand, were approvingly cited."

State statutes imposing a penalty for delay in transmission are inapplicable to an interstate message. Foster v. Western Union Tel. Co., (Mo. App. 1920) 219 S. W. 107.

Telegram to point in same state relayed at office in another state as interstate telegram.—A message addressed to a point within the state but sent to a point without and thence relayed to destination is an interstate message. Keippel v. Western Union Tel. Co., (Kan. 1920) 186 Pac. 993.

It has been held, however, that where a telegram is sent from a point in a state to another point in the same state it is an intrastate telegram if unnecessarily relayed at an office of the company in another state. Speight v. Western Union Tel. Co., (1919) 178 N. C. 146, 100 S. E. 351, which further held that where a telegraph company has direct available facilities for transmitting an intrastate telegram altogether within the state, and relays it at offices in another state, the burden of proof is upon it to show that it was not done to evade the jurisdiction of the state court.

Mental anguish is not an element of recovery for failure to deliver an interstate message. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Kilgore, (Tex. Civ. App. 1920) 220 S. W. 593.

Punitive damages.—Punitive damages will not lie against a telegraph company for alleged negligent failure to properly transmit and promptly deliver a message sent by the plaintiff where even assuming that the conduct of the defendants' agent showed a reckless disregard of the rights of the plaintiff, the testimony failed to show that the principal either expressly or impliedly participated in the wrongful act. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Norman, (Miss. 1920) 83 So. 465, wherein the court said: "Whether or not the plaintiff is entitled to recover punitive damages in this case is to be governed by the law announced by the United States Supreme Court. Byers' Case, supra [240 U. S. 612, 36 Sup. Ct. 410, 60 L. Ed. 826, L. R. A. 1917A 197]. In the case of Railroad Co. v. Prentice, 147 U. S. 101, 13 Sup. Ct. 261, 37 L. Ed. 97, the leading case of that court upon the subject of the recovery of punitive damages, it is held that punitive damages are not recoverable against the principal, unless the principal participated in the wrongful act of the agent, expressly or impliedly, by his conduct authorizing it or approving it, either before or after it was committed."

IX. COMMERCE AS INTERSTATE OR INTRA-STATE (p. 348)

Shipment passing out of state en route.—A shipment from one point to another in the same state but which en route passes through another state is interstate. St. Louis Southwestern R. Co. v. Shields Grain, etc., Co., (Tex. Civ. App. 1920) 220 S. W. 183.

Effect of division of territory.—When after the passage of the Interstate Commerce Act the territory of Oklahoma was carved out of Indian territory, commerce between Oklahoma and the remaining Indian territory became interstate and was thereafter governed by the Act. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Gist, (Okla. 1920) 190 Pac. 878.

8. Telegraph Messages (p. 358)

Addressee of telegram as bound by conditions between sender and telegraph company.—All just and reasonable conditions and regulations, prescribed in a contract between a telegraph company and the sender of a message, are binding on the addressee, whether his action to recover damages for breach of duty be in tort or in assumpsit on the contract. Durham v. Western Union Tel. Co., (W. Va. 1920) 102 S. E. 113.

Rates for use of private wires as discriminatory.—In Postal Tel.-Cable Co. v. Associated Press, (1920) 228 N. Y. 370, 127 N. E. 256 (affirming (1918) 184 App. Div. 590, 171 N. Y. S. 791), the action was on contracts to recover compensation for the use by the defendant of private wires of the plaintiff. The contracts provided for a fixed rate of compensation, but thereafter and during the time of the contract the plaintiff reduced its rates for like service to others. It was held that the recovery should be limited to the then prevailing rates. The court said: "In August, 1912, the Postal Telegraph-Cable Company made a contract to furnish to the Associated Press the use of two private wires between Omaha, Neb., and San Francisco, Cal., for five years from November 1, 1912, one wire to be used day and night, except between the hours of 5 a. m. and 8 a. m., and the other to be used at night from 6 p. m. to 11 p. m., at the yearly rate for each wire of $24 per mile for service by day, and $12 per mile for service by night. On December 29, 1912, there was a like contract for two private wires between Chicago and Omaha. On January 1, 1915, there was a contract at the same rates, but for the term of one year, for a private wire between Lincoln and Omaha, Neb., and Sioux City, Iowa. On March 14, 1915, there was a contract of indefinite duration, but at the same rates, for a private wire between Omaha and Sioux City. In September, 1915, the telegraph company established new rates for night service upon private wires used by press associations and newspapers. Rates for press associations or news agencies were reduced on September 1, 1915, from $12 to $6, and on September 15, 1915, from $6 to $3. Rates for newspapers were reduced from $10 to $5, and from $5 to $2.50. The benefit of these reductions was refused by the telegraph company to the news agency conducted by the defendant under the name of the Associated Press. This action is brought to recover compensation, at the rates fixed in the contracts, for the use by the defendant of private wires in August, September, and October, 1915. The judgment of the Trial Term, affirmed by the Appellate Division, limits the recovery during the months of September and October to the then prevailing rates. The plaintiff, complaining of the limitation, appeals to this court.

state commerce imposes upon the plaintiff, an interstate telegraph line, the duty of fairness and equality in the treatment of its customers (Interstate Commerce Act, § 1, subd. 3, and sections 2 and 3). It must serve them at reasonable rates and without unjust discrimination. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Call Co., 181 U. S. 92, 21 Sup. Ct. 561, 45 L. Ed. 765. Discrimination between the defendant and its competitors there has been. The plaintiff denies, however, that the discrimination is unjust. The argument is twofold. There was no duty, we are told, to extend the new schedule to unexpired contracts. That excuse, if valid, applies to all the leases. If it fails, there was still no duty, we are told, to extend the new schedule to the contract for service between Omaha and San Francisco, because of extraordinary conditions permitting extraordinary charges.

"I think the plaintiff cannot justify discrimination among customers by dividing contracts into new and old, and applying a different rate to each. The law says that under like conditions of service, charges shall be equal. The customer who covenants to pay in accordance with a schedule does not put himself outside of the protection of the statute, and give license to the carrier to show favor to his rivals. His covenant is made in contemplation of the carrier's duty so to operate a public business that discrimination will be avoided and equality maintained. I do not mean, of course, that equality must be absolute. By express permission of the statute, messages may be divided 'into day, night, repeated, unpeated, letter, commercial, press, government, and such other classes as may be just and reasonable,' and different rates may be charged for the different classes (Interstate Commerce Act, § 1, subd. 3; Matter of Private Wire Contracts, 50 Interst. Com. Com'n R. 731). But classes are not 'just and reasonable' when the only principle of classification is one of order in time, with a resulting division between old customers and new. Favoritism would be unchecked if such a classification were accepted. Authority, which the statute gives, to distinguish between press messages and others, is not authority to distinguish between the press of to-day and the press of to-morrow, any more than between the press of here and the press of there. Division into classes is not the same thing as division into strata. No one would assert that a contract for a term of years would permit a carrier to discriminate in favor of old customers to the prejudice of new. Congress did not mean that it should be used as an excuse for discriminating in favor of new customers to the prejudice of old. A schedule that cannot be maintained against a revision of rates upwards will not be interpreted as intended to survive a revision of rates downwards. The obligation of the law qualifies, and, in case of conflict, overrides, the obligation of the contract. For this conclusion, I think, the authorities are ample."

Limitation of liability.—Congress has so far occupied the entire field of the interstate business of telegraph companies by enacting this provision respecting interstate telegraph rates, as to exclude state action, invalidating a contract limiting the liability of a telegraph company for error in sending an unrepeat interstate message to the refunding of the price paid for the transmission of the message. Postal Tel.-Cable Co. v. Warren-Godwin Lumber Co., (1919) 251 U. S. 27, 40 S. Ct. 69, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —(reversing (1917) 116 Miss. 660, 77 So. 601), wherein the court said: "We come at once therefore to state briefly the reasons why we conclude that the court below mistakenly limited the Act of Congress of 1910 and why therefore its judgment was erroneous.

"In the first place, as it is apparent on the face of the Act of 1910, that it was intended to control telegraph companies by the Act to Regulate Commerce, we think it clear that the Act of 1910 was designed to and did subject such companies as to their interstate business to the rule of equality and uniformity of rates which it was manifestly the dominant purpose of the Act to Regulate Commerce to establish, a purpose which would be wholly destroyed if, as held by the court below, the validity of contracts made by telegraph companies as to their interstate commerce business continued to be subjected to the control of divergent and it may be conflicting local laws.

"In the second place, as in terms the Act empowered telegraph companies to establish reasonable rates, subject to the control which the Act to Regulate Commerce exerted, it follows that the power thus given, limited of course by such control, carried with it the primary authority to provide a rate for unrepeat telegrams and the right to fix a reasonable limitation of responsibility where such rate was charged, since, as pointed out in the Primrose Case [154 U. S. 1], the right to contract on such subject was embraced within the grant of the primary rate-making power.

"In the third place, as the Act expressly provided that the telegraph, telephone or cable messages to which it related may be 'classified into day, night, repeated, unrepeat letter, commercial, press, government, and such other classes as are just and reasonable, and different rates may be charged for the different classes of messages,' it would seem unmistakably to draw under the federal control the very power which the construction given below to the act necessarily excluded from such control. Indeed, the conclusive force of this view is made additionally cogent when it is considered that as pointed out by the Interstate Commerce Commission (Clay County Produce Co. v. Western Union Telegraph Co., 44 I. C. C.

670) from the very inception of the telegraph business, or at least for a period of forty years before 1910, the unrepeat message was one sent under a limited rate and subject to a limited responsibility of the character of the one here in contest.

"But we need pursue the subject no further, since, if not technically authoritatively controlled, it is in reason persuasively settled by the decision of the Interstate Commerce Commission in dealing in the case above cited with the very question here under consideration as the result of the power conferred by the Act of Congress of 1910; by the careful opinion of the Circuit Court of Appeals of the Eighth Circuit dealing with the same subject (Gardiner v. Western Union Telegraph Company, 231 Fed. 405, 145 C. C. A. 399); and by the numerous and conclusive opinions of state courts of last resort which in considering the Act of 1910 from various points of view reached the conclusion that that Act was an exertion by Congress of its authority to bring under federal control the interstate business of telegraph companies and therefore was an occupation of the field by Congress which excluded state action." See to the same effect Western Union Tel. Co. v. Hanlin, (Ind. App. 1920) 125 N. E. 45; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Wright, (Fla. 1920) 84 So. 604; Western Union Tel. Co. v. McDavid, (Tex. Civ. App. 1920) 219 S. W. 853. See contra Bowman, etc., Co. v. Postal Tel.-Cable Co., (1919) 290 Ill. 155, 124 N. E. 851, decided prior to the decision of the United States Supreme Court considered above.

The liability of a telegraph company for a negligent error in sending an unrepeat message may be limited to the amount paid for the transmission of the message in accordance with a stipulation contained on the back of the telegraph blank. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Norman, (Miss. 1920) 83 So. 465, wherein the court said:

"The second plea of the appellate company alleged, in substance, that the message in question was delivered to and accepted by the appellant company subject to the terms of a certain contract in writing, a copy of which is attached and made a part of this plea; that one of these terms and conditions is that the company should not be liable for mistakes or delays in the transmission or delivery or for nondelivery of any unrepeat message beyond the amount received for sending the same, and that the message in this case was an unrepeat message; that by the Act of Congress approved June 18, 1910 (36 Stat. 530, c. 309), the Congress of the United States assumed charge of regulating the field of interstate communication by telegraph, and conferred upon the Interstate Commerce Commission full power over the rates, charges, and practices of telegraph companies engaged in interstate commerce with reference to such interstate commerce, and conferred on the Interstate Commerce Commission power to approve, alter, or acquiesce in existing rates and classifications; that the Interstate Commerce Commission prior to the filing of the message in question had approved the rates of the appellant company, and for these reasons that the stipulations in the contract, subject to which the message was accepted, which limit the defendant's liability to the price of the message, were reasonable, and valid and binding. The record does not show that a demurrer was filed to this plea, neither does it show that issue was taken upon it, but from the entire record it is apparent that the case was tried upon the assumption that this plea was insufficient as a matter of law. In fact at the time of the trial of the case the cases of Dickerson v. Western Union Tel. Co., 114 Miss. 115, 74 So. 779, and Warren-Godwin Lumber Co. v. Postal Tel. & Cable Co., 116 Miss. 660, 77 So. 601, the latest announcements of this court upon this question, expressly held that these stipulations appearing upon the back of the telegraph blanks were unreasonable and void, and the learned circuit judge followed the ruling as announced in these two cases in so holding in this case. The question was further submitted to the jury as to whether or not punitive damages could be recovered by the plaintiff. The jury rendered a verdict in favor of the plaintiff in the court below for $450, from which judgment this appeal is prosecuted.

"This court held in the case of Western Union Tel. Co. v. Showers, 112 Miss. 411, 73 South. 276, that Congress by the Act of June 18, 1910, had taken possession of the field of interstate commerce by telegraph to the exclusion of the power of the state to legislate with reference thereto. This decision was subsequently overruled by the Dickerson Case, supra. The question decided in the case of Warren-Godwin Lumber Company, supra, is the identical question now before us, namely, whether or not the liability of the telegraph company for a negligent error in sending an unrepeatable message would be limited to the amount paid for the transmission of the message in accordance with the stipulation contained on the telegram. This court, following its decision in the Dickerson Case, held that this stipulation was void. This Warren-Godwin Lumber Co. Case has been lately decided by the Supreme Court of the United States, and the judgment of this court is by it reversed. 25 U. S. 27, 40 Sup. Ct. 69, 64 L. Ed. —. In this opinion the Supreme Court of the United States holds that the Act of 1910 'was intended to control telegraph companies by the Act to Regulate Commerce,' and that this Act subjects telegraph companies 'as to their interstate business to the rule of equality and uniformity of rates which it was manifestly the dominant purpose of the Act to Regulate Commerce to establish, a purpose which would be wholly destroyed if . . . the validity of contracts made by telegraph companies as to their interstate commerce business continued to be subject to the control of divergent, and it may be conflicting, local laws.' This opinion holds that the stipulation in the contract above referred to is a valid and binding one. Primrose v. Western Union Tel. Co., 154 U. S. 1, 14 Sup. Ct. 1098, 38 L. Ed. 883. . . . It follows that the special plea referred to is a good plea as a matter of law. The cases of Dickerson v. Western Union Tel. Co., 114 Miss. 115, 74 South. 779, and Warren-Godwin Lumber Co. v. Postal Tel. & Cable Co., 116 Miss. 660, 77 South. 601, or such parts of them as are in conflict with this opinion, are hereby expressly overruled."

In Klotz v. Western Union Tel. Co., (Ia. 1920) 175 N. W. 825, which was an action by the sendee of a telegram against the telegraph company sending it for failure to deliver it within a reasonable time after it was received by the company, a written contract on the back of the telegram was held valid which limited the company's liability to fifty dollars and contained statements that it had filed its tariff rates with the Interstate Commerce Commission, and these rates had been approved; that its messages were classified therein as messages valued at fifty dollars and messages valued in excess of fifty dollars; that its tariff rates were based upon the value of the message so fixed; that when the value was more than fifty dollars an additional charge was made. The court said: "That the regulation of interstate commerce by telegraph has been taken over and is exclusively within the jurisdiction of the federal law has been settled by the Supreme Court of the United States. It has been settled by that tribunal that a sender of a telegram is bound by the conditions and limitations in the telegram as to the amount for which the company shall be liable in case of a failure to exercise reasonable care in delivering the telegram. Primrose v. Western Union Tel. Co., 154 U. S. 1, 14 Sup. Ct. 1098, 38 L. Ed. 883, in which it was held that such a contract was not one exempting the company from liability for its negligence, but merely a reasonable condition, approximately adjusting the charge, for services rendered, to the duty and responsibility exacted for its performance. The doctrine of the Primrose Case, so far as it affects the question under consideration, has been recently reaffirmed in Postal Telegraph-Cable Co. v. Warren-Godwin Lumber Co., decided at the October term, 1919, of that court, 25 U. S. 27, 40 Sup. Ct. 69, 64 L. Ed. —. The opinion was written by Chief Justice White. . . .

"It was there held that the Act of Congress was an exertion by Congress of its authority to bring under federal control the interstate business of telegraph companies, and therefore was an occupation of the field by Congress which excluded state action.

"Without repeating the reason upon which these decisions rest, we are bound by them."

This section warrants a telegraph company in inserting, as a condition of its contract with the sender of a message, that in no event shall it be liable for damages "for any mistakes or delays in the transmission or delivery, or for the nondelivery, of this telegram, whether caused by the negligence of its servants or otherwise, beyond the sum of fifty dollars, at which amount this telegram is hereby valued, unless a greater value is stated in writing hereon at the time the telegram is offered to the company for transmission, and an additional sum paid or agreed to be paid based on such value equal to one-tenth of one per cent thereof." Such a condition is a reasonable regulation within the purview of the federal statute. Dunham v. Western Union Tel. Co., (W. Va. 1920) 102 S. E. 113, which further held that a condition in a contract for the transmission of a telegram, prescribing free delivery limits to the radius of one mile in cities of five thousand population or more, and to one-half mile in smaller towns, is a reasonable regulation, and that a condition in such contract, relieving a telegraph company from liability for damages unless the claim therefor is presented in writing within sixty days, is also a reasonable and valid regulation.

"By the Act of Congress approved June 18, 1910, telegraph companies, as to their interstate and foreign business, have been placed under the supervision of the Interstate Commerce Commission, and . . . the Act has occupied the entire field and taken complete control of the regulation of telegraph companies to the exclusion of state laws." Rasher-Kingman-Herrin Co. v. Postal Tel.-Cable Co., (1919) 108 Wash. 543, 185 Pac. 947, 1119, holding to be valid a limitation of liability for error in an unreported message.

Vol. IV, p. 359, sec. 1 [D]. [First ed., 1912 Supp., p. 113.]

Suit to enjoin change in classification.—The issuance of a supplement to the general classification whereby certain commodities are excluded from shipment, may be enjoined without resort to the Interstate Commerce Commission. Viscose Co. v. Hines, (E. D. Pa. 1920) 263 Fed. 726, wherein the court said:

"If the commission has power to pass upon the question, that power must appear somewhere in the acts of Congress. There is no question here of reasonableness of rates, nor of classification affecting rates, nor of discrimination, nor of undue preference or advantage, nor of the construction of tariffs. All of such questions are committed to the commission under the policy requiring uniformity of decision upon these matters. What the defendant has done is the same thing that is denominated in Louisville & Nashville Railroad Co. v. Cook Brewing Co., 223 U. S. 70, 32 Sup. Ct. 189, 56 L. Ed. 355, as the announced purpose of the railroad company to abjure its function and duty as a common carrier in respect of interstate shipments, which threatened the ruin of complainant's business, and relief by injunction against such a continued course of conduct was held to be one which in such circumstances might be granted. If a carrier may, through the filing of notice, or through cancellation of a classification, or through inclusion of one commodity among articles not accepted for transportation, exclude that commodity from transportation, it may by like means exclude from transportation any other commodity which has become an established subject of interstate commerce, to the ruin and destruction of the established business of any shipper. And if the railroad company may not justify its exclusion through obedience to a state law, as in Louisville & Nashville Railroad Co. v. Cook Brewing Co., supra, how can it justify it by its own voluntary act?

"As the question in this case only involves the right of the railroad to exclude from transportation a commodity which has for years been accepted and recognized by the defendants as proper for transportation, and is not included within the powers conferred upon the Interstate Commerce Commission to hear and determine in the first instance, it is held that the court has jurisdiction, and primary resort to the Interstate Commerce Commission is not necessary."

IV. INJURIES RECEIVED WHILE RIDING ON FREE PASS

2. Limitation of Liability (p. 362)

Facts when insufficient to show one an interstate passenger.—The mental purpose of a railway employee traveling on an annual pass, good only over a line wholly within the state, to continue his journey into another state, using another carrier to a point still within the state, where he expected to find awaiting him another pass from the first carrier which would be good for the interstate part of his journey, does not make him an interstate passenger while traveling on the first pass, so as to validate, contrary to local public policy, a stipulation in such pass releasing the carrier from liability for negligence. New York Cent. R. Co. v. Mohney, (1920) 252 U. S. 152, 40 S. Ct. 287, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —.

Exemption from ordinary negligence in a pass permitted by this section is valid. Missouri, etc., R. Co. v. Zuber, (1919) 76 Okla. 146, 184 Pac. 452, 7 A. L. R. 840.

Vol. IV, p. 363, sec. 1 [F]. [First ed., 1912 Supp., p. 115.]

VI. OWNERSHIP BY RAILROAD OF STOCK IN MINING COMPANY (p. 365)

The combination in a single corporation of the ownership of all of the stock of a carrier and of all of the stock of a coal company violates this section, making it unlawful for any railway company to transport in interstate commerce any article mined or produced by it or under its authority, or which it may own, or in which it may have any interest, direct or indirect, where all three companies have the same officers and directors, and it is under their authority that the coal mines are worked and the railway operated, and they exercise that authority in the one case in precisely the same character as in the other; viz., as officials of the holding company, the manner in which the stock of the three is held resulting, as intended, in the abdication of all independent corporate action by both the railway company and the coal company, involving, as it does, the surrender to the holding company of the entire conduct of their affairs. U. S. v. Reading Co., (1920) 253 U. S. 26, 40 S. Ct. 425, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming in part and reversing in part (E. D. Pa. 1915) 226 Fed. 229.

While the ownership by a railway company of shares of the capital stock of a mining company does not necessarily create an identity of corporate interest between the two such as to render it unlawful, under this section, for the railway company to transport in interstate commerce the products of such mining company, yet, where such ownership of stock is resorted to, not for the purpose of participating in the affairs of the corporation in which it is held in a manner normal and usual with stockholders, but for the purpose of making it a mere agent, or instrumentality, or department of another company, the courts will look through the forms to the realities of the relation between the companies as if the corporate agency did not exist, and will deal with them as the justice of the case may require. U. S. v. Reading Co., (1920) 252 U. S. 26, 40 S. Ct. 425, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming in part and reversing in part (E. D. Pa. 1915) 226 Fed. 229.

A combination of competing interstate railway carriers and competing coal companies, found to violate both the Sherman Anti-trust Act (see vol. IX, p. 644) and this section, must be so dissolved as to give each of such companies its entire independence, free from stock or other control. U. S. v. Reading Co., (1920) 252 U. S. 26, 40 S. Ct. 425, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming in part and reversing in part (E. D. Pa. 1915) 226 Fed. 229.

III. UNJUST DISCRIMINATION

2. What Constitutes (p. 373)

An absolute and unconditional contract to furnish cars is invalid as an agreement for a special and discriminatory service. Underwood v. Hines, (Mo. App. 1920) 222 S. W. 1037.

Special agreement to heat car for a shipment of potatoes is discriminatory and void. Clemons Produce Co. v. Denver, etc., R. Co., (Mo. App. 1920) 219 S. W. 660.

Vol. IV, p. 379, sec. 3. [First ed., vol. III, p. 816.]

III. Undue or unreasonable preference or advantage.

3. Allotment of cars.

9. Miscellaneous.

III. UNDUE OR UNREASONABLE PREFERENCE OR ADVANTAGE

3. Allotment of Cars (p. 384)

Jurisdiction in claims for damages.—The cases clearly and unmistakably lay down the rule that, when the action is for damages due to the carrier's failure to furnish cars when reasonably demanded, the shipper may proceed in the state court; that, when the action is for damages occasioned by discrimination practiced by the carrier in the distribution of cars during a period of car shortage, and such distribution has been made pursuant to a rule of the carrier and in conformity with it, the shipper must first proceed before the Interstate Commerce Commission to establish the discriminatory character of the rule; but that where the discrimination is caused by a breach of the rule, and the discrimination results from its nonobservance, then the state courts have jurisdiction in an action brought by the shipper to recover damages occasioned by such discrimination. Anderson v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., (Mich. 1919) 175 N. W. 246.

Evidence held to show discrimination.—In Weber v. Pennsylvania R. Co., (E. D. Pa. 1920) 263 Fed. 945, the evidence was held to sustain a finding of discrimination in the allotment of coal cars.

9. Miscellaneous (p. 392)

Agreement to transport cattle with reasonable despatch coupled with request that time of confinement of cattle without being unloaded be extended for thirty-six hours, which request was acceded to by carrier, has been held to be not a preferential contract. Baltimore, etc., R. Co. v. Bower, (Ind. App. 1920) 127 N. E. 458.

II. STATE STATUTES (p. 407)

Validity of state statute of limitations.—A state statute limiting the time within which an action for an undercharge may be brought is not invalidated by the federal legislation prohibiting deviation from the published rates. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Frye, (Wash. 1919) 186 Pac. 668.

III. SHIPMENTS AND RATES AFFECTED (p. 407)

Foreign shipments.—“Beyond controversy, transportation by ocean carriers between the United States and nonadjacent foreign countries is not included in or affected by the Act to Regulate Commerce, and the jurisdiction of the Interstate Commerce Commission, or the classification and schedule of rates and charges, pursuant to the act, cannot extend to carriers engaged in that transportation. Cosmopolitan Shipping Co. v. Hamburg-American Packet Co., 13 Interst. Com. Com'n R. 266; Chamber of Commerce of N. Y. v. N. Y. C. & H. R. R. Co., 24 Interst. Com. Com'n R. 55. Interstate rates and charges to and from ports of entry must be published and filed as independent from the ocean transportation. Ocean transportation may be conducted under through bills of lading, issued at a foreign port, but the classifications and schedules of rates and charges of the inland carrier or carriers must be limited to inland transportation and services, and cannot relate to liability, service, or obligation of the ocean carrier.” Burke v. Union Pac. R. Co., (1919) 226 N. Y. 534, 124 N. E. 119.

IV. CONTENTS, CONSTRUCTION AND SUFFICIENCY OF SCHEDULES

4. Demurrage (p. 410)

No departure from the established policy manifested in the Uniform Demurrage Code to treat the single car as the unit in applying the allowance of free time and the charges for demurrage, just as in the making of carload freight rates, can be inferred from the declaration in such Code that no demurrage charges shall be collected when shipments are frozen while in transit so as to prevent unloading during the prescribed free time, provided a diligent effort to unload is made. If each car containing frozen shipments could have been unloaded, considered separately, within the free time, any relief from the hardship resulting from excessive receipts of such cars on the same day must be found, either under the so-called bunching rule, under which the shipper is relieved from demurrage charges if, by reason of the carrier's fault, the goods are accumulated and detention results, or under the average-agreement rule, under which a monthly debit and credit account is kept of detention, and the shipper is relieved of charges for detaining cars more than forty-eight hours by credit for other cars released within twenty-four hours. Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Kittanning Iron, etc., Mfg. Co., (1920) 253 U. S. 319, 40 S. Ct. 532, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, reversing (1919) 263 Pa. St. 205, 106 Atl. 207, wherein the court said: “The purpose of demurrage charges is to promote car efficiency by penalizing undue detention of cars. The duty of loading and of unloading carload shipments rests upon the shipper or consignee. To this end he is entitled to detain the car a reasonable time without any payment in addition to the published freight rate. The aim of the Code was to prescribe rules, to be applied uniformly throughout the country, by which it might be determined what detention is to be deemed reasonable. In fixing the free time the framers of the Code adopted an external standard; that is, they refused to allow the circumstances of the particular shipper to be considered.”

V. PUBLICATION OF SCHEDULES

1. Necessity (p. 413)

Place of filing and publishing schedule.—Under the interstate commerce rule a carrier is required to file with the commission its schedule of rates and tariffs, and to promulgate and distribute the same so that shippers may have access thereto and ascertain its terms. And to establish and render operative a $5 rental for a refrigerator car in which potatoes are shipped from points in Minnesota to points in Oklahoma, over connecting lines, the tariff schedule must be filed and published at the point of origin. Schaff v. J. C. Famechon Co., (Minn. 1920) 176 N. W. 197.

VI. EFFECT OF PUBLISHED RATES

1. In General (p. 415)

Relief from unreasonable freight charge.—After the passage of the Interstate Commerce Act, a shipper could not maintain an action against a common carrier to obtain relief from an alleged unreasonable freight charge exacted from him for an interstate shipment or shipment from one territory to a point of destination in another territory, without reference to any previous action by the Interstate Commerce Commission, where such rate had been filed with that commission and promulgated as provided by the Commerce Act as the rate which it was the duty of the carrier under that Act to enforce against the shipper until changed in accordance with the provisions of that statute. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Gist, (Okla. 1920) 190 Pac. 878.

A subsequent reduction by the commission does not establish the unreasonableness of a rate so as to warrant an action by a shipper for the overcharge. Morgan Co. v. Great Northern R. Co., (N. D. Ill. 1919) 263 Fed. 611.

3. Contracts of Transportation (p. 416)

Generally.—To same effect as first paragraph of original annotation, see Mobile, etc., R. Co. v. Laclede Lumber Co., (1919) 202 Mo. App. 630, 216 S. W. 798.

Tariff rate for special service as constituting contract rate.—The publication by a railroad of a net tariff rate for an expedited or special service covering camp equipment and impedimenta, without further deduction for land grant roads, constitutes a contract rate binding on the government when it orders and secures the services specified by the tariff without stipulating for a different rate or objecting to the published rate as unreasonable and unjust. Yazoo, etc., Valley R. Co. v. U. S., (1919) 54 Ct. Cl. 165.

Vol. IV, p. 421, sec. 6 [G]. [First ed., 1909 Supp., p. 261.]

I. In general.

III. Greater or less or different compensation.

1. In general.

I. IN GENERAL (p. 421)

Necessity of filing schedule for switching services.—A carrier can neither recover freight charges, nor pay the owner any allowance for services in connection with such transportation, except as provided in schedules previously filed. Pittsburgh, etc., R. Co. v. South Shore R. Co., (1919) 264 Pa. St. 162, 107 Atl. 680, wherein it was held that until schedules were filed, switching services could not lawfully be paid for.

Necessity of filing stipulations limiting time for suit in consideration of lower rate.—Stipulations limiting the time for suit on a contract of carriage in consideration of a lower rate must be filed. Shroyer v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., (Tex. 1920) 222 S. W. 1095, wherein the court said: "The Supreme Court has indicated to us that the stipulation in the bill fixing the short period of six months for the institution of the suit was clearly a determinative element of the rate charged the shipper; indeed, was in a chief measure the consideration, the justification for the rate; that the statute declares that any regulation which in any wise affects or determines the rate shall be filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission as a part of the carrier's schedule of rates. The purpose of this must have been to acquaint the shipper with any rule or regulation having the character of a determinative factor in the making of the rate, and by which, because of this, the shipper would be bound if he accepted the rate. In fairness, he would be entitled to that knowledge so as to enable him to choose properly between the higher and the lower rate, and it should therefore be assumed that the intention of the statute was to afford it to him."

1. In General (p. 422)

Payment of less compensation than that fixed by tariff rates.—Only upon payment of the applicable published rate is the consignee of an interstate shipment entitled, under the equal rates requirement of the Interstate Commerce Act, to receive the shipment, and he is liable to the carrier for the difference between the freight charges erroneously specified in the waybill and paid by him upon receipt of the goods and the larger amount due under the applicable published rates, although by virtue of his agreement with the consignor he did not become the owner of the goods until after delivery. The principle of estoppel cannot be invoked by the consignee in such a case. Pittsburgh, etc., R. Co. v. Fink, (1919) 250 U. S. 577, 40 S. Ct. 27, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, reversing 19 Ohio Cir. Ct. (U. S.) 103.

Contract for less rate than prescribed by law as unenforceable.—The intent and purpose of this section is to prevent any discrimination as to interstate freight rates for the transportation of commodities of the same classification among shippers and an agreement for the carrier to receive or the shipper to pay a rate of freight different from or less than that determined on by the Interstate Commerce Commission, directly or indirectly, whether existing with or without the knowledge of either or both of the contracting parties at the time, and irrespective of any representations made, is unenforceable and void; and where the shipper has contracted in his bill of lading to pay a less rate than that prescribed by the law, and, relying upon the assurance of the carrier to endeavor to obtain a refund, pays the difference between that and the lawful rate, he may not recover this difference in the courts of our state, the contract sued on being an illegal one as encouraging rebates and unlawful discrimination and not recognizable therein. Edenton Cotton Mills v. Norfolk Southern R. Co., (1919) 178 N. C. 212, 100 S. E. 341, which further held that where the carrier in interstate commerce has failed in its promise to present duly and in proper form the shipper's claim for an alleged overcharge of freight rate which the latter had paid to the carrier, and thus prevents the shipper from presenting his own claim within the time allowed by the statute, and consequently said commission, having then no authority, refuses to pass upon the matter at all, our courts may not adjudicate the question, the same being for the determination of said commission upon whatever evidence may have been introduced before it, and as its determination thereon, favorable or unfavorable, cannot be anticipated or foreseen, any assessment of damages based upon it would be purely speculative and not allowable.

Vol. IV, p. 448, sec. 12. [First ed., vol. III, p. 838.]

II. POWERS AND DUTIES OF COMMISSION (p. 451)

Power to prescribe terms of bills of lading.—This Act does not confer upon the Commission the right to prescribe the terms of the carriers' bills of lading. Alaska Steamship Co. v. U. S., (S. D. N. Y. 1919) 259 Fed. 713, wherein it was said: "That the Commission has power under section 12 of the Act to investigate as to the fairness of the carriers' bills of lading we have no doubt, but we discover nowhere any authority conferred upon it to draw the carriers' bills of lading either in whole or in part. If they are in any respect unjust or unreasonable or unlawful, the courts are open to the parties injured; if they contain any limitation of liability for loss or damage which Congress has declared to be void, the courts will say so. Missouri, Kansas & Texas Ry. v. Harriman, 227 U. S. 668, 33 Sup. Ct. 397, 57 L. Ed. 690.

"The question is one of power to make the order, and not one of its expediency. Therefore we shall not inquire whether the alterations the Commission has prescribed in the bills of lading are reasonable or not, because we think it has no power to make them. In any event, there was no power to prescribe an inland bill of lading in form or substance depriving the carriers of the benefits of the statutes limiting the liability of vessel owners and of Harter Act Feb. 13, 1893, c. 105, 27 Stat. 445. These statutes still survive, unless repealed by implication, and this result we are of opinion was neither intended nor accomplished.

"Indeed, section 15 prescribes:

"... Nor shall the Commission have the right to establish any route, classification, rate, fare, or charge when the transportation is wholly by water, and any transportation by water affected by this act shall be subject to the laws and regulations applicable to transportation by water."

Contesting of order of Commission by common carriers under federal control.—The fact that common carriers are under federal control does not prevent them from contesting the validity of an order of the Commission on the ground that it is without authority to issue the order. Alaska

Steamship Co. v. U. S., (S. D. N. Y. 1919) 259 Fed. 713. The court said:

"It is said that the petitioners, except the five water carriers above mentioned, are unaffected by the order, because now in the actual control of the Director General of Railways. This control is expected to cease within the current year, and they will be subject to the order the moment their properties are returned to them, whether the Director General complies with the order or not. If it was right to subject them presently to the order, it is right that they should be allowed presently to dispute it, and we think there can be no doubt that the water carriers, who can only escape from the order by withdrawing from joint arrangements with the land carriers and making entirely new dispositions, and all the carriers who will be bound by it when their properties are returned to them, will be subjected to damage irreparable within the meaning of the law. It would be impossible for the carriers in many cases to collect what they have paid out or lost, if the Supreme Court were to hold that the order was not within the power of the Commission."

Vol. IV, p. 458, sec. 15 [A]. [First ed., 1912 Supp., p. 119.]

II. REGULATION OF RATES

2. Power of Courts (p. 462)

State courts.—State courts have jurisdiction in an action against a common carrier to recover the difference between illegal and excessive freight charges and the established rate prescribed by law, the issue involved being one of fact, though in passing on the facts it may be necessary for the court to construe the rate established by law. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Gist, (Okla. 1920) 190 Pac. 878.

Vol. IV, p. 476, sec. 16 [B]. [First ed., 1912 Supp., p. 123.]

II. Enforcement of orders.

1. Jurisdiction.

V. Venue.

VII. Petition, complaint or declaration.

VIII. Hearing.

4. Evidence.

XI. Appeals and supersedeas.

II. ENFORCEMENT OF ORDERS

1. Jurisdiction (p. 478)

Action by assignee of reparation claim.—An assignee of the legal title to reparation claims may claim an award of reparation by the Interstate Commerce Commission, and recover the amounts awarded by an action at law, brought in his own name, but for the benefit of the equitable holders of the claim—especially where such is the real purpose of the assignments. Spiller v.

Atchison, etc., R. Co., (1920) 253 U. S. 117, 40 S. Ct. 466, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) — (reversing (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1917) 246 Fed. 1, 158 C. C. A. 227; (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1919) 249 Fed. 677, 161 C. C. A. 587) wherein it was also held that there is nothing in the letter or spirit of the Interstate Commerce Acts inconsistent with the view that claims for reparation because of the exaction of unreasonable freight charges are assignable.

V. VENUE (p. 490)

Contract with another railroad for use of tracks as affecting venue.—Where a railroad company, in order to conduct its business as a carrier of passengers, makes use of instrumentalities other than railroad track, and owned by others than itself, but which it has the contractual right to use in its business, and which are located in a certain district, this is enough to show venue in the District Court of that district in a suit under this section. Thus, where a railroad's line ends in one district at a river, but it contracts with a ferry boat corporation to ferry its cars across a river and with another railroad for the handling of its trains by the engines and engine crews of the latter, and for a joint use with it of a terminal in a city, located in another district, it may be sued under this section in the latter district. Vicksburg, etc., R. Co. v. Anderson-Tully Co., (C. C. A. 5th Cir. 1920) 261 Fed. 741.

VII. PETITION, COMPLAINT OR DECLARATION (p. 480)

Sufficiency of complaint.—A complaint under this section which sets out the findings of the commission and its order, and claims damages due the plaintiff under it, is sufficient to withstand objection made for the first time after judgment that it shows no cause of action. Vicksburg, etc., R. Co. v. Anderson-Tully Co., (C. C. A. 5th Cir. 1920) 261 Fed. 741, wherein it was said:

"The finding of the commission that the rate was unreasonable was made prima facie evidence of that fact. The plaintiff, to sustain his complaint, was required to offer no evidence, except the award and order of the commission. His averment was as broad as his proof was required to be. The action was a statutory one, to enforce the award of the commission, and by the statute proof of the award of the commission was prima facie sufficient to sustain the plaintiff's case. The statute requires the petition merely to set out the causes for which the plaintiff claims damages and the order of the commission in the premises. The defendants had full information from the complaint as to the cause of action they were required to meet. Technical rules of common-law pleading are inapplicable to the statutory form of action created by the Act to Regulate Commerce for the enforcement of order of the commission."

4. Evidence (p. 482)

Findings and order in reparation proceeding.—The Interstate Commerce Commission is given a general degree of latitude in the investigation of reparation claims, and the resulting findings and order of the commission may not be rejected as evidence in a suit to recover the amounts of the reparation awards merely because of errors in its procedure not amounting to a denial of the right to a fair hearing, so long as the essential facts found are based upon substantial evidence. Spiller v. Atchison, etc., R. Co., (1920) 253 U. S. 117, 40 S. Ct. 466, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, reversing (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1917) 246 Fed. 1, 158 C. C. A. 227; (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1918) 249 Fed. 677, 161 C. C. A. 587.

In an action under this section to enforce an award of reparation against a railroad company, the evidence is sufficient to sustain a judgment against the defendant where it appears that the plaintiff offered the award and order of the commission in evidence, and that the defendants introduced no evidence, since this Act gives to the award and order of the commission prima facie effect, regardless of the correctness or incorrectness of the findings of the commission. Vicksburg, etc., R. Co. v. Anderson-Tully Co., (C. C. A. 5th Cir. 1920) 261 Fed. 741.

Proof of handwriting of assignors of reparation claims.—Formal proof of the handwriting of the assignors of reparation claims by subscribing witnesses or otherwise was not necessary in a hearing before the Interstate Commerce Commission in the absence of objection or contradiction. Spiller v. Atchison, etc., R. Co., (1920) 253 U. S. 117, 40 S. Ct. 466, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, reversing (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1917) 246 Fed. 1, 158 C. C. A. 227; (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1918) 249 Fed. 677, 161 C. C. A. 587.

Expert testimony in reparation proceeding.

—Whether a witness called before the Interstate Commerce Commission had shown such special knowledge as to qualify him to testify as an expert was for the commission to determine, and its decision thereon is not to be set aside by the courts unless clearly shown to have been unfounded. Spiller v. Atchison, etc., R. Co., (1920) 253 U. S. 117, 40 S. Ct. 466, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, reversing (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1917) 246 Fed. 1, 158 C. C. A. 227; (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1918) 249 Fed. 677, 161 C. C. A. 587.

Hearsay in reparation proceeding.—Assertions by counsel during a hearing before the Interstate Commerce Commission in a reparation proceeding that there was a failure of proof, and suggestions that the proceeding ought to be dismissed, come too late and are too general in character to be equivalent to an objection to the reception of certain evidence as hearsay. Spiller v. Atchison, etc., R. Co., (1920) 253 U. S. 117, 40 S. Ct. 466, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, reversing (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1917) 246 Fed. 1, 158 C. C. A. 227; (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1918) 249 Fed. 677, 161 C. C. A. 587.

The Interstate Commerce Commission is not to be regarded as having acted arbitrarily in making a reparation order, nor may its findings and order be rejected as wanting in support, simply because hearsay evidence introduced without objection and substantially corroborated by original evidence clearly admissible against the parties to be affected was considered with the rest. Spiller v. Atchison, etc., R. Co., (1920) 253 U. S. 117, 40 S. Ct. 466, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, reversing (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1917) 246 Fed. 1, 158 C. C. A. 227; (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1918) 249 Fed. 677, 161 C. C. A. 587.

XI. APPEALS AND SUPERSEDEAS (p. 486)

Ruling of trial court on validity of award. — The refusal of the trial court in a suit for the recovery of amounts awarded in a reparation order made by the Interstate Commerce Commission to treat the award as void in toto is not erroneous if, to any substantial extent, the award was legally valid. Spiller v. Atchison, etc., R. Co., (1920) 253 U. S. 117, 40 S. Ct. 466, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, reversing (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1917) 246 Fed. 1, 158 C. C. A. 227; (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1918) 249 Fed. 677, 161 C. C. A. 587.

Vol. IV, p. 495, sec. 19a [A]. [First ed., 1914 Supp., p. 204.]

Nonaction of Commission in matter purely ministerial. — The refusal of the Interstate Commerce Commission, when making the physical valuation of railway properties ordered by this section, to obey the command of that statute to investigate and find the present cost of condemnation and damages or of purchase in excess of original cost or present value of the railway company's lands, cannot be justified on the theory that such command involves a consideration by the Commission of matters "beyond the possibility of rational determination," and calls for "inadmissible assumptions," and the indulging in "impossible hypotheses" as to subjects "incapable of rational ascertainment," even if it be conceded that the subject-matter of the valuations in question, which the statute expressly directed to be made, necessarily opened a wide range of proof, and called for the exercise of close scrutiny and of scrupulous analysis and application. Kansas City Southern R. Co. v. Interstate Commerce Commission, (1920) 252 U. S. 178, 40 S. Ct. 187, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, wherein the court said:

"It is obvious from the statement we have made, as well as from the character of the remedy invoked, mandamus, that we are required to decide, not a controversy growing out of duty performed under the statute, but one solely involving an alleged refusal to discharge duties which the statute exacts. Admonishing, as this does, that the issue before us is confined to a consideration of the face of the statute and the nonaction of the Commission in a matter purely ministerial, it serves also to furnish a ready solution of the question to be decided, since it brings out in bold contrast the direct and express command of the statute to the Commission to act concerning the subject in hand, and the Commission's unequivocal refusal to obey such command.

"It is true that the Commission held that its nonaction was caused by the fact that the command of the statute involved a consideration by it of matters 'beyond the possibility of rational determination,' and called for 'inadmissible assumptions,' and the indulging in 'impossible hypotheses' as to subjects 'incapable of rational ascertainment,' and that such conclusions were the necessary consequence of the Minnesota Rate Cases, 230 U. S. 352, 33 Sup. Ct. 729, 57 L. Ed. 1511, 48 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1151, Ann. Cas. 1916A, 18.

"We are of opinion, however, that, considering the face of the statute and the reasoning of the Commission, it results that the conclusion of the Commission was erroneous, an error which was exclusively caused by a mistaken conception by the Commission of its relation to the subject, resulting in an unconscious disregard on its part of the power of Congress and an unwilling assumption by the Commission of authority which it did not possess. And the significance which the Commission attributed to the ruling in the Minnesota Rate Cases, even upon the assumption that its view of the ruling in those cases was not a mistaken one, but illustrates in a different form the disregard of the power of Congress which we have just pointed out, since, as Congress indisputably had the authority to impose upon the Commission the duty in question, it is impossible to conceive how the Minnesota Rate ruling could furnish ground for refusing to carry out the commands of Congress, the cogency of which consideration is none the less manifest, though it be borne in mind that the Minnesota Rate Cases were decided after the passage of the act in question.

"Finally, even if it be further conceded that the subject-matter of the valuations in question which the act of Congress expressly directed to be made necessarily opened a wide range of proof and called for the exercise of close scrutiny and of scrupulous analysis in its consideration and application, such assumption, we are of opinion, affords no basis for refusing to enforce the act of Congress, or what is equivalent thereto, of exerting the general power which the act of Congress gave, and at the same time disregarding the essential conditions imposed by Congress upon its exercise.

"The judgment of the Court of Appeals [of the District of Columbia] is therefore reversed, with directions to reverse that of the Supreme Court, and direct the Supreme Court to grant a writ of mandamus in conformity with this opinion."

IV. DEFINITION AND CONSTRUCTION (p. 510)

Interpretation by federal courts.—The controlling interpretation of this amendment rests with the federal courts. Winget v. Grand Trunk Western R. Co., (Mich. 1920) 177 N. W. 273.

V. EFFECT ON STATE LAWS (p. 511)

In general.—To the same effect as the original annotation, see Fay v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., (Ia. 1919) 173 N. W. 69; Clemons Produce Co. v. Denver, etc., R. Co., (Mo. App. 1920) 219 S. W. 660; Singer v. American Express Co., (Mo. App. 1920) 219 S. W. 662; Cleburne Peanut, etc., Co. v. Missouri, etc., R. Co., (Tex. 1920) 221 S. W. 270; Shroyer v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., (Tex. 1920) 222 S. W. 1095.

VI. SHIPMENTS AFFECTED (p. 513)

Shipments entirely by water are not affected by the Carmack Amendment, which is confined to shipments by rail, or partly by rail and partly by water. Florida Cotton Oil Co. v. Clyde Steamship Co., (Mass. 1920) 125 N. E. 855.

Foreign shipments are not within the Act, and state laws govern as to the limitation of liability on such a shipment. Brass v. Texarkana, etc., R. Co., (Tex. 1920) 218 S. W. 1040.

VII. RECEIPT OR BILL OF LADING (p. 514)

In general.—To the same effect as the original annotation, see Mason v. Maine Cent. R. Co., (Me. 1920) 110 Atl. 425.

A parol agreement for shipment is "illegal." Thee v. Wabash R. Co., (Mo. App.

1920) 217 S. W. 566. In that case, however, it appeared that a written bill of lading was given, and, while the foregoing statement was made by the court, the case appears to be authority only for the rule that the written bill governs to the exclusion of any parol agreement.

An oral agreement to furnish cars for use in interstate commerce is ineffective. Underwood v. Hines, (Mo. App. 1920) 222 S. W. 1037, wherein it was said: "However, if it can be said that the contract in question was separate from and merely preliminary to a contract for an interstate shipment which, when entered into, would be in writing, and that the breach relied on is not a breach of that contract, there is this further to be said: The sole purpose of the contract was, and is alleged to be, to enable a shipment in interstate commerce to be made. Again, a contract, absolute and unconditional, to have cars ready for plaintiffs' use at a certain place and date, irrespective of the government's needs or of the general service to the public, is one the station agent had no authority to make, and his lack of such authority was known to plaintiffs. Such a contract is special, and, if upheld, would give the shipper to whom it is made an unusual service different from that accorded to others. When such is the case, it is discriminatory, and violates the provisions of the Commerce Act."

VIII. WHO IS INITIAL CARRIER (p. 516)

In general.—The initial carrier is the one who first contracts to transport an interstate shipment, and the fact that the car was loaded on the tracks of another company and by it switched to the tracks of the company agreeing to transport it, does not convert the latter company into an intermediate carrier. Houston, East, etc., R. Co. v. Houston Packing Co., (Tex. Civ. App. 1920) 221 S. W. 316.

Steamboat company.—There was evidence that an interstate carrier by water transported several carload shipments of potatoes to a point within the state, where the shipper had them assorted, and then they were taken in several carload lots to a point in another state, and thence, upon telegraphed instructions, one of them was reconsigned to a still further point, the transportation by rail being over connecting carriers. On one of these shipments originating by boat, which went to a place in the state and was reshipped from there under a new bill of lading by defendant, the destination was left blank in the bill of lading issued by the carrier by water. On these facts it was held that the steamboat company could not be held as the initial carrier, as a matter of law, and that it was properly left to the jury, under the conflicting evidence, to determine whether it or the first carrier by rail was the initial one, and therein the bills of lading were competent evidence of the intent of the contracting parties and of the true contract of shipment. Produce Trading Co. v. Norfolk Southern R. Co., (1919) 178 N. C. 175, 100 S. W. 316.

IX. LIABILITY OF INITIAL CARRIER

3. Period of Liability (p. 518)

Terminal carrier acting as warehouseman.—An initial carrier is liable for the negligence of a terminal carrier even though his responsibility as carrier for the transported goods has ceased and he is holding them as warehouseman. In such a case it is a question of law for the court whether the negligence complained of was that of a common carrier or a warehouseman. Winget v. Grand Trunk Western R. Co., (Mich. 1920) 177 N. W. 273, wherein the court said: "The statute cast upon defendant as initial carrier responsibility for the completed transportation according to the original contract of shipment evidenced by the bill of lading, which included delivery. The negligence in this case was that of the terminal carrier. Whether the terminal carrier by reason of the consignee's delay in removing could be regarded as holding the consignment in the capacity of a warehouseman in other particulars is immaterial here, for it was not released from its delivery as a duty of transportation according to the terms of the shipping bill by which it received the goods and carried them to the terminal point."

4. Nature of Liability (p. 519)

Injuries to live stock.—The Carmack Amendment did not enlarge or change the common-law liability of carriers for injuries to live stock in interstate shipments. Starr v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., (1919) 103 Neb. 645, 173 N. W. 682.

6. Liability for Delay (p. 519)

Delay in delivery—Failure to produce bill of lading.—The delivering carrier of a shipment by interstate carriage refused delivery to the person designated on account of his failure to produce the bill of lading, which had been mislaid or lost, and the goods were thereby damaged. There was evidence tending to show that the consignor arranged with the initial carrier for delivery without requiring the production of the bill of lading, which promptly informed the delivering carrier by telegram before the damages complained of had occurred. It was held that the delivering carrier was not exonerated by the mere failure of the consignee to produce the bill of lading under the evidence if found as facts by the jury, and that a motion as of nonsuit against the initial carrier was properly denied, such carrier being responsible for the acts of the delivering carrier under the Carmack and like amendments to the Interstate Commerce Act. McCotter v. Norfolk Southern R. Co., (1919) 178 N. C. 159, 100 S. E. 326.

7. Wrongful Delivery or Diversion (p. 521)

Delivery without requiring production of bill of lading.—An initial carrier is liable to the lawful holder of a bill of lading for the negligence of the terminal carrier in delivering the goods to somebody else who claimed to be entitled to receive them. Winget v. Grand Trunk Western R. Co., (Mich. 1920) 177 N. W. 273, wherein the court said: "Certainly no liability could attach to the carrier in this case for refusal to deliver without surrender of the original bill of lading, and we think, seldom, if ever, would liability arise in any case for such refusal, without reasonable identification and indemnity if demanded, under the present state of the law recognizing an order bill of lading, as in effect quasi negotiable paper representing the value of the shipment in the hands of the lawful holder. The latter proposition appears to be questioned by defendant, and in support of a doubt that the courts would protect the refusing carrier against demand of the consignor or owner cite McCotter v. Norfolk South. R. Co. (N. C.) 100 S. E. 326, where the owner shipped a carload of potatoes consigned to his own order, and recovered a judgment against the initial carrier for damage to the goods resulting from delay in transportation and refusal of the terminal carrier to deliver the same without production of the original bill of lading, which had become lost or delayed in transmission. Issues of fact were involved under both claimed causes of delay. The owner applied to the initial carrier for direction to its terminal carrier to deliver the consignment, with tender of a bond of indemnity, and such instructions were sent. Failure of the terminal carrier to deliver after receipt of such instructions was claimed. The terminal carrier was under the law but agent of the initial carrier and the Supreme Court of North Carolina held that on the facts presented 'a failure to deliver the potatoes to the owner or his agent on a telegraphic message from the initial carrier that this be done without presentation of the bill of lading, made at the request of the owner and consignor . . . would be sufficient to sustain the verdict on the issue.' We find no suggestion in this ruling that the terminal carrier's refusal would have been held culpable had no satisfactory protection by bond of indemnity been tendered, and no instruction to deliver received from the initial carrier. So far as any inference arises it is to the contrary.

"It is earnestly contended for defendant that Nelson Grain Co. v. Ann Arbor Ry. Co., 174 Mich. 80, 140 N. W. 486, quadrates with the instant case and is controlling. Since that case was handed down by a divided court, the federal appellate courts, whose decisions are controlling in the final analysis, have in several decisions emphasized the important function of an order bill of lading in transportation and its significance as a test in these controversies, over wrongful or non-delivery. In the recent case of King v. Barbarin, 249 Fed. 303, 161 C. C. A. 311, in which it is said the facts are practically the same as in the Nelson Grain Co. Case, cited by defendants, there, as here, as directly sustaining their contentions, the court did not find the Nelson Grain Case persuasive, and arrived at a contrary conclusion."

X. LIABILITY OF CONNECTING CARRIER (p. 522)

Rule stated.—"It is perfectly well settled that a connecting or delivering carrier may be sued for its own defaults." Southern R. Co. v. Finley, (Va. 1920) 102 S. E. 559.

But a connecting carrier is not primarily liable unless the loss, damage or destruction occurs on its line. Baltimore, etc., R. Co. v. Maurer, (Ind. App. 1920) 127 N. E. 294.

In Faulk v. Seaboard Air Line R. Co., (S. C. 1919) 101 S. E. 641, it was held that an action against an interstate railroad for injuries to horses while being transported over several roads was properly brought against the terminal instead of the initial carrier, it being susceptible of a reasonable inference that the injuries occurred on the defendant's road although there was no direct and positive evidence to that effect.

"The Carmack Amendment did not deprive the shipper of any remedy he had under the common law against a connecting or terminal carrier." Barry v. Los Angeles, etc., R. Co., (Utah 1920) 189 Pac. 70.

Presumption of receipt of goods from initial carrier in good condition.—In a suit against a connecting carrier in interstate commerce to recover for damage to goods received by it from a preceding carrier and delivered by the connecting carrier at the point of destination in a damaged condition, proof that the goods were delivered in a good condition to the initial carrier raises a presumption that they were received in a good condition by the connecting carrier. There is nothing in the acts of Congress, including the Carmack Amendment, fixing the liability for interstate carriers for goods damaged in transit, which relieves a connecting carrier of this presumption. Central of Georgia R. Co. v. Scrivens, (Ga. App. 1919) 100 S. E. 233.

XII. LIMITATION OF LIABILITY

1. In General (p. 524)

Effect of Cummins amendment—In general.—See generally on this subject annotations in 1919 Supp. p. 581. And as to the effect of the Cummins Amendment as qualified by the later amending act of Aug. 9, 1916, see infra this volume and title, p. 586.

Applicability to telegraphic and telephonic communications.—"The Cummins Act was not intended to apply to telegraphic and telephonic communications and the question whether or not a telegraph company may by contract limit its liability with reference to messages is not affected by it. Klotz v. Western Union Tel. Co., (Ia. 1920) 175 N. W. 825, wherein the court said:

"Even under the Cummins Act the right is given to contract as to the value of the thing about to be shipped, and thereby limit the liability, when the value of the thing is not ascertainable because of concealment at the time of its sending. A telegraph company has no way of knowing the value of a message, and has no way of knowing the extent of liability that may attach to a failure to transmit it at once. The sender is in a better position to know approximately the value of the thing sent and the damages that may flow from a failure to send it correctly. An agreement between the sender and the company as to the value of the message sent is tolerable when it serves as a basis both for charge and for liability. The charges are supposed to be commensurate with the risk assumed. So we say the Cummins Act, which it is claimed was in force at the time this message was sent, does not change the rule in regard to telegraphic and telephonic communications, but is limited, in so far as it affects agreements between the shipper and the company, to those things which have an ascertainable value at the time they are received for shipment, and not to those things the value of which cannot be ascertained by the company, even by the exercise of reasonable care, at the time the contract for transportation is made."

No new liability created.—"The amendment did not affect the causes which would put liability for loss on the carrier; it only prevented a contract reducing totally or partially the amount of a loss for which the carrier was liable under the ordinary rules of law." Clemons Produce Co. v. Denver, etc., R. Co., (Mo. App. 1920) 219 S. W. 660. See to the same effect Singer v. American Express Co., (Mo. App. 1920) 219 S. W. 662.

Limitation after arrival at destination.—A clause in a bill of lading that goods shall be at owner's risk after they are unloaded from the cars or delivered on a private siding, does not conflict with the Cummins Act. Chickasaw Cooperage Co. v. Yazoo, etc., R. Co., (Ark. 1919) 215 S. W. 897, wherein the court said:

"The only effect of the Cummins Act was to prevent common carriers from limiting their liability as to the amount to be recovered when goods are lost or destroyed in transportation, except in certain instances where goods are hidden from view; and the amendment also makes it unlawful for any such common carrier to provide by contract for a shorter period of time for giving notice of claims than 90 days, and for the filing of claims for a shorter period than four months, and for the institution of suits than two years. This is shown by the express language of the amendment, and we do not deem it necessary to set out the language of the Cummins Amendment, for the language relied upon by counsel for the plaintiff to sustain their present contention is contained in the Interstate Commerce Act as it existed before the Cummins Amendment was adopted. The clause of the bill of lading relied upon by the railroad company to exempt it from liability in the case at bar is that property, when received on a private siding for shipment, shall be at the owner's risk until the car or cars containing it are attached to a train. This contract does not undertake to limit the railroad company's liability as a common carrier; it merely defines the circumstances under which delivery for shipment and acceptance by the railroad company shall be understood as having taken place between the parties. The liability of the railroad company, under the Interstate Commerce Act, attaches as soon as the goods are delivered to the carrier for immediate shipment and are accepted by it. By the clause in question the parties undertook to agree when the delivery and acceptance were complete, and the meaning and intent of the clause in question was that the delivery for shipment and acceptance should be complete when the car was removed from the siding and attached to a train."

Validity as to connecting carrier.—If a limitation is invalid as to the initial carrier it is likewise invalid as to a connecting carrier. Wabash R. Co. v. Holt, (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1920) 263 Fed. 72, wherein the court said:

"The test of validity is to ascertain what the statute permitted the initial carrier to do in respect of making the bill of lading contract. That carrier cannot, by such a clause as was first above quoted, limit its own liability. Therefore such clause was invalid in toto; it never existed in legal effect."

"Thus, and thus only, can uniformity of bill of lading operation over a long line of carriers be secured, and we think this method has been insisted on in the ruling cases cited. Every bill, the moment it is signed, stands purged of all matters forbidden by statute, including language obnoxious to the Cummins Amendment. If such clause does not in legal effect exist when the bill is signed, it does not exist at all, and the bill is to be read without it."

3. Agreed Valuation (p. 526)

In general.—"The permissibility of limiting the recovery, in case of liability, to a valuation of the freight agreed upon or declared by the shipper is conclusively established. . . . The permissibility must, however, be shown or declared by the established and filed classifications and schedule of rates and charges, and in accordance with them invoked and executed." Burke v. Union Pac. R. Co., (1919) 226 N. Y. 534, 124 N. E. 119.

Estoppel as ground for giving effect to stipulations for agreed value.—"Stipulations for an agreed value, when made the basis for the rate, are not agreements for exemptions from negligence, and are given effect upon the ground of estoppel." Burke v. Union Pac. R. Co., (1919) 226 N. Y. 534, 124 N. E. 119.

Computation of loss based on value of property at place and time of shipment, including freight charges.—The stipulation in the uniform bill of lading that the amount of any loss or damage for which any carrier is liable shall be computed on the basis of the value of the property at the place and time of shipment, including freight charges, if paid, which is sanctioned by the Interstate Commerce Commission as in no way limiting the carrier's liability to less than the value of the goods, but as merely offering the most convenient way of finding the value, but which does in fact prevent a recovery of the full actual loss, where the shipment would have been worth more at destination than at origin, is inconsistent with and invalidated by the provision of the Cummins Amendment of March 4, 1915, that carriers shall be liable to the holder of the bill of lading for the full actual loss, damage, or injury, notwithstanding any limitation of liability or limitation of the amount of recovery, or representation or agreement as to value. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. McCaull-Dinsmore Co., (1920) 253 U. S. 97, 40 S. Ct. 504, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1919) 260 Fed. 835, 171 C. C. A. 561.

The provision in the uniform bill of lading, in respect to an interstate shipment, that the amount of loss or damage for which the carrier shall be liable in case of loss shall be computed as of the value represented by the bona fide invoice price, if any, at the place and time of shipment, including the freight charges, if prepaid, is not a limitation of the carrier's liability for negligence. Scowman-Kranz Lumber Co. v. Bush, (Neb. 1920) 176 N. W. 91, wherein the court said: "Plaintiff argues that the provision in question is an attempt to limit the liability of the carrier for negligence, and that it is therefore void under the Cummins Amendment. The recent decisions seem to hold otherwise. This provision has been construed and held by the Interstate Commerce Commission and by the federal and state courts to be a reasonable rule by which to determine the value of a shipment in case of loss, and that it is not a limitation of the carrier's liability for negligence. Shaffer & Co. v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 21 Interst. Com. Com'n R. 8; Springfield Light, Heat & Power Co. v. Norfolk & W. R. Co. (D. C.) 260 Fed. 254; Wallingford v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co., 101 Kan. 544, 167 Pac. 1136, L. R. A. 1918B, 716. Under the Cummins amendment it has been upheld. In re Cummins Amendment, 33 Interst. Com. Com'n R. 682, at page 693. Some of the authorities point out that the rule is salutary, in that the invoice value of the shipment, with freight added where it has been prepaid, can be readily ascertained, and that prompt settlement can be made by the parties without resort to tedious and expensive litigation."

Relation of agreed value to actual value as test of validity of contract.—“The validity of a contract limiting the carrier's liability to an agreed valuation does not depend upon the relation of that value to the actual value.” Burke v. Union Pac. R. Co., (1919) 226 N. Y. 534, 124 N. E. 119.

A choice of rates must be given the shipper before a carrier can successfully claim the benefit of an agreed valuation. Burke v. Union Pac. R. Co., (1919) 226 N. Y. 534, 124 N. E. 119, wherein the court said: “There was neither two or more rates based upon valuation, nor the opportunity for a valuation by the shipper for the purpose of the rate and the liability. In this it differs from the case of Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago & St. Louis Ry. v. Dettlebach, 239 U. S. 588, 36 Sup. Ct. 177, 60 L. Ed. 453, in which the trial court found as a fact that the shipper, by consenting to the limited valuation, received a consideration in the shape of a substantial reduction in the freight rate.”

Admission in bill of lading as to alternate rates.—Where a bill of lading, duly delivered and accepted, declares that lawful alternate rates based on specified values were offered, such declaration constitutes an admission by the shipper and sufficient prima facie evidence of choice. Burke v. Union Pac. R. Co., (1919) 226 N. Y. 534, 124 N. E. 119.

4. Notice of Claim (p. 529)

In general.—To the same effect as the original annotation see Mason v. Maine Cent. R. Co., (Me. 1920) 110 Atl. 425, wherein the court said:

“One of the chief features of the Carmack Amendment was the requirement that the carrier must issue to the shipper a bill of lading in form approved by the Interstate Commerce Commission; and this bill of lading constitutes the contract between the parties and regulates and defines their respective rights and liabilities.

“The right of a carrier to reasonably limit, by express agreement with the shipper, its liability, so far merely as the time within which notice of loss should be given or suit brought, has always been recognized. Express Co. v. Caldwell, 21 Wall. 264, 22 L. Ed. 556.

“This right of special agreement was neither created nor destroyed by the Carmack Amendment, but was recognized as valid within certain specified limits, viz.: Notice of claims not to be fixed by contract at less than ninety days, filing of claims to be fixed by contract at not less than four months, and institution of suits at not less than two years. But this limit must be by stipulation.

“Acting within statutory authority, the bill of lading in this case was prepared in standard form, and was approved by the Interstate Commerce Commission by order of June 27, 1908. Section 3 of the conditions printed on the back provided, among other things, as follows:

“Claims for loss, damage, or delay must be made in writing to the carrier at the point of delivery or at the point of origin, within four months after delivery of the property, or, in case of failure to make delivery, then within four months after a reasonable time for delivery. Unless claims are so made the carrier shall not be liable.”

“Under the federal statutes this condition was a reasonable one, and, when assented to by the shipper, it became a valid stipulation or contract between the parties, and the shipper was bound by it. As it was fully printed and clearly expressed on the back of the bill, and as the shipper signed and accepted the bill of lading with this printed condition upon it, his assent is presumed, and the special contract was completed.

“If the shipper in this case had not given notice or filed his claim within the time specified in his contract, he would undoubtedly be precluded from recovery.”

Application of last proviso.—The proviso that notice of claim may not be required where the damage occurred in loading or unloading or by reason of carelessness or negligence in transit, does not apply where the liability is predicated solely on a failure to transport cattle safely, no negligence being averred. Cunningham v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., (Mo. App. 1920) 219 S. W. 1003.

Waiver of limitation.—The carrier cannot waive or estop itself to urge a valid limitation. Shroyer v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., (Tex. 1920) 222 S. W. 1095.

In Fay v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., (Ia. 1919) 173 N. W. 69, it was held that a provision in a bill of lading “that claims for loss, damage, or delay must be made in writing to the carrier at the point of delivery or at the point of origin within four months after delivery of the property, or, in case of failure to make delivery, then within four months after reasonable time for delivery has elapsed,” could not be waived. The court said:

“The design of that [Carmack] amendment was to avoid all possibility of discrimination by the carrier in dealing with shippers. That to permit waiver would open the door to preference seems self-evident. In Phillips v. Grand Trunk Co., 236 U. S. 662, 35 Sup. Ct. 444, 59 L. Ed. 774, the point considered was whether a carrier might waive a statute of limitations relative to the filing of claims with the Interstate Commerce Commission, and with reference thereto the court said: ‘The obligation of the carrier to adhere to the legal rate, to refund only what is permitted by law, and to treat all shippers alike would have made it illegal for the carriers, either by silence or by express waiver, to preserve to the Phillips Co. a right of action which the statute required should be asserted within a fixed period. To have one period of limitation where the complaint is filed before the commission and the varying periods of limitation of the different states, where a suit was brought in a court of competent jurisdiction, or to permit a railroad company to plead the statute of limitations as against some and to waive it as against others, would be to prefer some and discriminate against others in violation of the terms of the Commerce Act, which forbids all devices by which such results may be accomplished. The prohibitions of the statute against unjust discrimination relate, not only to inequality of charges and inequality of facilities, but also to the giving of preferences by means of consent judgments or the waiver of defenses open to the carrier. The railroad company therefore was bound to claim the benefit of the statute here,' etc.

"There a statutory limitation was involved, while here it is one by contract, but neither may be avoided under the Interstate Commerce Act by the 'giving of' preferences by means of consent judgments or the waiver of defenses open to the carriers. The precise point was covered in Georgia, F. & A. R. Co. v. Blish Milling Co., 241 U. S. 190, 36 Sup. Ct. 541, 60 L. Ed. 948, where the claim was based on the misdelivery of and injury to flour shipped, and the contention was that the limitation clause was inapplicable, and that the carrier, in making misdelivery, converted the flour, and thus abandoned the contract. The court, after deciding that this clause might not be obviated by the mere form of the action, observed with reference to abandoning the contract that—

"The parties could not waive the terms of the contract under which the shipment was made pursuant to the federal act; nor could the carrier by its conduct give the shipper the right to ignore these terms which were applicable to that conduct, and hold the carrier to a different responsibility from that fixed by the agreement made under the published tariffs and regulations. A different view would antagonize the plain policy of the act and open the door to the very abuses at which the act was aimed."

"See, also, Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Kirby, 225 U. S. 155, 32 Sup. Ct. 648, 56 L. Ed. 1033, Ann. Cas. 1914A, 501; Olivit Bros. v. Penn. R. Co., 88 N. J. Law, 241, 96 Atl. 582; Banaka v. Mo. Pac. R. Co., 193 Mo. App. 345, 186 S. W. 7.

"Under the rule of equality as sought to be established by the Carmack Amendment, the carrier may not say to one shipper, I will insist on the strict observance of the clause requiring you to file your claim within four months, and to another, I will release you entirely from that requirement. Surely this would be waiving a defense open to the carrier and a discrimination as between shippers. Whether the carrier might estop itself from raising the defense by misleading the shipper prior to the expiration of the time limit within which notice must be given we have no occasion to decide, as the point is not raised by pleading or in brief."

5. Time for Bringing Suit (p. 532)

Insufficient stipulation as to time for bringing suit, see Mason v. Maine Cent. R. Co., (Me. 1920) 110 Atl. 425.

XV. PARTIES (p. 535)

Consignor as party aggrieved and entitled to sue.—The rule that where a shipment of goods is delivered to the carrier addressed to the consignee, the latter is the party aggrieved and the only one entitled to maintain his action against the carrier for loss or damage resulting to the shipment through the carrier's negligence, does not apply when it appears that the consignor and consignee have by their agreement or contract changed this ordinary rule, as where the consignee, with the consent of the consignor, has deducted the amount of such damage from the purchase price and the consignor had accordingly accepted the settlement, for such is, in effect, equitable assignment by the consignor of his right to recover of the carrier, and the consignor may maintain his action therefor. Produce Trading Co. v. Norfolk Southern R. Co., (1919) 178 N. C. 175, 100 S. E. 316, which further held that a consignee of goods shipped to him has a reasonable right of inspection before accepting them from the carrier, and to reject them if damaged by the carrier's negligence; and that where the consignee has accepted such damaged shipment under an agreement with the consignor that such damages be deducted from the purchase price, the consignor may recover them from the carrier, as the party aggrieved.

Bill of lading held as security.—A "lawful holder" of a bill of lading is entitled to maintain an action for loss of the property represented by the bill, although he held the bill as security merely, not being the consignor or consignee. Winget v. Grand Trunk Western R. Co., (Mich. 1920) 177 N. W. 273.

Election of remedies.—Although a shipper of horses damaged in transportation brings an action against the initial carrier at common law, sounding in tort, and claiming damages for the negligent manner in which the defendant performed its duties as a common carrier, it may take a nonsuit and proceed again under the provision of the Carmack Amendment, in an action sounding in contract. Hayden v. Maine Cent. R. Co., (1920) 118 Me. 442, 108 Atl. 681, wherein the court said:

"In the case at bar the plaintiff first invoked an action which, as the facts proved, was inefficient to enforce liability on connecting railways, and hence was a mistaken selection of action; and he was not, by this selection, prevented from invoking the second and appropriate action. Upon this branch of the case the exceptions must also be overruled."

XVII. TRIAL

1. Burden of Proof (p. 535)

Damage from inherent defect of goods.—“The rule followed by the Supreme Court of the United States is that when it has been shown that damage results from inherent infirmity of the goods transported under circumstances not showing negligence, the burden of proving negligence devolves upon the plaintiff. Hutchison on Carriers, vol. 3, sec. 1355; Southern Ry. Co. v. Prescott, 240 U. S. 632, 36 S. Ct. 469, 60 U. S. (L. ed.) 836. In view of the fact that liability in this case is predicated upon damage to an interstate shipment, and in recognition of the controlling force of the decisions of the United States Supreme Court in such cases, we are constrained in this instance to follow the national court rule, notwithstanding we think the established rule of this state the sounder and more just rule.” Cleburne Peanut, etc., Co. v. Missouri, etc., R. Co., (Tex. 1920) 221 S. W. 270.

II. NATURE AND PURPOSE (p. 550)

Purpose of Act.—The purpose of Congress in passing this Act “was to cut up by the roots every form of discrimination, favoritism, and inequality.” Dye v. U. S., (C. C. A. 4th Cir. 1919) 262 Fed. 6.

VI. WILFULNESS AND KNOWLEDGE (p. 553)

Knowledge.—A coal company which, under the obligation or supposed obligation of a covenant in a lease of its own railroad to a connecting carrier, has been receiving a “lateral allowance” from such carrier which was referred to in the latter’s published tariff, but not specified in figures therein, may, when criminally prosecuted for knowingly accepting, by any device whatever, transportation at less than the published rates, offer evidence that such allowance had been accepted in good faith, in the honest belief that the payment was justified by the lease, and in the honest belief, supported by an assurance that the payments had the sanction of the Interstate Commerce Commission, that the allowance was properly and legally noted and provided for in the published tariffs. Lehigh Coal, etc., Nav. Co. v. U. S., (1919) 250 U. S. 556, 40 S. Ct. 24, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, wherein the court said:

“The way to a correct construction of the act was to an extent cleared by the case of Armour Packing Co. v. United States, 209 U. S. 56, 52 L. ed. 681, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 428. Its evolution was there detailed. It was said that carrier and shipper are charged with an equal responsibility and liability, and that the act ‘proceeded upon broad lines to accomplish’ this equality, and ‘that the only rate charged to a shipper for the same service under the same conditions should be the one established, published, and posted as required by law.’ And this was declared in various ways to be the test of obligation and liability, and the ‘form by which or the motive for which’ its evasion or disregard is accomplished is not of modifying or determining consideration. It was in effect decided that the purpose of the statute took emphasis and meaning from the use of the word ‘device,’ and ‘device’ was defined to be ‘anything which is a plan or contrivance,’ and is ‘disassociated’ from qualification, and ‘need not be necessarily fraudulent,’ and by it the act ‘sought to reach all means and methods by which the unlawful preference of rebate, or concession or discrimination is offered, granted, given, or received.’

“It is in effect the contention of the government that the language of the case exhausts definition and excludes the supposition of the questions of the circuit court of appeals. We are unable to concur. The language of the case is easily explained by the question that was presented for decision. The Armour Packing Company contended that the act was directed only at fraudulent conduct, the obtaining of a rebate by some dishonest or underhand method, concession, or discrimination. The language of the court was addressed to this contention, and its selection and adequacy are manifest.

“No such contention is made in the case at bar, and there are other distinguishing elements. It will be observed that by the statute and the decision the test of equality is the tariff rate. It was said in the opinion that it is ‘the purpose of the act to punish those who give or receive transportation, in the sense of actual carriage, at a concession from the published rates’ (New York C. & H. R. R. Co. v. United States, 212 U. S. 500, 505, 53 L. ed. 624, 627, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 309). And such was the offense of the Armour Packing Company. There was no evasion of the tariff rate in the case at bar. The filed tariff indicated the existence and obligation of the 10th covenant of the lease from the company to the railroad; that is, the fact of the allowance was declared, though it did not have specification in figures. The tariff, of course, would have been more definite and complete with such specifications, but its sufficiency was certainly believed in, for between 1906 and the date of the indictment it had 282 repetitions. The company was given besides the assurance that it had the sanction of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

“There was no attempt at deception. The Commission knew by examination of the company’s books of the allowance and the amount of the allowance. Such, then, is the situation, and distinguishes the case from the Armour Packing Co. Case. There there was an omission to comply with the statute, and the omission was attempted to be justified by honesty of motive and purpose; here there was compliance or attempted compliance with the statute—a tariff filed—and if a question could be raised upon its legal sufficiency the belief of the company in its legality was supported by high authority, and those circumstances can bring into action and exculpating effect the provision of the statute which requires the acceptance of a rebate to be 'knowingly' done to incur the guilt of a misdemeanor. This conclusion gives no detrimental example against the efficacy of the law.

"We think this comment and conclusion enough to dispose of the questions asked, and that there is no necessity to review the cases cited by the company or the government."

VIII. REBATES (p. 554)

Refund of difference between local and through rates.—In Pennsylvania Co. v. U. S., (C. C. A. 7th Cir. 1919) 257 Fed. 261, 168 C. C. A. 345, it was held that refunds on cars of grain, allowed under a traffic arrangement whereby cars of grain coming into Chicago might be switched and unloaded into a local elevator and upon reloading the same or similar tonnage of like grain, for shipment to an eastern point, the shipper might, on surrendering his freight bill for the inbound shipment, secure a lower through rate from the western point of origin to the point of destination of the outbound shipment, violated the provisions of this section where nothing in the tariff provisions of the railroad, at the time the shipments were made, justified the refunds. To same effect, see Pittsburgh, etc., R. Co. v. U. S., (C. C. A. 7th Cir. 1919) 257 Fed. 265, 168 C. C. A. 349.

IX. CONCESSION OR DISCRIMINATION (p. 555)

Actual discrimination.—Actual discrimination between shippers is not a necessary element of a violation of this Act. Pennsylvania Co. v. U. S., (C. C. A. 7th Cir. 1919) 257 Fed. 261, 168 C. C. A. 345; Pittsburgh, etc., R. Co. v. U. S., (C. C. A. 7th Cir. 1919) 257 Fed. 265, 168 C. C. A. 349.

XI. INDICTMENT (p. 557)

Discriminating by device.—An indictment charging that the defendant violated this section by discriminating by a device in the allotment of freight cars to various mines, need not describe the device by which the discrimination was effected. Dye v. U. S., (C. C. A. 4th Cir. 1919) 262 Fed. 6. In passing upon this question, the court said:

"In denouncing discrimination 'by any device' the statute does not mean that a device is necessary to the offense, but that if any device is used the courts are to look through it to the real nature of the transaction. Armour Packing Co. v. United States, 209 U. S. 56, 95, 28 Sup. Ct. 428, 52 L. Ed. 681. For the same reason there was no abuse of discretion in refusing the motion for a bill of particulars as to the nature of the device. Besides, the letters of the defendant and other evidence show that the defendant could not have failed to know the transactions to which the indictment related."

Vol. IV, p. 573, sec. 1. [First ed., 1914 Supp., p. 203.]

Goods moving between points in same state through another state.—This section applies to goods moving between terminal points in a single state but by routings through other states. U. S. v. Moynihan, (C. C. A. 3d Cir. 1919) 258 Fed. 529, 169 C. C. A. 469. In passing upon the scope of this section, the court said:

"The first substantial question here involved is whether, under the facts proven and the inferences and findings the jury drew therefrom, Moynihan was guilty of violating the statute in question.

"The determination of that question depends on whether the bale of silk which Moynihan, and those confederating with him, were endeavoring to steal, was included under the broad term, 'any goods or chattels moving as, or which are a part of, or which constitute an interstate . . . shipment of . . . express.' That the bale of silk constituted 'goods and chattels' is a fact; that they were moving as and constituted a shipment of express is equally undeniable; and that the express company could only carry them to destination by taking the bale from its own dock in New York state and delivering it to a railroad's own cars at its terminus in New Jersey is also certain. Such being the unquestioned facts, it follows that the bale of silk was actually moving as an interstate shipment, and was the class of commerce Congress had power to protect from depredation in transit. It follows, therefore, that Moynihan's crime was punishable under the statute, unless we are to hold that, notwithstanding the facts found, this court shall hold that because the bale of silk started from, and was to be delivered to, points in New York state, the bale was thereby so theoretically fixed as an intrastate shipment that its compulsory interstate routings between those intrastate points did not confer an interstate character as it moved over this compulsory interstate route. To give this act, in its application to the particular case before us, the narrow construction here contended for, would result in such disastrous consequences to the safety of goods moving on many interstate routes over the country between shipping and delivery points situate in the same state as may well cause us to hesitate. Take, for example, a single instance in this circuit; the great traffic, by freight and express, carried over the Baltimore & Ohio System between Philadelphia and Pittsburgh. Both termini are in the state of Pennsylvania, but the routing is through Delaware, Maryland, and West Virginia. In such interstate transit, shipments between these two Pennsylvania terminals, during their movement through these other states, remain in terminal yards, may be transhipped, are handled by many employes, and are, by means of moving through such other states, in need of that protection which the federal government can alone afford to shipments passing outside the borders of a state. Although the shipment and delivery points of this particular traffic are both in Pennsylvania, yet, by reason of its necessarily interstate movement between those intrastate points, Pennsylvania is unable to protect such commerce, and for such interstate protection the interstate powers of the federal government are absolutely necessary.

"Now, over Moynihan's crime, committed, as it was, wholly in New Jersey, New York could have no jurisdiction. And in the country at large there must be a great many like instances of necessarily like interstate routings between intrastate points, in the minds of Congress when this statute was passed. That Congress meant, in the broad terms it used, 'goods or chattels moving as, or which are a part of, or which constitute an interstate . . . shipment of freight or express,' to exclude from federal jurisdiction and federal interstate protection the vast volume of freight and express thus moving between terminal points in a single state, but by routings through other states, is simply unbelievable."

Constructive possession.—To same effect as 1919 Supplement annotation, see Le Fanti v. U. S., (C. C. A. 3d Cir. 1919) 259 Fed. 460, 170 C. C. A. 436, affirming (D. C. N. J. 1919) 255 Fed. 210.

Place from which goods are stolen.—The provisions of this section regarding the larceny of goods constituting an interstate or foreign shipment of freight or express, are limited to thefts from certain designated places. Accordingly, where the proofs in a prosecution under this section are insufficient to warrant the jury in finding that an allegation in the indictment that the goods in question were stolen from a depot of an express company, has been sustained, the conviction of the defendant must be reversed. U. S. v. Moynihan, (C. C. A. 3d Cir. 1919) 258 Fed. 529, 169 C. C. A. 469.

Indictment—Knowledge.—To same effect as original annotation, see Grandi v. U. S., (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1920) 262 Fed. 123.

Surplusage.—In an indictment for knowingly receiving goods stolen while in interstate transit, an averment of intent of the accused to convert the same to his own use is surplusage and may be disregarded. Nichamin v. U. S., (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1920) 263 Fed. 880.

Evidence—Admissibility.—To same effect as 1919 Supplement annotation, see Le Fanti v. U. S., (C. C. A. 3d Cir. 1919) 259 Fed. 460, 170 C. C. A. 436, affirming (D. C. N. J. 1919) 255 Fed. 210.

Circumstantial evidence.—Conviction of the offense of having in possession goods and chattels, knowing them to have been stolen while in course of interstate commerce, may be established upon circumstantial evidence. Chass v. U. S., (C. C. A. 3d Cir. 1919) 258 Fed. 911, 169 C. C. A. 631, wherein it was held that the evidence was sufficient to sustain a conviction.

Sufficiency.—In Le Fanti v. U. S., (C. C. A. 3d Cir. 1919) 259 Fed. 460, 170 C. C. A. 436, affirming (D. C. N. J. 1919) 255 Fed. 210, it was contended that the evidence was insufficient to show guilty knowledge on the part of the accused in receiving stolen goods in violation of this section. Answering this contention, the court said:

"The statute (Act Feb. 13, 1913, c. 50, 37 Stat. 670) which makes the act charged a crime was passed to promote a policy of the law. The policy is to discourage thefts by making it difficult for the thief to dispose of stolen property. One dealing with property in the possession of another may deal with any one of several beliefs in mind. He may think the vendor to be the lawful owner of the property, or have other lawful right to sell. If such be his belief, he is not guilty of the crime of receiving, although the property be in fact stolen property. He may believe (and this is knowledge) that the one offering him the property is selling that of which he is not the owner, and of which he has no lawful right to dispose. He may not know from whom the property was stolen, or when it was stolen, or who stole it, or the circumstances under which it was stolen; but if with the guilty knowledge in his mind that the real owner has been deprived of his property, it is bought or otherwise received, and the fact is that the property was stolen, the receiver may be found guilty of the crime defined in the statute under which the defendants were indicted in this case. Such a receiver cannot exculpate himself, because he might have thought that the property had been embezzled. If the property was in fact stolen, and there is that guilty knowledge in the mind of the receiver which negatives the thought that he bought innocently what he thought he had the right to buy, the fact of actual theft, coupled with the fact of such guilty knowledge, supports a finding that he received the property knowing it to have been stolen. Inasmuch as the statute defines the crime as one including both the fact of theft and the fact of knowledge of the theft, it follows that, if there was no theft, the buying of the property is not criminal, even if the buyer believe the property to have been stolen.

"Here there was abundant evidence to find both the fact of theft and the knowledge of the receiver that the property had been stolen. The theoretical possibility (for this is all which is urged) that the information which brought home to him (as the jury has found) knowledge that the property was stolen, might have induced him to believe that the property had been embezzled, does not disturb either the fact finding that it was stolen or the fact finding that the receiver knew it. The trial judge, in the opinion filed in this case, has made the soundness of this ruling so clear that further comment or citation of other authorities than those cited by him is unnecessary."

Vol. IV, p. 575, sec. 1. [First ed., 1916 Supp., p. 112.]

Purpose of Act.—It was the intent of Congress, by the passage of this Act, to exercise some of the powers vested in it by the Constitution to regulate interstate and foreign commerce. U. S. v. Basic Products Co., (W. D. Pa. 1919) 260 Fed. 472.

Vol. IV, p. 577, sec. 5 [A]. [First ed., 1916 Supp., p. 114.]

Purpose and scope of section.—Unfair methods of competition between individuals are not contemplated by this section. The intent of this section is to provide a method of preventing practices unfair to the general public and very particularly such as if not prevented will grow so large as to lessen competition and create monopolies in violation of the Anti-Trust Acts. Thus, where firms selling steel ties used for binding bales of cotton, refuse to sell ties unless the purchaser also buys from them bagging to be used with the ties, the commission may not prohibit such practice on the ground that it is unfair competition. Federal Trade Commission v. Gratz, (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1919) 258 Fed. 314, 169 C. C. A. 330.

Constitutionality.—This section is not unconstitutional as being an unlawful delegation of legislative and judicial power to the commission. Sears v. Federal Trade Commission, (C. C. A. 7th Cir. 1919) 258 Fed. 307, 169 C. C. A. 323, 6 A. L. R. 358. In passing upon the constitutionality of this section, the court said:

"With the increasing complexity of human activities many situations arise where governmental control can be secured only by the 'board' or 'commission' form of legislation. In such instances Congress declares the public policy, fixes the general principles that are to control, and charges an administrative body with the duty of ascertaining within particular fields from time to time the facts which bring into play the principles established by Congress. Though the action of the commission in finding the facts and declaring them to be specific offenses of the character embraced within the general definition by Congress may be deemed to be quasi legislative, it is so only in the sense that it converts the actual legislation from a static into a dynamic condition. But the converter is not the electricity. And though the action of the commission in ordering desistance may be counted quasi judicial on account of its form, with respect to power it is not judicial, because a judicial determination is only that which is embodied in a judgment or decree of a court and enforceable by execution or other writ of the court."

"Unfair methods of competition."—This section is not void for indefiniteness because it fails to define what constitutes "unfair methods of competition." Sears v. Federal Trade Commission, (C. C. A. 7th Cir. 1919) 258 Fed. 207, 169 C. C. A. 323, 6 A. L. R. 358, wherein the court said: "Petitioner urges that the declaration of section 5 must be held void for indefiniteness unless the words 'unfair methods of competition' be construed to embrace no more than acts which on September 26, 1914, when Congress spoke, were identifiable as acts of unfair trade then condemned by the common law as expressed in prior cases. . . . On the face of this statute the legislative intent is apparent. The commissioners are not required to aver and prove that any competitor has been damaged or that any purchaser has been deceived. The commissioners, representing the government as parens patriæ, are to exercise their common sense, as informed by their knowledge of the general idea of unfair trade at common law, and stop all those trade practices that have a capacity or tendency to injure competitors directly or through deception of purchasers, quite irrespective of whether the specific practices in question have yet been denounced in common-law cases. But the restraining order of the commissioners is merely provisional. The trader is entitled to his day in court, and there the same principles and tests that have been applied under the common law or under statutes of the kinds hereinbefore recited are expected by Congress to control. This prima facie reading of legislative intent is confirmed by reference to committee reports and debates in Congress, wherein is disclosed a refusal to limit the commission and the court to a prescribed list of specific acts. Cong. Rec. 63d Cong. 2d Session, pp. 13, 18, 533, 12246. And this interpretation is not affected by the subsequent adoption of the Clayton Act, October 15, 1914 (38 Stat. 731, c. 323), condemning certain specific acts."

Scope of commission's power.—While the commission has no power under this section to restrain an owner of property from selling it at any price that is acceptable to him or from giving it away, it may prohibit him in making such a sale or gift from putting forward representations and committing acts which amount to unfair competition. Sears v. Federal Trade Commission, (C. C. A. 7th Cir. 1919) 258 Fed. 307, 169 C. C. A. 323, 6 A. L. R. 358.

Discontinuance of unfair methods as affecting issuance of order.—Under this section the Federal Trade Commission may issue an order prohibiting a company from practicing certain unfair methods of competition, despite the fact that the company has discontinued the methods in question at the time of the issuance of the order, where it appears that the company contends that the act is unconstitutional, that it is void for indefiniteness, and that, if valid, it was not infringed by the company's practices. Sears v. Federal Trade Commission, (C. C. A. 7th Cir. 1919) 258 Fed. 307, 169 C. C. A. 323, 6 A. L. R. 358.

Vol. IV, p. 578, sec. 5 [B]. [First ed., 1916 Supp., p. 114.]

Sufficiency of complaint.—A complaint issued by the Federal Trade Commission under this section, is wholly insufficient to charge respondents with practicing "unfair methods of competition in commerce" within the meaning of that section, and hence affords no foundation for an order of the commission directing them to desist from using such prohibited method of competition, where it alleges that respondents, engaged in selling cotton ties and bagging, refused to sell any ties unless the purchaser would buy from them a corresponding amount of bagging, but contains no intimation that they did not properly obtain their ties and bagging as merchants usually do, does not state the amount controlled by them, or allege that they held a monopoly of either ties or bagging, or had the ability, purpose, or intent to acquire one, averring nothing which would justify the conclusion that the public suffered injury, or that competitors had reasonable ground for complaint. Federal Trade Commission v. Gratz, (1920) 253 U. S. 421, 40 S. Ct. 572, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) — (affirming (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1919) 258 Fed. 314, 169 C. C. A. 330), wherein the court said:

"When proceeding under § 5, it is essential, first, that, having reason to believe a person, partnership, or corporation has used an unfair method of competition in commerce, the Commission shall conclude a proceeding 'in respect thereof would be to the interest of the public;' next, that it formulate and serve a complaint stating the charges 'in that respect,' and give opportunity to the accused to show why an order should not issue directing him to 'cease and desist from the violation of the law so charged in said complaint.' If, after a hearing, the Commission shall deem 'the method of competition in question is prohibited by this act,' it shall issue an order requiring the accused 'to cease and desist from using such method of competition.'

"If, when liberally construed, the complaint is plainly insufficient to show unfair competition within the proper meaning of these words, there is no foundation for an order to desist,—the thing which may be prohibited is the method of competition specified in the complaint. Such an order should follow the complaint; otherwise it is improvident, and, when challenged, will be annulled by the court.

"The words 'unfair method of competition' are not defined by the statute, and their exact meaning is in dispute. It is for the courts, not the Commission, ultimately to determine, as matter of law, what they include. They are clearly inapplicable to practices never heretofore regarded as opposed to good morals because characterized by deception, bad faith, fraud, or oppression, or as against public policy because of their dangerous tendency unduly to hinder competition or create monopoly. The act was certainly not intended to fetter free and fair competition as commonly understood and practiced by honorable opponents in trade."

Vol. IV, p. 578, sec. 5 [C]. [First ed., 1916 Supp., p. 114.]

Review on certiorari of an order of the Circuit Court of Appeals annulling an order of the Federal Trade Commission, was had in Federal Trade Commission v. Gratz. (1920) 253 U. S. 421, 40 S. Ct. 572, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —.

Vol. IV, p. 579, sec. 5 [D]. [First ed., 1916 Supp., p. 114.]

Printing the transcript.—In National Harness Manufacturers' Assoc. v. Federal Trade Commission, (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1919) 261 Fed. 170, the court denied a motion of the association to dispense with printing the record; and the record not having been printed, the commission moved to dismiss the petition for review. It was held that rule 19 (202 Fed. xiii, 118 C. C. A. xiii), which provides for the printing of all records, contemplates only records in those proceedings to which the body of the rules is applicable, viz., records on writs of error or appeal or on some specified petitions, and that in the instant case there should be a revision and condensation of the transcript before it is printed, and that a satisfactory practice will be obtained by following the analogy of general equity rule 75 (198 Fed. xl, 115 C. C. A. xl). The court said:

"The order, therefore, will be that the former order refusing to dispense with printing be vacated; that the petitioner, within thirty days, prepare and serve upon the commission a statement of such parts of the record as the petitioner thinks should be printed, including a condensed narrative of so much of the testimony as is material to the points to be raised; that within thirty days thereafter the commission propose such amendments to such statement and narrative as it thinks proper; and that, if the parties do not thereupon promptly reach an agreement as to the record necessary to be printed, the matter be brought to the further attention of the court."

Vol. IV, p. 580, sec. 6 (a). [First ed., 1916 Supp., p. 115.]

Scope of investigations by commission.—This section does not authorize the Federal Trade Commission to investigate the cost of producing a patented product and perhaps the amount of compensation which should be paid by the United States in order that the navy might acquire the same. U. S. v. Basic Products Co., (W. D. Pa. 1919) 260 Fed. 472. Regarding the scope of the commission's powers, the court said:

"The commission relies upon subdivision (a) of section 6 of the act. Section 6 contains a further statement of particular powers vested in the commission, and appears to authorize proceedings in which no complaints against any person, partnership, or corporation are required to be served. The opening of that section, including subdivision (a), is as follows:

"That the commission shall also have power—

"(a) To gather and compile information concerning, and to investigate from time to time the organization, business, conduct, practices, and management of any corporation engaged in commerce, excepting banks and common carriers subject to the act to regulate commerce, and its relation to other corporations and to individuals, associations, and partnerships.' . . . It is plain that Congress intended to give the commission a power unprecedented in its scope. In the argument on behalf of the plaintiff, it was insisted that under the act, the commission was given the right to investigate any question having to do with any business of any corporation, except banks and common carriers subject to the control of the Interstate Commerce Commission, to conduct a hearing at any point in the United States, and compel there the attendance of any witnesses and the production of any records from any other point in the United States. There was no suggestion of the limitations to be found in the acts themselves, other than the limitation just mentioned. In other words, it was probably assumed that every corporation, with respect to which the commission intended to conduct an investigation, was engaged in interstate commerce within the meaning of the act. In the argument, as well as in the petition, there was lacking the assertion of facts which would bring the defendant within the terms of the act of Congress. Nowhere has it been made to appear that the defendant is engaged in interstate commerce in any other way than any other corporation or any citizen may be so engaged, by making one or more shipments of manufactured goods from one state into another.

"The following quotation from the opinion of Judge Jackson, in Re Greene, (C. C.) 52 Fed. 104-113, contains not only a definition, but an elaboration thereof, which suggests not only the limitations upon the power of Congress, but also possibilities of the existence of activities by entities corporate or otherwise, which might be brought within the jurisdiction conferred by the act upon the Federal Trade Commission:

"'Commerce among the states, within the exclusive regulating power of Congress, "consists of intercourse and traffic between their citizens, and includes the transportation of persons and property, as well as the purchase, sale, and exchange of commodities." County of Mobile v. Kimball, 102 U. S. 691-702 [26 L. ed. 238]; Gloucester Ferry Co. v. Pennsylvania, 114 U. S. 203, 5 Sup. Ct. 826 [29 L. ed. 158]. In the application of this comprehensive definition, it is settled by the decisions of the Supreme Court: That such commerce includes, not only the actual transportation of commodities and persons between the states, but also the instrumentalities and processes of such transportation. That it includes all the negotiations and contracts which have for their object, or involve as an element thereof, such transmission or passage from one state to another. That such commerce begins, and the regulating power of Congress attaches, when the commodity or thing traded in commences its transportation from the state of its production or situs to some other state or foreign country, and terminates when the transportation is completed, and the property has become a part of the general mass of the property in the state of its destination. When the commerce begins is determined, not by the character of the commodity, nor by the intention of the owner to transfer it to another state for sale, nor by his preparation of it for transportation, but by its actual delivery to a common carrier for transportation, or the actual commencement of its transfer to another state. At that time the power and regulating authority of the states ceases, and that of Congress attaches and continues, until it has reached another state, and becomes mingled with the general mass of property in the latter state. That neither the production or manufacture of articles or commodities which constitute subjects of commerce, and which are intended for trade and traffic with citizens of other states, nor the preparation for their transportation from the state where produced or manufactured, prior to the commencement of the actual transfer, or transmission thereof to another state, constitutes that interstate commerce which comes within the regulating power of Congress, and, further, that after the termination of the transportation of commodities or articles of traffic from one state to another, and the mingling or merging thereof in the general mass of property in the state of destination, the sale, distribution, and consumption thereof in the latter state forms no part of interstate commerce. Pensacola Tel. Co. v. Western Union Tel. Co., 96 U. S. 1 [24 L. Ed. 708]; Brown v. Houston, 114 U. S. 622, 5 Sup. Ct. 1091 [29 L. Ed. 257]; Coe v. Errol, 116 U. S. 517-520, 6 Sup. Ct. 475 [29 L. Ed. 715]; Robbins v. Taxing Dist., 120 U. S. 497, 7 Sup. Ct. 592 [30 L. Ed. 694]; and Kidd v. Pearson, 128 U. S. 1, 9 Sup. Ct. 6 [32 L. Ed. 346]. In the latter case the Supreme Court pointed out the distinction between commerce and the subjects thereof, and held that the manufacture of distilled spirits, even though they were intended for export to other states, was not commerce, falling within the regulating powers of Congress.

"Imagination, if not experience, can suggest that persons, partnerships, and corporations may be engaged in interstate commerce by the transportation of merchandise solely by water; that their activities may give them their income from lighterage; or they may be engaged in the sole business of forwarding goods, with no interest in the vessels or wagons on which they are transported. The foregoing are merely illustrations of activities which may perhaps be within the scope of the powers granted to the commission by the act as found in the fifth section thereof.

"Imagination, however, cannot suggest such an extension of constitutional limitation as may justify the investigation undertaken by the commission in this case. Indeed, so far as the matter has been brought to the attention of the court, no such assertion of power has ever been made to the courts. Investigation under subdivision (a), section 6, is limited to corporations engaged in interstate commerce. The defendant is engaged in manufacture."

1918 Supp., p. 387. [Initial carrier of goods, etc.]

This amendment conditionally qualifies the Cummins Amendment set out in 4 Fed. Stat. Ann. (2d ed.) 506, and under it a common carrier is required to obtain, by order of the Interstate Commerce Commission, the right to adopt alternative rates based on declared values of the shipment. If this is not done the shipper is not restricted, in an action to recover for loss of the shipment, to such declared value. Western Assur. Co. v. Wells, (1919) 143 Minn. 60, 173 N. W. 402, wherein the court, after setting out the Cummins Amendment, said:

"It is obvious from a reading of the foregoing amendment that it was the purpose of Congress to abolish the rule established by the courts restricting liabilities to the valuation upon which the rate paid was based. McCaull-Dinsmore Co. v. Railway Co. (D. C.) 252 Fed. 664; In re The Cummins Amendment, 33 Interst. Com. Comm. R. 682. Under that amendment the contract upon which the defendant claims the plaintiff's damages were limited in this case was void and of no effect. The Cummins Amendment was conditionally qualified by a subsequent act of Congress passed August 9, 1916. [See 1918 Supp. Fed. Stat. Ann. 387.] As bearing upon this amendment the holding of the Interstate Commerce Commission in Williams Co. v. Hartford & New York Transportation Co., 48 Interst. Com. Comm. R. 269, decided January 7, 1918, seems to be decisive of the case at bar. It is there stated that—

"By the amendment of August 9, 1916, the proviso last referred to was amended so as to provide that the provisions respecting liability for full actual loss, damage, or injury and declaring any limitation thereof to be unlawful and void shall not apply to baggage or to property, except ordinary live stock, on which the carrier has been or shall thereafter be authorized or required by order of the commission to establish and maintain rates dependent upon the value declared in writing by the shipper or agreed upon in writing as the released value of the property, in which case such declaration or agreement shall have no other effect than to limit liability and recovery to an amount not exceeding the value so declared or released, and shall not, so far as relates to values, be held to be a violation of section 10 of the act. The rates assailed were in effect on August 9, 1916. No authority has ever been granted by us for their publication in terms of value."

"Under this rule the plaintiff in this action is entitled to recover the full value of the lost package regardless of the contract limitation relied upon by the defendant, unless it appears that the Interstate Commerce Commission, prior to the shipment, had made an order authorizing the carrier to enter into a contract limiting its liability in this particular class of cases. It follows that, the defendant being required to obtain, by order of the Interstate Commerce Commission, the right to adopt alternative rates based on declared or stated values of the shipment, and it not appearing to have done so, the decision that the plaintiff is restricted in its recovery to such stated value of the shipment is not warranted by the facts in the case, and a new trial must be granted."

Prospective operation.—The provision of this amendment to the Cummins Amendment that the declared liability of a carrier for the actual loss shall not apply to contracts of limitation authorized by order of the Interstate Commerce Commission is given a prospective operation and does not apply to orders made by the Commission prior to March 4, 1915, the date of the passage of the Cummins Amendment. Western Assur. Co. v. Wells, (1919) 143 Minn. 60, 173 N. W. 402.

INTOXICATING LIQUORS

Vol. IV, p. 593. [Shipment of liquors, etc.] [First ed., 1914 Supp., p. 208.]

V. State laws.

1. In general.

VI. Duties and liabilities of common carriers.

V. STATE LAWS

1. In General (p. 600)

Liquor in transit through state.—A state has no jurisdiction to punish the bringing into the state from another state of liquor in transit to a third state unless the sale thereof in the state of its destination would be illegal. Haumschilt v. State, (Tenn. 1920) 221 S. W. 196.

VI. DUTIES AND LIABILITIES OF COMMON CARRIERS (p. 601)

Liquor transported in bond as subject to seizure by state officials.—In State v. Intoxicating Liquors, (Me. 1920) 109 Atl. 257, liquor exported from Scotland had been withdrawn from a bonded warehouse at the port of Chicago for transportation to a bonded warehouse at the port of Bangor, Maine, where it was seized by a state sheriff at the inward freight shed of the transporting railroad at Bangor. Neither payment nor tender of the unpaid customs duties thereon was made by such sheriff. The liquor was duly labeled and claim was thereupon filed by the freight agent of the transporting railroad on behalf of the Director General of Railroads then operating such road. On appeal from a municipal court declaring the liquor forfeited it was held that the seizure was illegal and the liquor was ordered returned to the claimant. The court said:

"At the time this liquor was imported into the United States, which was before the adoption of the Eighteenth or Prohibitory Federal Amendment and the passage of laws thereunder, it was a legitimate and dutiable article of merchandise which the laws of the United States permitted to be entered at designated ports of entry. This was entered at the custom house and warehouse in Chicago. Under the then existing laws it could be legally rewarehoused in any other district in the United States, and that rewarehousing was as legal and valid as the original warehousing. The right to rewarehouse did not depend upon whether the new district was or was not within a prohibitory state. To hold that is to amend and partially nullify sections 5635, 5686, and all the other sections regulating rewarehousing. There is no such limitation. For illustration, suppose Bangor had been the port of original entry, would it be contended that in 1918 this whisky, arriving on board a vessel from Scotland, and coming up the Penobscot river, could not have been entered in the custom house in that city and placed in a warehouse under bond, by complying with the customs laws and regulations? Would it not have been absolutely free from state interference until it had reached its final destination? If it could have been so entered at Bangor directly and originally, then it could first have been entered at Chicago and rewarehoused in Bangor, because the one is as fully protected from state interference as the other. The adoption of the Eighteenth Amendment and the enactment of legislation thereunder have changed the situation, because no duties can legally accrue upon the importation of goods prohibited by the federal government. They are not entitled to be entered at the custom house nor to be bonded. McLane v. U. S., 6 Pet. 404, 8 L. Ed. 443. But prior to that adoption and legislation, intoxicating liquors, so far as import duties were concerned, stood on a plane with all other kinds of merchandise in the contemplation of the federal laws."

1918 Supp., p. 394, sec. 5.

Scope of section.—This section merely provides that liquor shall not be transported in interstate commerce into any state contrary to the laws of such state. It does not purport to make unlawful the distillation of spirituous liquor. Pinasco v. U. S., (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1920) 262 Fed. 400.

Necessity of state-wide prohibition.—To same effect as 1919 Supplement annotation, see Laughter v. U. S., (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1919) 250 Fed. 94, 170 C. C. A. 162.

Purchase with intent to transport.—The lawful purchase of liquor in a state does not violate the act because of an undisclosed intent of the purchaser to transport it to another state. Collins v. U. S., (C. C. A. 5th Cir. 1920) 263 Fed. 657, wherein it was said:

"Neither the intent of the purchaser, nor any preparatory steps taken to transport the liquor to Texas, before its journey thence began, availed to take away the domestic character of the transaction. The subsequent movement of liquor from Monroe to Shreveport by the defendant could only serve to illustrate his undisclosed intent when he bought the liquor, and this intent was insufficient to make the order or purchase an interstate transaction. As there was no evidence that the intent of the defendant to take the liquor to Texas was in any way made known to or acquiesced in by the seller, we are not called upon to determine whether or not a purchase under such circumstances would be an interstate transaction. The order and purchase not being within the competency of Congress to punish, and the defendant having been charged in the indictment with ordering and purchasing, and not with having caused to be transported in interstate commerce and into a state which prohibited the manufacture of liquor, the liquor described in the indictment, a verdict of acquittal should have been directed."

Transportation "into" state.—To same effect as first paragraph of 1919 Supplement annotation, see Preyer v. U. S., (C. C. A. 4th Cir. 1919) 260 Fed. 157, 171 C. C. A. 193; Bishop v. U. S., (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1919) 259 Fed. 195, 170 C. C. A. 263.

Transportation of liquors through a state as a mere incident to the transportation into another state, whether such transportation was by personal carriage or by common carrier was not affected by the Reed Amendment. Martin v. Com., (Va. 1919) 100 S. E. 836.

Carrying liquor through the District of Columbia from Maryland for personal use in Virginia has been thought not to be a violation of this section. Whiting v. U. S., (App. Cas. D. C. 1920) 263 Fed. 477. The court said:

"Whiting testified that he was engaged in the express and hauling business in Washington, and had been so engaged for the past 15 years; that he lived in Virginia, near Falls Church, and at the time of his arrest was taking the whisky from Baltimore, through the District, to his home, for his personal use. He was corroborated by two witnesses. If he told the truth, he had not violated the law under which he was being prosecuted. United States v. Gudger, 249 U. S. 373, 39 Sup. Ct. 323, 63 L. Ed. 653. The only thing relied upon by the government to overcome the testimony in his behalf was the fact that he at the time of his arrest was in the express business in Washington, and had in his possession a business card and a motor operator's permit, which recited that his residence was in Washington. When the card was printed or the permit issued does not appear. Is this evidence enough to support a verdict that the destination of the liquor was not Virginia, but some point in the District of Columbia? While not deciding the matter, we think it proper to indicate our doubt concerning it."

Transportation of intoxicating liquors by automobile.—In U. S. v. Simpson, (D. C. Colo. 1919) 257 Fed. 860, it was contended that transportation of intoxicating liquors across a state by means of an automobile was a violation of this section. Answering this contention, the court said:

"It is said that the second count is bad because transportation by automobile is not a violation of the Act. An automobile may be used so as to become a common carrier in interstate commerce.

"The District Attorney stated in argument that the details of the transaction were set out in the third count for the purpose of testing, in the shortest and most inexpensive way, whether the bringing in of liquor in the manner stated in that count is a violation. It is difficult to believe that the innumerable daily transactions, non-commercial in character and privately carried on across state lines, come within the reach of national regulatory power given by the Constitution; and yet I confess the broad language in some of the cases does not leave me entirely free from doubt. After all, my conclusion is reached from what is said about the Uncle Sam Oil Co. in the Pipe Line Cases, 234 U. S. 548, 561, 562, 34 Sup. Ct. 956, 959 (58 L. Ed. 1459). The facts there considered are apt. Justice Holmes for the majority said:

"There remains to be considered only the Uncle Sam Oil Company. This company has a refinery in Kansas and oil wells in Oklahoma, with a pipe line connecting the two, which it has used for the sole purpose of conducting oil from its own wells to its own refinery. It would be a perversion of language, considering the sense in which it is used in the statute, to say that a man was engaged in the transportation of water whenever he pumped a pail of water from his well to his house. So as to oil. When, as in this case, a company is merely drawing oil from its own wells across a state line to its own refinery for its own use, and that is all, we do not regard it as falling within the description of the Act, the transportation being merely an incident to use at the end."

"Of course the prime inquiry there was whether the Uncle Sam Oil Company was a common carrier; but to be a common carrier within the Act it was necessary that it be found to be engaged in transportation in interstate commerce, and the transportation in interstate commerce was the part of the inquiry to which Justice Holmes addressed himself. That this is so is demonstrated by the Chief Justice:

"The view which leads the court to exclude it [from the operation of the Act] is that the company was not engaged in transportation under the statute, a conclusion to which I do not assent. The facts are these: That company owns wells in one state from which it has pipe lines to its refinery in another state, and pumps its own oil through said pipe lines to its refinery, and the product, of course, when reduced at the refinery, passes into the markets of consumption [italics mine]. It seems to me that the business thus carried on is transportation in interstate commerce within the statute."

"I take it that the fact stated by the Chief Justice (in italics) was a necessary element to the conclusion he reached. That is to say, he did not agree with the majority that the transportation was 'merely an incident to use at the end,' but that the transportation from Oklahoma to Kansas, the refining of the oil in Kansas, and the passing of the refined oils into the markets of consumption should be viewed as one transaction, and that the three separate acts dealing with the subject constituted transportation in interstate commerce. Kelly v. Rhoads, 188 U. S. 1, 23 Sup. Ct. 259, 47 L. Ed. 359.

"Dan Hill's Case, 248 U. S. 420, 39 Sup. Ct. 143, 63 L. Ed. —, recently decided by the Supreme Court, is not in point, as I view it. That also was a prosecution for violation of the Reed Amendment; but the indictment charged that Hill, while in Kentucky, boarded a trolley car being operated by a common carrier corporation engaged in interstate commerce, and by means thereof did cause himself and the said intoxicating liquor, then upon his person, to be carried and transported in interstate commerce into the state of West Virginia. The charge was exactly within the statute — 'cause intoxicating liquors to be transported in interstate commerce.' Hill caused the liquor to be transported in interstate commerce, in the manner charged in the indictment, as much so as if he had separately intrusted the liquor to the common carrier for transportation."

Transportation for personal use.—The transportation by the owner in his own automobile of intoxicating liquors for his personal use is comprehended by the prohibition of the Reed Amendment. U. S. v. Simpson, (1920) 252 U. S. 466, 40 S. Ct. 364, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, reversing (D. C. Colo. 1919) 257 Fed. 800.

Knowledge of interstate character of shipment.—A person who carries liquor in an automobile between two points in the same state cannot be convicted under this section unless it is shown that he knew that the carriage was a link in an interstate transportation of the liquor. Ousler v. U. S., (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1920) 263 Fed. 968.

Forfeiture of liquor.—Liquor brought into the District of Columbia in violation of this section but not in violation of the local act known as the Sheppard Law cannot be forfeited under the latter act. District of Columbia v. Gladding, (App. Cas. D. C. 1920) 263 Fed. 628.

Conspiracy to violate section.—Persons may be indicted under section 37 of the Penal Laws (7 Fed. Stat. Ann. (2d ed.) 534) for a conspiracy to violate this section. Laughter v. U. S., (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1919) 259 Fed. 94, 170 C. C. A. 162.

Indictment—Sufficiency.—In a prosecution for a violation of this section the permissible purposes for which liquor may be transported need not be negatived in the indictment, since they are matters of defense. U. S. v. Simpson, (D. C. Colo. 1919) 257 Fed. 860.

Evidence.—In the following cases it was held that there was sufficient evidence to sustain a conviction for a violation of this section: Jones v. U. S., (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1919) 259 Fed. 104, 170 C. C. A. 172; Bishop v. U. S., (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1919) 259 Fed. 195, 170 C. C. A. 263; Berryman v. U. S., (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1919) 259 Fed. 208, 170 C. C. A. 276.

1919 Supp., p. 199, sec. 1.

Constitutionality.—This act is a valid exercise of the war power of Congress. It is not rendered invalid by the fact that its duration extends through a period of purely technical war when the reasons giving rise to it have ceased to exist. Maryland Distilling Co. v. Miles, (D. C. Md. 1919) 263 Fed. 597. See to the same effect Hannah v. Clyne, (N. D. Ill. 1919) 263 Fed. 599.

Act as affecting state statutes.—This statute was not intended to suspend the operation of state statutes regulating the sale of intoxicating liquors. Ex p. Guerra, (Vt. 1920) 110 Atl. 224, wherein the court said: "In some of the war-time legislation Congress has expressly reserved to the states the exercise of police powers, and it is argued therefrom that the absence of such reservations in the War Prohibition Act indicates the intention of the federal government to occupy the whole field and thus suspend the operation of state legislation on the subject. But there was no need for Congress to authorize the continued exercise by the states of a power that had not been surrendered, and of which, as we have seen, they could by no means be deprived. South Carolina v. United States, 199 U. S. 437, 26 Sup. Ct. 110, 50 L. Ed. 261, 4 Ann. Cas. 737; Keller v. United States, 213 U. S. 138, 29 Sup. Ct. 470, 53 L. Ed. 737, 16 Ann. Cas. 1066. The cases cited support the following conclusions: In enacting war prohibition Congress was without authority to exercise and did not assume to exercise the police power. The right and duty to legislate in this field for the general welfare remained in the states unimpaired. Congress was at liberty to employ as a war measure the same means to accomplish its object as the state was using to accomplish an independent object. The mere fact that the federal act is similar to the state law in some of its provisions does not invalidate the latter. To have this effect, the state law must in operation interfere with the enforcement of the federal act. Though a state police regulation must yield to a valid act of Congress, it yields only when and to the extent that its enforcement conflicts therewith, or with the exercise of rights conferred, or the discharge of duties enjoined, by the paramount act. To the extent that the two are in harmony the acts are concurrent, the one supplementing the other. It follows that, as the enforcement of the prohibitory features of the state law does not obstruct or embarrass the execution of the act of Congress, there is no invalidating conflict.

"It is no objection to the concurrent validity of the two statutes that both penalize the same act, for it has been repeatedly held that the same act may constitute a criminal offense equally against the United States and the state, subjecting the guilty party to punishment under the laws of each, provided the act is one over which both sovereignties have jurisdiction. Cross v. North Carolina, 132

U. S. 131, 10 Sup. Ct. 47, 33 L. Ed. 287, 290; Crossley v. California, 168 U. S. 640, 18 Sup. Ct. 242, 42 L. Ed. 610; Southern R. Co. v. Railroad Comm'rs, 236 U. S. 439, 35 Sup. Ct. 304, 59 L. Ed. 661. It is unnecessary for present purposes to decide whether the acquittal or conviction of a violation of the federal statute would bar a prosecution under the statute of the state, or vice versa. The authorities are not in harmony upon this question. This court said in State v. Randall, 2 Aiken 89, 100, that such would be the result; but the question was not involved in the decision. It was recently held in United States v. Porris (D. C.) 255 Fed. 172, that a conviction in a state court for receiving stolen property is a bar to a prosecution under a federal statute for taking in possession such property, a foreign shipment, the same having been stolen, as the character and degree of proof was the same. On the other hand, it was held in United States v. Casey (D. C.) 247 Fed. 362, that a conviction under a state statute for maintaining a brothel located so near a military post as to fall within the prohibited zone prescribed by the Secretary of War under the Selective Service Act did not prevent a conviction under such act. We have not overlooked the fact that the offense for which the relator was convicted, viz., keeping intoxicating liquors with intent to sell, is distinct from the offense of selling prohibited by the act of Congress. This would furnish an additional and perhaps sufficient reason for upholding the conviction. However, we have thought best to dispose of the question on the grounds argued."

The federal War-Time Prohibition Act, while it forbade the sale of liquors for beverage purposes during its continuance, did not suspend the New Jersey statute authorizing the issuance of licenses to sell liquors, nor did the provision of the Constitution of the United States which forbids such sale after January 16, 1920, operate to avoid a license which was issued previous to the constitutional amendment taking effect; for, as the ban of federal statutory prohibition might have been removed pending the running of the license by the termination of the war and the proclamation of the President, the licensee in that event could have lawfully sold liquors under his license, issued pursuant to our statute, until the amendment of the Federal Constitution went into effect. Wilson v. Jersey City, (N. J. 1920) 109 Atl. 364.

State laws and regulations, however, were so affected by this section that municipalities could not license the sale of spirituous, vinous, malt, and brewed liquors. Wilson v. Jersey City, (N. J. 1919) 107 Atl. 797.

Cider.—The provision of this act which prohibited the importation of all alcoholic liquors included cider if it contained enough alcohol to render it intoxicating. But cider was not a vinous liquor within the meaning of the act, and, regardless of its alcoholic content, the manufacture or sale thereof was not prohibited. (1919) 31 Op. Atty-Gen. 491.

Malt liquor containing less than one-half of one per cent of alcohol was not included in this section. (1919) 31 Op. Atty-Gen. 498.

Information as requiring allegation that beer was intoxicating.—An information charging the defendant with using cereals in the manufacture of beer contrary to the provisions of this section, need not allege that the beer was intoxicating. U. S. v. Bergner, etc., Brewing Co., (1919) E. D. Pa. 260 Fed. 764. But see the original annotation wherein it appears that such contention has been overruled by the Supreme Court in U. S. v. Standard Brewery, (1919) 251 U. S. 210, 40 S. Ct. 139.

1919 Supp., p. 202, sec. 1.

Injunction to restrain enforcement.—In Griesedieck Bros. Brewery Co. v. Moore, (E. D. Mo. 1919) 262 Fed. 592, an injunction pendente lite was granted to restrain the collector of internal revenue and U. S. attorney for a certain district, from enforcing the provisions of this act pending a decision regarding its constitutionality.

1919 Supp., p. 206, sec. 3.

Constitutionality of provision as to alcoholic content of liquors.—Congress did not exceed its powers, under U. S. Const., 18th Amend. (see 1919 Supp. 839) to enforce the prohibition therein declared against the manufacture, sale, or transportation of intoxicating liquors for beverage purposes, by enacting the provisions of the Volstead Act, wherein liquors containing as much as one-half of one per cent of alcohol by volume, and fit for use for beverage purposes, are treated as within that power. National Prohibition Cases, (1920) 253 U. S. 350, 40 S. Ct. 486, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming Feigenspan v. Bodine, (D. C. N. J. 1920) 264 Fed. 186.

See generally on the subject of the Eighteenth Amendment annotations set out post, under notes on Constitution.

"Possess"—"Deliver."—A warehouse corporation which has leased a room in its warehouse for the storage of intoxicating liquors that are in the lessee's exclusive possession and control does not "possess" such liquors within the meaning of the provision of this section that "no person shall on or after the date when the 18th Amendment to the Constitution of the United States goes into effect, manufacture, sell, barter, transport, import, export, deliver, furnish, or possess any intoxicating liquor except as authorized in this act, and all the provisions of this act shall be liberally construed to the end that the use of intoxicating liquor as a beverage may be prevented." Nor does the corporation, by permitting the owner of such liquors to have access to them for the purpose of taking them to his dwelling for lawful use, "deliver" them within the meaning of such provision. Street v. Lincoln Safe Deposit Co., (1920) 254 U. S. 88, 41 S. Ct. 31, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —. The court said:

"Section 3, which is the omnibus section of the act, provides that:

"No persons shall on or after the date when the 18th Amendment to the Constitution of the United States goes into effect, manufacture, sell, barter, transport, import, export, deliver, furnish or possess any intoxicating liquor except as authorized in this act, and all provisions of this act shall be liberally construed to the end that the use of intoxicating liquor as a beverage may be prevented."

"It is argued that the declaration herein that no person shall 'possess,' 'transport,' or 'deliver,' intoxicating liquors is applicable to this case, because the warehouse company is not 'authorized' by the act to 'possess' them, and because they cannot be used, even lawfully, by the plaintiff, unless delivered and taken away from the warehouse."

"By the admissions the appellant is lessee of the room in which the liquors are stored, and he 'is in the exclusive possession and control of them.' Thereby the relation of the warehouse company to the liquors is restricted to the public function of furnishing such police, fire, and other protection to its buildings and their contents as the law or its lease requires on the part of such company, and to allowing the plaintiff to have access to his property in order that he may remove it for an admittedly lawful purpose. The company could not sell, give away, or otherwise transfer the liquors to anyone other than, in this limited way, to the plaintiff owner."

"The purpose of the 18th Amendment and of this act considered, we cannot bring ourselves to the conclusion that such a relation to the liquors on the part of the storage company as is here disclosed constitutes a possession of them within the meaning of this section of the act."

"It is equally clear that to permit the owner to have access to the liquors to take them to his dwelling for lawful use is not a delivery of them within the meaning of this 3d section."

"That transportation of the liquors to the home of appellant, under the admitted circumstances, is not such as is prohibited by the section, is too apparent to justify detailed consideration of the many provisions of the act inconsistent with a construction which would render such removal unlawful, and that the act is understood by the officers charged with its execution as permitting such transportation is shown by the provision of the regulations of the Bureau of Internal Revenue, authorizing permits for the transportation of liquors from one permanent residence of an owner to another in case of his removal, although no such transfer is in terms provided for by the act."

"Clearly there is like administrative power under the act to so regulate the transfer of such stored liquors from a warehouse to the dwelling of the owner as to prevent their being used to evade the prohibitions of the act, or to substantially interfere with its effective enforcement."

1919 Supp., p. 212, sec. 21.

"Kept."—Kept for sale or barter or other commercial purpose is what is meant by the word "kept," as used in this section, which declares that any room, house, building, or place where intoxicating liquor is manufactured, sold, kept, or bartered, in violation of the act, and all intoxicating liquor and property kept and used in maintaining the same, are a common nuisance, and provides penalties for the maintaining of such a place. Street v. Lincoln Safe Deposit Co., (1920) 254 U. S. 88, 41 S. Ct. 31, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —. In defining the word "kept" as used in this section, the court said:

"Section 21 declares that 'any room, house, building . . . or place where intoxicating liquor is manufactured, sold, kept or bartered in violation of this title, and all intoxicating liquor and property kept and used in maintaining the same, is hereby declared to be a common nuisance.' And for the maintaining of such a place penalties are provided."

"The word 'kept' in this section is the only one of possible application to the case at bar, and the words with which it is immediately associated are such that, as here used, it plainly means kept for sale or barter, or other commercial purpose. Its inapplicability to this case is apparent. Noscitur a sociis. United States v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 236 U. S. 318, 334, 59 L. ed. 598, 606, P. U. R. 1915B, 247, 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 363."

1919 Supp., p. 213, sec. 25.

Application of section.—The declaration in this section that it shall be unlawful to have or possess any liquor intended for use in violating such act, obviously does not apply where the uses to which it is admitted that the owner intends to devote his liquor are those which § 33 of the act declares not to be unlawful. Street v. Lincoln Safe Deposit Co., (1920) 254 U. S. 88, 41 S. Ct. 31, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —, wherein it was said:

"Section 25 declares that: 'It shall be unlawful to have or possess any liquor . . . intended for use in violating this title . . .'"

"But since § 33 declares that the uses to which it is admitted the plaintiff intends to devote his liquors are not unlawful, obviously this section does not apply to the case, for the unlawfulness declared by it is conditioned upon the intended use in violating the act."

1919 Supp., p. 216, sec. 33.

Storage in warehouse of liquors for private use.—There is nothing in this act which makes it unlawful for a warehouse corporation to permit the storage in its warehouse after the effective date of such act of liquors theretofore lawfully acquired, which are so stored solely and in good faith for the purpose of preserving and protecting them until they shall be consumed by the owner and his family or bona fide guests,—uses declared by this section not to be unlawful.

Moreover, the implication is plain from the provision in this section, making the possession of liquors by any person "not legally permitted" under the act to possess liquor prima facie evidence that such liquor is kept for the purpose of being sold, bartered, exchanged, given away, furnished, or otherwise disposed of in violation of the provisions of the act, that, if such presumption is rebutted by appropriate testimony, the possession shall be considered not unlawful, even though it be by a person not holding a technical permit to possess it, such as is provided for in the act. Street v. Lincoln Safe Deposit Co., (1920) 254 U. S. 88, 41 S. Ct. 31, 65 U. S. (L. ed.) —. The court said:

"May a warehousing corporation lawfully permit to be stored in its warehouse, after the effective date of the Volstead Act, liquors admitted to have been lawfully acquired before that date, and which are so stored, solely and in good faith, for the purpose of preserving and protecting them until they shall be consumed by the owner and his family, or bona fide guests?"

"Since the Volstead Act has been held by this court to be a valid law, the answer to this question must be found in its provisions, and the sections of it which it is argued sustain the negative answer to the question given by the court below are 3, 21, and 25 of title II.

"Since here, as always, the purpose of Congress in enacting a law is of importance in determining the meaning of it, it is noteworthy that title II of the Volstead Act was passed under the grant of power to enforce the 1st section of the 18th Amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which prohibits the manufacture, sale, and transportation of intoxicating liquors for beverage purposes, but does not indicate any purpose to confiscate liquors lawfully owned at the time the amendment should become effective, and which the owner intended to use in a lawful manner.

"Section 33 of the act is the only one which deals specifically with liquors lawfully acquired before it should take effect, and it is therefore of first importance in the consideration of the case before us. That section declares:

"It shall not be unlawful to possess liquors in one's private dwelling while the same is occupied and used by him as his dwelling only, and such liquor need not be reported, provided such liquors are for use only for the personal consumption of the owner thereof and his family residing in such dwelling and of his bona fide guests when entertained by him therein."

"The admissions of fact under which this case is considered bring the liquors here involved precisely within these immunity provisions of § 33, except that they are stored in a public warehouse instead of in a private dwelling. . . .

"The implication from another provision of § 33 than the one quoted above confirms this conclusion. It reads:

"After February 1, 1920, the possession of liquors by any person not legally permitted under this title to possess liquor shall be prima facie evidence that such liquor is kept for the purpose of being sold, bartered, exchanged, given away, furnished, or otherwise disposed of in violation of the provisions of this title."

"Assuming that the unexplained presence of the liquors in the company's warehouse would give rise to the prescribed presumption, yet, if that presumption should be rebutted by appropriate testimony (as it is in this case by admissions) that the liquor to which it is applied is not being kept for the purpose of sale, barter, exchange, furnishing, or otherwise disposing of it in violation of the provisions of the title, the implication is plain that the possession should be considered not unlawful, even though it be by a person 'not legally permitted,'—that is, by a person not holding a technical permit to possess it, such as is provided for in the act.

"Without saying that there may not be other cases, the one at bar seems to be fairly within the scope of this obvious implication of § 33.

"It may be that the custody of liquors by a warehouse company was thus not declared to be unlawful because the writers of the act did not have such a case in mind; but it was more probably because Congress would not consent to allow lawful possession and use of liquors in dwellings having storage facilities for them, while denying the only possible means of preserving and protecting such liquors to persons with less commodious homes. The Congress was concerned with the great problem of preventing liquors for beverage purposes in the future, and it seems to have given but slight attention to the consumption of such relatively small amounts of such liquors as might be in existence in private ownership, and intended for consumption by the owner, his family or his guests, when the amendment and the act should take effect.

"An intention to confiscate private property, even in intoxicating liquors, will not be raised by inference and construction from provisions of law which have ample field for their operation in effecting a purpose clearly indicated and declared."

Necessity of recording.—Under this section a federal judgment in Louisiana becomes a lien only when recorded as required by the statutes of that state. U. S. v. Kendall, (E. D. La. 1920) 263 Fed. 126.

JUDICIAL OFFICERS

Vol. IV, p. 620, sec. 363. [First ed., vol. IV, p. 70.]

Verification of information.—An assistant district attorney has authority under this section to verify an information for a violation of the Selective Service Act (9 Fed. Stat. Ann. (2d ed.) 1136). Brown v. U. S., (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1919) 257 Fed. 703, 168 C. C. A. 653.

XIV. RECEIVING, KEEPING AND PAYING OUT MONEY (p. 675)

Money held as security against liability on bail bond.—The clerk may properly deduct his poundage of one per cent, under this section, from the amount allowed to the surety on a forfeited bail bond out of the impounded funds of the principal in such clerk's hands, which are finally adjudged to have been held in trust primarily as security against liability on such bond. Leary v. U. S., (1920) 253 U. S. 94, 40 S. Ct. 446, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (C. C. A. 4th Cir. 1919) 257 Fed. 246, 168 C. C. A. 330.

Vol. IV, p. 699, sec. 833. [First ed., vol. IV, p. 120.]

Clerks.—Fees and emoluments collected by a clerk of a district court, and deposited by him in a bank at interest, were not public moneys of the United States, so as to entitle the United States to the interest as an increment of its ownership, even where such clerk was, by exceptional legislation, an officer whose salary was specifically appropriated, it not being disputed that he was under obligation to meet the expenses of his office from the fees and emoluments thereof, and to pay over to the United States only the resulting surplus. U. S. v. MacMillan, (1920) 253 U. S. 195, 40 S. Ct. 540, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (C. C. A. 7th Cir. 1917) 251 Fed. 55, 163 C. C. A. 305.

Interest on the sum of the fees and emoluments deposited by the clerk of a district court in a bank is not, in and of itself, an emolument for which he is liable to account to the United States. U. S. v. MacMillan, (1920) 253 U. S. 195, 40 S. Ct. 540, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (C. C. A. 7th Cir. 1917) 251 Fed. 55, 163 C. C. A. 305.

Vol. IV, p. 763, sec. 798. [First ed., vol. IV, p. 158.]

"Vouchers thereof shall be filed."—Fees and emoluments coming into the hands of the clerk of the Circuit Court of Appeals are not "public money" or the "money or property of the United States," but are received primarily to pay compensation of the clerk and expenses of his office, and for any balance he is not a trustee, but a debtor to the U. S. He is entitled to receive and should carefully preserve all paid and canceled checks drawn upon his account in a bank as clerk of the court, he having deposited in such bank fees and emoluments received, such canceled checks being included in the term "vouchers" as employed in this section. The Treasury Department has no right to order the bank to retain such checks. Petition of Clerk for Instructions, etc., (C. C. A. 7th Cir. 1919) 261 Fed. 164.

[First ed., 1912 Supp., p. 135.]

Order of adjournment to whom directed.—A written order by a district judge adjourning a regular term of the District Court is not invalid because not in terms directed to either the marshal or the clerk, since they are required to take cognizance of it and will be presumed to have performed their duty until the contrary appears. Weichen v. U. S., (C. C. A. 7th Cir. 1920) 262 Fed. 941.

Vol. IV, p. 832, Jud. Code, sec. 21.

Sufficiency of affidavit — Allegations of facts showing prejudice.—An affidavit under this section is insufficient where it merely states that the judge is prejudiced in favor of the opposite party without setting forth any facts in support of such allegation. U. S. v. Fricke, (S. D. N. Y. 1919) 261 Fed. 541.

Judges who may be appointed.—Where a district judge is disqualified to sit, the circuit judge need not appoint another district judge from the same district but may appoint one from another district. In re De Ran, (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1919) 260 Fed. 732, 171 C. C. A. 470, wherein it was said:

"We cannot accede to the proposition that Judge Tuttle was without jurisdiction to hear the instant proceedings from the fact that there are two district judges for the northern district of Ohio, and that Judge Westenhaver, the other district judge, is not shown to have been disqualified. We set to one side, as without the record, the assertion in petitioner's brief that Judge Westenhaver was in fact not disqualified, as well as respondent's assertion that Judge Tuttle was already under general designation to sit in the northern district of Ohio. As the record stands, we think there was no lack of jurisdiction in Judge Tuttle. The authority to designate another judge upon Judge Killits' certificate of disqualification is expressly conferred by section 21 of the Judicial Code, under the practice specified in sections 20 and 14. Assuming that Judge Westenhaver was not disqualified, the circuit judge was not bound to designate him; the statute gave the circuit judge the choice of methods. It will be presumed that the designation was made for reasons deemed sufficient. We find nothing in the statutes which limits the power of designation to a case where all the judges of the district are disqualified; and we cannot read such limitation into the statute."

I. JURISDICTION IN GENERAL

3. Limited Jurisdiction of Courts (p. 847)

"The United States District Court, being a court of limited jurisdiction, it is the duty of the court to search the record in each case to ascertain whether the jurisdictional facts exist." Cleveland Cliffs Iron Co. v. Kinney, (D. C. Minn. 1919) 262 Fed. 980.

8. Effect of State Legislation (p. 848)

Recovery of taxes paid to state under duress.—An action for money had and received will lie by a foreign corporation against the treasurer of a state to recover taxes paid by the plaintiff to the defendant under protest and alleged implied duress, pursuant to the provisions of state statutes held by the United States Supreme Court to be unconstitutional. Such an action may be maintained notwithstanding that it is not permitted by the statutes of the state. International Paper Co. v. Burrill, (D. C. Mass. 1919) 260 Fed. 664. The court said:

"Citizens of other states cannot be deprived by enactments of the commonwealth of Massachusetts of their right through the federal courts to enforce common-law remedies."

II. SUITS OF CIVIL NATURE AT COMMON LAW OR EQUITY.

4. At Law and Equity

c. "In Equity" (p. 853)

State legislation.—To same effect as original annotation, see Kessler v. Necker, (D. C. N. J. 1919) 258 Fed. 654, wherein it was said:

"The one inhibition against the enforcement in a federal court of new equitable rights, created by state statute, is that such enforcement does not impair any right conferred, or conflict with any inhibition imposed, by the Constitution of the United States. When the necessary elements giving federal courts jurisdiction are present, the following rules are deducible from the cases relative to the jurisdiction and power of federal courts to enforce rights created and to administer remedies provided for enforcement and administration in state courts:

"1. Rights, created or provided by the statutes of the states to be pursued in the state courts, may be enforced and administered in the federal courts, either at law or in equity, or in admiralty, as the nature of the new rights may require.

"2. An enlargement of equitable rights by the statutes of the states may be administered by the federal courts, as well as by the courts of the states.

"3. A party by going into a federal court does not lose any right or appropriate remedy of which he might have availed himself in the state courts of the same locality."

Adequate remedy at law.—Where by reason of diverse citizenship plaintiffs are entitled to sue in the federal court, the remedy at law to negative equitable jurisdiction must be a remedy at law in the federal court. If such remedy is doubtful merely, equitable jurisdiction is properly exercised. Cleveland Cliffs Iron Co. v. Kinney, (D. C. Minn. 1919) 262 Fed. 980.

Suit to quiet title.—A federal court has jurisdiction of a suit in equity to quiet the title to land of which the plaintiff is in peaceable possession, where it appears that no suit is pending at law wherein the validity of his title and the claim of the defendant can be tested, and that he has no adequate remedy at law. Nirdlinger v. Stevens, (D. C. N. J. 1919) 262 Fed. 591.

Appointment of receiver.—A suit against a corporation for the appointment of a receiver, brought in the state in which it was incorporated by a stockholder residing in another state, is within the jurisdiction of a federal court in the former state. Adler v. Campeche Laguna Corp., (D. C. Del. 1919) 257 Fed. 789.

6. Administration or Probate (p. 856)

Construction of will.—Where there is no law in the state in which a will has been probated authorizing anyone, by suit inter partes, to assail probate proceedings, a federal court has no jurisdiction of such a suit for a construction of the will. Lee v. Minor, (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1919) 260 Fed. 700, 171 C. C. A. 438.

Setting aside will.—In Creighton v. Creighton, (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1919) 291 Fed. 333, a suit in equity was brought in the federal District Court in Kansas to set aside the will of a Kansas testator on the ground of mental incapacity and undue influence. A decree for the complainant was reversed on the merits, the evidence being held insufficient to sustain the decree, but the jurisdiction to entertain the suit was not questioned nor even mentioned.

VII. AMOUNT IN CONTROVERSY

3. Cases Requiring Jurisdictional Amount

b. Diverse Citizenship (p. 864)

Conveyance to give jurisdictional amount.—The fact that real property has been conveyed to the plaintiff in order to bring the amount in controversy up to the sum required by this section, does not affect the jurisdiction of the court provided the conveyance is a real transaction without any reservation in the grantor for a reconveyance of the property to him. Livingston v. Monidah Trust, (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1919) 261 Fed. 966.

4. Necessity of Matter in Dispute Having Pecuniary Value
b. Deprivation of Political and Social Rights (p. 865)

Bill to restrain governor from submitting proposed Eighteenth Amendment to state legislature.—In Ohio v. Cox, (S. D. Ohio 1919) 257 Fed. 334, an injunction was sought to restrain the governor of Ohio from submitting the Eighteenth Amendment (1919 Supp. Fed. Stat. Ann. 839) to the state legislature for ratification. Regarding the amount in controversy, it was said:

"The jurisdiction of this court is limited to actions involving $3,000, not including interest and costs. The bill alleges that the jurisdictional amount is involved. Looking at the plaintiff, or those he represents, as taxpayers, there is no allegation that any particular sum to him, or to any one of them, is involved; and considering the plaintiff, and those he claims to represent, as citizens of the United States seeking to remedy a political wrong, there is no amount of money involved.

"It is alleged that the result of the Prohibition Amendment would be a loss to the government of many millions of dollars, which would have to be made up otherwise. That may be true temporarily, but it may also be that the results of prohibition will be such as to make a wealthier people, a people better able to bear the financial burdens of government, and that a temporary loss of revenue from this particular source would be more than counterbalanced by increased capacity to carry those burdens. It was said by Mr. Justice Grier in the License Cases, 5 How. 604, 631 (12 L. Ed. 256):

"If a loss of revenue should accrue to the United States from a diminished consumption of ardent spirits, she would be the gainer a thousand fold in the health, wealth, and happiness of the people."

"In any event, it is manifest that the increased burden would come through indirect taxation, impossible of ascertainment, highly vague and conjectural, and not of the kind measurable by the law. Moreover, if it were ascertainable, it would have to be shown that the loss to at least one citizen would amount to the jurisdictional amount, because individual claims of unjust taxation cannot be aggravated for the purpose of making a sum within the jurisdiction of this court.

"Counsel for plaintiff expressly disclaim appearing for any one interested in the liquor traffic. Indeed, they say they have declined retainers from some so interested. They and their client take the high ground that their interest lies deeper than questions of property rights, and grows out of their love of country and their desire to protect it, by insisting that all the safeguards of the Constitution be maintained inviolate. The court believes them.

"But, if they did represent such interests, it was settled by the Supreme Court long ago that no one has an inherent right to conduct that traffic, and if any one makes an investment in it, however large, he does it with the knowledge that such property rights as he would otherwise have in the business he has built up are necessarily overborne by the greater right of the public, through the exercise of police power, to enhance the public health, morals, and welfare. So no right of pecuniary value, or any value, is involved in this behalf."

e. Miscellaneous (p. 865)

Suit for damages for wrongful death.—In Novitsky v. Rozner, (W. D. Pa. 1915) 259 Fed. 913, it was held that a suit by a father to recover damages for the death of his minor child, three and one-half years of age, did "not really and substantially involve a dispute or controversy of three thousand dollars."

5. Ascertainment of Value of Matter in Dispute (p. 865)

Injunction—Generally.—"In a suit for an injunction the value of the matter in dispute is not tested by the mere immediate pecuniary damage resulting from the acts complained of, but by the value to the complainant of the business or property right for which protection is sought." Prest-O-Lite Co. v. Bournonville, (D. C. N. J. 1914) 260 Fed. 440.

Interference with pipe line.—"In a suit to enjoin the interference with a pipe line used by a common carrier in the transportation of oil, the value of the entire system and the amount which the plaintiff would be compelled to expend if a portion of its line were removed, should be considered in determining the amount in controversy. Lowe v. Pure Oil Co., (C. C. A. 4th Cir. 1919) 260 Fed. 704, 171 C. C. A. 442. Regarding this question, the court said:

"It is insisted by defendant that the court below was without jurisdiction, inasmuch as the amount involved in the controversy was not $3,000 in excess of cost and interest. This is based upon the theory that the amount involved should represent only the actual cost of removing this line from the south side of the creek to the north side of the creek.

"As we have stated, it is alleged in the bill that the value of the entire system of gravity oil lines exceeds the sum of $3,000, and that, owing to the occupancy of the south side of the creek by the railroad in constructing its line, it is in such condition that it would be impracticable to locate the pipe line on that side, and that it was for this reason plaintiff was compelled to change its line so as to operate it for the purpose for which it was intended.

"It is insisted by plaintiff that the removal of a part of this line would destroy the entire gravity system in the creek beds, among other things necessitating its removal from tanks at Pine Grove to Jacksonburg, the main connecting lines above Jacksonburg, also necessitating an alteration in a multitude of smaller lines connecting each well with the main line, at a great loss and expense, and thus either destroy the business or necessitate the construction of a pressure system on other lands, involving the purchase of new rights of way, for a distance of more than one mile, over a hill. It is contended that the construction of such line would cost $2,500 for labor done, $3,000 for pump station, and $3,000 for additional pipe, costing in the aggregate from $8,000 to $10,000. This, we think, should be considered in estimating the amount involved in this controversy.

"In addition to this phase of the question, it is insisted by counsel for plaintiff that 'where a particular matter of itself less than jurisdictional amount or value involves a right or estate as the subject of dispute, which right or estate depends upon the determination of the controversy, the value of the right or estate will fix the jurisdiction.'

Illegal issuance of bonds.—In a suit by taxpayers to restrain public officers from an alleged unconstitutional use of public funds and issuance of bonds, the injury to the plaintiffs rather than the amount of the funds or the bonds is the measure of the "amount" in controversy. Scott v. Frazier, (D. C. N. D. 1919) 258 Fed. 669.

Suit on judgment.—In a suit on a judgment the amount in controversy is the amount of the judgment rather than the amount of the original debt as it stood prior to its being merged in the judgment. Preston v. Durham, (N. D. Ga. 1920) 262 Fed. 843.

6. Aggregate of Claims and Joinder (p. 872)

In general.—To same effect as fifth paragraph of original annotation, see Smith-Webster Co. v. John, (C. C. A. 3d Cir. 1919) 259 Fed. 549, 170 C. C. A. 511.

Taxpayers' suits.—The amount in controversy in a suit in a federal District Court by taxpayers to enjoin, on constitutional grounds, the payment of public funds out of the state treasury, and the issuing of state bonds, must equal the jurisdictional amount as to each complainant. Scott v. Frazier, (1920) 253 U. S. 243, 40 S. Ct. 503, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) — (reversing (D. C. N. D. 1919) 258 Fed. 669), wherein the court said: "The jurisdiction was invoked because of alleged violation of rights under the Fourteenth Amendment. The complainants were taxpayers of North Dakota, who alleged that suit was brought on behalf of themselves and all other taxpayers of the state. There was no diversity of citizenship and jurisdiction was rested solely upon the alleged violation of constitutional rights. The District Court rendered a decree dismissing the bill on the merits; the judge stating that he was of opinion that there was no jurisdiction, and directing the dismissal on the merits to prevent delay, and to permit the suit being brought here by a single appeal.

"There is no allegation that the loss or injury to any complainant amounts to the sum of $3,000. It is well settled that in such cases as this the amount in controversy must equal the jurisdictional sum as to each complainant. Wheless v. St. Louis, 180 U. S. 379, 21 Sup. Ct. 402, 45 L. Ed. 583; Rogers v. Hennepin County, 239 U. S. 621, 36 Sup. Ct. 217, 60 L. Ed. 469.

"The District Court was right in its conclusion that there was no jurisdiction. The decree is reversed, and the cause remanded to the District Court, with directions to dismiss the bill for want of jurisdiction."

Item not proved in former trial.—That one item of a claim made up of several items was not proved in a former trial and the residue do not aggregate the jurisdictional amount is not ground for an objection to the jurisdiction made prior to a retrial. Eggers v. Sun Sales Corp., (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1920) 263 Fed. 373.

a. Necessity and Sufficiency (p. 877)

VIII. SUITS ARISING UNDER CONSTITUTION, LAWS OR TREATIES

1. In General

c. General Definition of Federal Question (p. 883)

Tests variously stated.—To same effect as third paragraph of original annotation, see Ohio v. Cox, (S. D. Ohio 1919) 257 Fed. 334.

f. Citizenship. Immaterial (p. 885)

Averments of a bill setting up alleged obligations of a contract between a claimant and the state, and the contention that they were impaired by subsequent legislation, presented a controversy under the Federal Constitution and conferred jurisdiction (a sufficient amount being involved) upon a federal District Court irrespective of the citizenship of the parties. Hays v. Seattle, (1920) 251 U. S. 233, 40 S. Ct. 125, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (W. D. Wash. 1915) 226 Fed. 287.

2. Pleading Federal Question

a. Plaintiff Required to Show (p. 888)

In general.—In any case alleged to come within the federal jurisdiction, it is not enough to allege that questions of a federal character arise in the case, but it must plainly appear that the averments attempting to bring the case within such jurisdiction are real and substantial. Blumenstock Bros. Advertising Agency v. Curtis Pub. Co., (1920) 252 U. S. 436, 40 S. Ct. 385, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —.

5. Allegations Held Insufficient

a. In General (p. 899)

Impairment of contract obligation.—The contention that a hydro-electric company, incorporated under the general laws of a state, which has adopted a resolution designating certain parcels of land as appropriated and necessary to carry out the corporate purpose, had acquired rights before appropriation was completed, as provided by the state condemnation laws, of which it was unconstitutionally deprived by the use of the designated parcels by other public utility companies,—is too unsubstantial to serve as the basis of federal jurisdiction where, independently of the incorporation and resolution, the company had no rights or property to be taken, and there was no state legislative or other action against any charter rights which such corporation possessed. Whatever controversies or causes of action the corporation had were against other companies as rivals in eminent domain, or as owners of the land, over which a federal court has no jurisdiction, diversity of citizenship not existing. Cuyahoga River Power Co. v. Northern Ohio Traction, etc., Co., (1920) 252 U. S. 388, 40 S. Ct. 404, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —.

IX. SUITS ARISING UNDER CONSTITUTION

1. In General (p. 905)

Constitutionality of federal statute.—The District Court has jurisdiction to determine whether a federal statute is constitutional. Griesedieck Bros. Brewing Co. v. Moore, (E. D. Mo. 1919) 262 Fed. 582, wherein the court said:

"It is perfectly obvious this court has jurisdiction to hear and determine the question raised as to the constitutional validity of the provisions of the act of Congress challenged, for such issue is a judicial, and not a legislative, question, and on the decision of this one issue depend all others in this case; for if the act in so far as challenged be within the constitutional power of the Congress to enact into law, the complainants, and all others, including the defendants, must obey and enforce its terms. On the contrary, if the provisions of the act challenged by complainants are found and decreed as a matter of law to lie without and beyond the constitutional power of the Congress to enact into law, then the act is not a law. It has no office to perform, has no binding force or effect upon any citizen of the republic, and defendants in enforcing it, or in attempting or threatening to enforce its provision against complainants or their property and property rights, to their irreparable loss, injury and damage, are not officers of the law acting within the scope of their lawful authority, but are, when so engaged, mere private individuals, volunteers, and intermeddlers, whose injurious acts ought to and in justice should be restrained."

2. Municipal Ordinances

c. Violation of Due Process Clause (p. 914)

A suit to enjoin the enforcement of an ordinance requiring a coal company to obtain the consent of adjacent property owners to the erection of a coal yard within the city limits, and imposing fines for violation of the ordinance, is within the jurisdiction of a federal court, where the ordinance is alleged to be invalid because in contravention of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution. Hammond v. Calumet Coal, etc., Co., (C. C. A. 7th Cir. 1920) 262 Fed. 938.

3. Impairment of Contract Obligation (p. 916)

In general.—A suit by a gas company to restrain a city from enforcing the rates for gas prescribed in a franchise from the city to the company on the ground that they are unreasonable and confiscatory, and operate to impair the obligation of the contract between the company and city, is one arising under the laws of the United States and properly cognizable by a federal court. Hillsdale Gaslight Co. v. Hillsdale, (E. D. Mich. 1919) 258 Fed. 485.

5. Violation of Due Process Clause (p. 918)

Confiscatory railroad rates.—To same effect as original annotation, see Toledo v. Toledo Rys., etc., Co., (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1919) 259 Fed. 450, 170 C. C. A. 426; Michigan R. Co. v. Lansing, (E. D. Mich. 1919) 260 Fed. 322.

Doing complete justice in injunction proceedings.—Jurisdiction of a district court of a suit to enjoin, on constitutional grounds, the enforcement of rate-fixing orders made by a state commission, should be retained for the purpose of making the equitable relief as full and complete as the circumstances of the case and the nature of the proofs may require, although, since the suit was commenced, the state legislature has provided a direct judicial review of such orders therefore only possible in contempt proceedings, and then only at the risk of severe penalties if unsuccessful, and such suits should therefore proceed for the purpose of determining whether the maximum rates fixed by the commission are, under the present conditions, confiscatory, and if found to be so, injunction should issue to restrain their enforcement; if found not to be confiscatory, injunction should issue to restrain the enforcement of penalties accrued pendente lite, provided that it also be found that plaintiff had reasonable ground to contest the rates as being confiscatory. Oklahoma Operating Co. v. Love, (1920) 252 U. S. 331, 40 S. Ct. 338, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —.

11. Suit Relating to Federal Election (p. 922)

An action to recover damages from state election officers.—To same effect as original annotation, see Wayne v. Venable, (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1919) 260 Fed. 64, 171 C. C. A. 100, wherein it was said: "The right of qualified electors to vote for a member of Congress at a general state election, which is also an election at which a congressman is to be lawfully voted for and elected, is a right 'fundamentally based upon the Constitution [of the United States], which created the office of member of Congress, and declared it should be elective, and pointed to the means of ascertaining who should be electors.' Ex parte Yarbrough, 110 U. S. 655, 664, 665, 4 Sup. Ct. 158, 28 L. Ed. 274.

"An action for damages in the proper federal court lies by a qualified elector for his wrongful deprivation of this right by a defendant or by an effective conspiracy of several defendants who deprive him thereof. Wiley v. Sinkler 179 U. S. 58, 62, 63, 64, 21 Sup. Ct. 17, 45 L. Ed. 84; Swafford v. Templeton, 185 U. S. 487, 491, 492, 22 Sup. Ct. 783, 46 L. Ed. 1005.

"In the eyes of the law this right is so valuable that damages are presumed from the wrongful deprivation of it without evidence of actual loss of money, property, or any other valuable thing, and the amount of the damages is a question peculiarly appropriate for the determination of the jury, because each member of the jury has personal knowledge of the value of the right. Scott v. Donald, 165 U. S. 89, 17 Sup. Ct. 265, 41 L. Ed. 632; Wiley v. Sinkler, 179 U. S. 58, 65, 21 Sup. Ct. 17, 45 L. Ed. 84."

X. SUITS ARISING UNDER LAWS OF UNITED STATES

1. General Rules

c. Federal Law Collaterally Involved (p. 923)

To same effect as original annotation, see Renaselaer, etc., R. Co. v. Delaware, etc., Co., (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1919) 257 Fed. 555, 168 C. C. A. 539.

28. Laws Relating to Commerce (p. 939)

Failure to comply with Interstate Commerce Commission's regulations.—In an action against a railroad company to recover damages for loss of goods by fire alleged to have been occasioned by the negligence of the defendant, the fact that the charge of negligence embraces, inter alia, a failure to comply with some of the Interstate Commerce Commission's regulations prescribed for the handling and storing of such goods, does not make the controversy one arising under the laws of the United States, so as to give a federal court exclusive jurisdiction thereof. Isaac Kubie Co. v. Lehigh Valley R. Co., (D. C. N. J. 1919) 261 Fed. 806.

XII. DIVERSE CITIZENSHIP

4. Citizenship of Corporation (p. 945)

Doing business, etc., in another state.—To same effect as last paragraph of original annotation, see Empire Fuel Co. v. Lyons, (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1919) 257 Fed. 890, 169 C. C. A. 40, wherein it was held that under the evidence the defendant, a foreign corporation, was doing business in the state where the suit was brought.

10. Nature of Suit (p. 951)

Construction of Porto Rican statute in injunction suit.—In Camunas v. New York, etc., Steamship Co., (C. C. A. 1st Cir. 1919) 260 Fed. 40, 171 C. C. A. 76, the treasurer of Porto Rico appealed from a final decree permanently enjoining him from compelling a steamship company to contribute to the workmen's compensation fund of Porto Rico. The court held that while it was manifestly undesirable that a Porto Rican statute should receive its first judicial construction in a federal court, yet it would not, on that ground alone, refuse the plaintiff relief, if otherwise clearly entitled thereto, and that where the requisite diversity of citizenship appeared so as to give the federal court jurisdiction, it would construe the statute and determine the rights of the parties thereunder.

11. Several Parties Plaintiff or Defendant (p. 952)

In general.—To same effect as original annotation, see Compania Minera Y Compadora, etc. v. American Metal Co., (W. D. Tex. 1920) 262 Fed. 183.

12. Arrangement of Parties as to Adverse Interest (p. 954)

In general.—To same effect as original annotation, see Iron Molders' Union v. Niles-Bement-Pond Co., (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1918) 258 Fed. 408, 169 C. C. A. 424.

Suit by stockholder.—A suit by a stockholder against a corporation and certain of its officers and directors to enjoin the payment of an alleged illegal commission to the president of the corporation and for an accounting by the individual defendants to the corporation, is in reality a right of action of the corporation. Accordingly, since the real dispute is between the corporation and the individual defendants, a federal court has no jurisdiction where they are all citizens of the same state. Laughner v. Schell, (C. C. A. 3d Cir. 1919) 260 Fed. 396, 171 C. C. A. 262, wherein it was said:

"Indeed, when the gist of the bill is sensed, it will be seen that the real cause of action, if it exists, is a right of action of the Minnetonka Oil Company, and the bill is a stockholders' bill to enforce such corporate right. Such being the case, the real dispute is one between the Oil Company, on the one side, and the individual defendants on the other; in other words, it is a question between citizens of Pennsylvania, and as between citizens of Pennsylvania the District Court for the Western District of Pennsylvania had no jurisdiction. Such being the fact, the real parties to the dispute being citizens of Pennsylvania, it is sought to base jurisdiction on the citizenship of the plaintiff, who is a citizen of California. But, as we have seen, the plaintiff neither had nor does he state any individual cause of action. On the contrary, the basis of his bill is 'the rights of your orator and of the other stockholders of the Minnetonka Oil Company,' and it prays the defendants 'be directed to account to the Minnetonka Oil Company.'

But see authorities cited in original annotation.

15. Indispensable Parties (p. 960)

In general.—To same effect as second paragraph of original annotation, see Iron Molders' Union v. Niles-Bement-Pond Co., (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1918) 258 Fed. 408, 169 C. C. A. 424.

A suit for the appointment of a receiver may not be maintained in a federal court where the indispensable parties thereto are all citizens and residents of the same state. Fryer v. Weakley, (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1919) 261 Fed. 509.

17. Representative Parties (p. 962)

Rule stated.—To same effect as original annotation, see Simson v. Klipstein, (D. C. N. J. 1920) 262 Fed. 823, wherein the court said:

"To put it in another way, representatives may stand upon their own citizenship in federal courts, irrespective of the citizenship of the persons whom they represent—such as executors, administrators, guardians, trustees, receivers, etc. The evil which the law, prohibiting the creation of federal jurisdiction by assignments, intended to obviate, was the voluntary creation of federal jurisdiction by simulated assignments made for that sole purpose. But assignments or conveyances by operation of law creating legal representatives are neither within the mischief nor reason of the law. New Orleans v. Gaines, Administrator, 138 U. S. 595, 606, 11 Sup. Ct. 428, 34 L. Ed. 1102; Mexican Central R. R. Co. v. Eckman, 187 U. S. 429, 434, 23 Sup. Ct. 211, 47 L. Ed. 245. The plaintiffs are 'managing agents,' having the legal and equitable title to the property in question, and are proper parties to the record, and so come within the above exception."

18. Interveners and Substituted Parties (p. 963)

If jurisdiction has attached on account of diversity of citizenship when the action was brought no subsequent change of parties can affect that jurisdiction. Sternberger v. Continental Mines, etc., Co., (D. C. Colo. 1919) 259 Fed. 293, wherein it was held that a sale by the plaintiff of his interest in the subject matter of the suit to one who was a citizen of the same state as the defendants, did not oust the jurisdiction of the court.

20. Pleading Citizenship (p. 964)

Directors of corporation.—Where a bill alleges the citizenship of a corporate defendant, this allegation carries the citizenship of its directors where they appear in the suit only as representatives of the corporation. Gas Securities Co. v. Antero, etc., Reservoir Co., (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1919) 259 Fed. 423, 170 C. C. A. 399.

XVI. SUITS BY ASSIGNEES

2. Construction (p. 974)

Effect of amendment by Judicial Code.—The change in the language of this paragraph on the enactment of the Judicial Code from a suit "to recover the contents of any promissory note," etc., to a suit "upon any promissory note," etc., did not change the law. The old construction is still applicable. Harlan v. Houston, (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1919) 258 Fed. 611, 170 C. C. A. 65.

4. "Chose in Action" (p. 975)

Construction of term.—Suit upon promissory note.—A suit against an executor of the assignee of a note and mortgage for an accounting by him as a mortgagee in possession of a tract of land and for the enforcement of a right of redemption, is not a suit upon the note and mortgage within the meaning of this section. Harlan v. Houston, (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1919) 258 Fed. 611, 170 C. C. A. 65. In passing upon this question, the court said: "The answer must be found in the nature of the suit and the relief sought by the plaintiff. The plaintiff is not here seeking to enforce the stipulations of the note and mortgage, but on the contrary is assailing their continued effectiveness. His main object is the clearance of his title to the land by annulling the foreclosure sale and sheriff's deed to defendant and accomplishing his right of redemption from defendant's mortgage lien. The suit is more like the common one to quiet title upon the doing of equity than one for the enforcement of a right of action founded on a contract containing within itself the contractual promise or obligation that is broken. A suit to redeem from a mortgage in the nature of a suit to quiet title has been held not within the statute. Power & Irrigation Co. v. Ditch Co., 141 C. C. A. 390, 226 Fed. 634. There is also an analogy to a suit to recover possession of a specific thing mortgaged, likewise held not within the limitation."

XVII. SERVICE OF PROCESS (p. 988)

In general.—To same effect as original annotation, see Pine Hill Coal Co. v. Gusicki, (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1919) 261 Fed. 974.

Service on foreign corporation.—The unrevoked designation by a foreign corporation, conformably to the New York statute, of an agent upon whom service may be made, does not give the corporation a constructive presence in the state, so as to render it amenable to service of process there after it has ceased to do business within the state, in an action based upon contracts made and to be performed outside the state, there being no allegation of performance within the state, nor that the causes of action arose out of acts or transactions within the state, although it is asserted that at all of the times of the duration of the contracts sued on and their breaches the corporation was doing business in the state, and at any time had the right to transact business therein, and that the contracts contemplated that they might be performed within the state. Chipman v. Thomas B. Jeffery Co., (1920) 251 U. S. 373, 40 S. Ct. 172, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) — (affirming (S. D. N. Y. 1919) 260 Fed. 856), wherein the court said: “Bagdon v. Philadelphia & Reading Coal & Iron Co., 217 N. Y. 432, 111 N. E. 1075, L. R. A. 1916F, 407, Ann. Cas. 1918A, 389, passed upon the effect of a cause of action arising out of the state, the corporation, however, doing business within the state, and having complied with the statute in regard to its place of business and the designation of an agent upon whom process could be served. But the court throughout the opinion, with conscious solicitude of the necessity of making the ground of its decision the fact that the corporation was doing business in the state, dwelt upon the fact and distinguished thereby Old Wayne Mut. Life Ass'n v. McDonough, 204 U. S. 8, 27 Sup. Ct. 236, 51 L. Ed. 345, and Simon v. Southern Ry. Co., 236 U. S. 115, 35 Sup. Ct. 255, 59 L. Ed. 492, in both of which the causes of action were based on transactions done outside of the states in which the suits were brought.

“Tauza v. Susquehanna Coal Co., 220 N. Y. 259, 115 N. E. 915, is nearer in principle of decision than the case just commented upon. The question of the doing of business within the state by the coal company was in the case and was discussed. But the question was unconnected with a statutory designation of a place of business or of an agent to receive service of process. However, there was an implication of agency in the coal company's sales agent under other provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure of the state and it was considered that the principle of Bagdon v. Phila. & Read. C. & I. Co., supra, applied. But the court went further and left no doubt of the ground of its decision. It said: ‘Unless a foreign corporation is engaged in business within the state, it is not brought within the state by the presence of its agents’—citing and deferring to St. Louis S. W. Ry. Co. of Texas v. Alexander, 227 U. S. 218, 33 Sup. Ct. 245, 57 L. Ed. 486, Ann. Cas. 1915B 77. And further said: ‘The essential thing is that the corporation shall have come into the state.’

“If prior cases have a different bent, they must be considered as overruled, as was recognized in Dollar Co. v. Canadian C. & F. Co., 220 N. Y. 270, 277, 115 N. E. 711.

“In resting the case on New York decisions, we do not wish to be understood that the validity of such service as here involved would not be of federal cognizance, whatever the decision of a state court, and refer to Pennoyer v. Neff, 95 U. S. 714, 24 L. Ed. 565; St. Louis Southwestern Ry. Co. v. Alexander, supra; Philadelphia & Reading Ry. Co. v. McKibben, 243 U. S. 264, 37 Sup. Ct. 280, 61 L. Ed. 710; Meisukas v. Greenough Red Ash Coal Co., 244 U. S. 54, 37 Sup. Ct. 593, 61 L. Ed. 987; People Tobacco Co. v. American Tobacco Co., 246 U. S. 79, 38 Sup. Ct. 233, 62 L. Ed. 587, Ann. Cas. 1918C, 537.”

Service on foreign corporation.—A foreign corporation must be regarded as doing business in a district so as to subject itself to service of process where its only business consists of buying and selling goods between certain foreign countries and the United States and it maintains a duly authorized agent in the district who has power to buy them there. Hunau v. Northern Region Supply Corp., (S. D. N. Y. 1920) 262 Fed. 181.

XVIII. ANCILLARY PROCEEDINGS

3. Particular Proceedings and Matters

g. Judgments and Decrees (p. 994)

Enforcement of judgments.—A federal court has no ancillary jurisdiction of an action at law to enforce a judgment rendered in a federal court of another district in favor of a materialman against the surety on the bond of a public contractor, given pursuant to the provisions of the Act of Feb. 24, 1905, ch. 778 (8 Fed. Stat. Ann. (2d ed.) 375 note). U. S. v. Pedarre, (E. D. La. 1920) 262 Fed. 839. The court said:

“I do not think it was the intention of Congress to require the laborer or materialman, obtaining a judgment against the surety on a bond given under the act of 1905, to go elsewhere to enforce the judgment. There are cases holding that courts of the United States have ancillary jurisdiction in equity and bankruptcy in aid of another federal court; but the instant suit is at law, and has all the elements of an original proceeding. If it is necessary to sue upon the judgment obtained under the provisions of the act of 1905 at the domicile of the sureties, it seems to me that jurisdiction would be governed by the statute limiting the general jurisdiction of the District Courts.”

Enjoining judgment.—It was held that where a money judgment was entered in the District Court, such court had ancillary jurisdiction in equity to restrain further action by the marshal under the writ of execution that had been levied upon real estate. Benedict v. Setters, (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1919) 261 Fed. 492. Commenting on the ancillary jurisdiction of federal courts generally, the court said:

"The ancillary jurisdiction of the court can be maintained where the parties to a former suit are before the court, or the facts are such as to make the case a continuation of the former suit, or where the court is called upon to enforce or vacate its judgment or decree or set aside its process, or give relief with reference to property in its possession or under its control, or to bring in outside parties having an interest in the litigation, or where the property involved is in the custody of the court or its officers and the rights of parties thereto could not be determined in any other court without a conflict of jurisdiction between the courts. Clearly, the form of proceeding must in every case be determined by the particular facts alleged in the bill, and we are of the opinion that in this case this proceeding is supplementary and ancillary, and under no rational construction can be considered a new and original proceeding, in the sense in which federal courts have sanctioned with reference to the line which divides the jurisdiction of federal courts from that of state courts."

j. Receivers (p. 997)

Waiver of objections to jurisdiction.—Where in a suit against a corporation for the appointment of a receiver, the corporation files an answer wherein it admits the allegations in the bill and joins in the prayer thereof in asking the court to take jurisdiction and appoint a receiver, it thereby waives any objections to the court's jurisdiction and the receiver cannot thereafter raise them. Kessler v. Necker, (D. C. N. J. 1919) 258 Fed. 654.

State workmen's compensation law.—By amendment to this paragraph in the Act of Oct. 6, 1917, ch. 97, 40 Stat. L. 395 (see 1918 Supp. p. 414), "rights and remedies under the workmen's compensation law of any state" are saved to claimants. This amendment has been held to be unconstitutional. Knickerbocker Ice Co. v. Stewart, (1920) 253 U. S. 149, 40 S. Ct. 438, 64 U. S.

Co. v. Burke*, (E. D. Pa. 1919) 257 Fed. 743.

Injunction suit against Comptroller of Currency.—A suit by a national bank to enjoin the Comptroller of the Currency from doing certain things under color of his office, declared to be threatened, unlawful, arbitrary, and oppressive, is one brought under the National Banking Law, within the true intentment of this section and clause and section 49 (see vol. 5, p. 482) which restrict suits, brought by national banking associations to enjoin the Comptroller under such law, to the district in which the bank is located, and such restriction operates pro tanto to displace the general provisions of section 51 (see vol. 5, p. 486), respecting the proper district for suits, and authorizes service of process upon the Comptroller wherever found. Canton First Nat. Bank v. Williams, (1920) 252 U. S. 504, 40 S. Ct. 372, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) — (reversing M. D. Pa. 1919) 260 Fed. 674, wherein the court said:

"Appellant, whose place of business is within the Middle district of Pennsylvania, brought this suit in the United States District Court for that district, seeking an injunction to prevent John Skelton Williams, Comptroller of the Currency, from doing certain things under color of his office declared to be threatened, unlawful, arbitrary, and oppressive.

"The bill alleges that, in order to injure complainant's president, towards whom he entertained personal ill will, the Comptroller determined to destroy its business, and to that end he had maliciously persecuted and oppressed it for three years, in the following ways, among others: by often demanding special reports and information beyond the powers conferred upon him by law; by disclosing confidential and official information concerning it to banks, members of Congress, representatives of the press, and the public generally; by inciting litigation against it and its officers; by publishing and disseminating false statements, charging it with unlawful acts and improper conduct and reflecting upon its solvency; and by distributing to depositors, stockholders and others alarming statements intended to affect its credit, etc., etc.; and further, that, unless restrained, he would continue these and similar malicious and oppressive practices.

"Williams is a citizen of Virginia, officially stationed at Washington. He was not summoned while in the Middle district of Pennsylvania, but a subpoena was served upon him in Washington by the United States marshal. Having specially appeared, he successfully challenged the jurisdiction of the court; and the cause is here upon certificate to that effect.

"Generally, a District Court cannot acquire jurisdiction over an individual without service of process upon him while in the district for which it is held. But here a national bank seeks to enjoin the Comptroller, and the claim is that by statutory direction the proceeding must be had in the district where the association is located, and not elsewhere. The court below took the contrary view. (260 Fed. 674.)

"Determination of the matter requires consideration of three sections of the Judicial Code. . . .

"If sections 24 and 49 properly construed restrict this proceeding to the district where the bank is located, they displace section 51 pro tanto and authorize service of process upon defendant wherever found. United States v. Congress Construction Co., 222 U. S. 199, 203, 32 Sup. Ct. 44, 56 L. Ed. 103.

"It is said for appellee that both sections 24 and 49 relate to injunction proceedings brought under the National Banking Law, — such proceedings as are thereby expressly authorized, and no others. And further, that such law only authorizes suit by a bank to enjoin the Comptroller when he undertakes to act because of its alleged refusal to redeem circulating notes. Rev. Stat. § 5237 [6 Fed. Stat. Ann. (2d ed.) 872].

"The Act of February 25, 1863, establishing national banks, chap. 58, 12 Stat. at L. 665, 681:

"Sec. 59. And be it further enacted, That suits, actions, and proceedings by and against any association under this act may be had in any circuit, district, or territorial court of the United States held within the district in which such association may be established."

"An 'Act to Provide a National Currency, Secured by a Pledge of United States Bonds,' approved June 3, 1864, chap. 106, 13 Stat. at L. 99, 116:

"Sec. 57. And be it further enacted, That suits, actions and proceedings, against any association under this act, may be had in any circuit, district, or territorial court of the United States held within the district in which such association may be established; or in any state, county, or municipal court in the county or city in which said association is located, having jurisdiction in similar cases: Provided, however, That all proceedings to enjoin the Comptroller under this act shall be had in a circuit, district, or territorial court of the United States, held in the district in which the association is located."

"In Kennedy v. Gibson (1869) 8 Wall. 498, 506, 19 L. ed. 476, 479, this court ruled that § 57 should be construed as if it read: 'And be it further enacted, That suits, actions and proceedings by and against,' etc., the words 'by and' having been accidentally omitted. 'It is not to be supposed that Congress intended to exclude associations from suing in the courts where they can be sued.' 'Such suits may still be brought by the associations in the courts of the United States.' And it further held 'that receivers also may be sued in the courts of the United States by virtue of the act, without reference to the locality of their personal citizenship.'

"The Revised Statutes:

"Sec. 629. The circuit courts shall have original jurisdiction as follows: . . .

"Tenth. Of all suits by or against any banking association established in the district for which the court is held, under any law providing for national banking associations.

"Eleventh. Of all suits brought by [or against] any banking association established in the district for which the court is held, under the provisions of title, "The National Banks," to enjoin the Comptroller of the Currency, or any receiver acting under his direction, as provided by said title.'

"Sec. 736. All proceedings by any national banking association to enjoin the Comptroller of the Currency, under the provisions of any law relating to national banking associations, shall be had in the district where such association is located.'

"Parts of the foregoing subsections 10 and 11 were joined in subsection 16, § 24, and § 736 became § 49, Judicial Code.

"What constitutes a cause arising 'under' the laws of the United States has been often pointed out by this court. One does so arise where an appropriate statement by the plaintiff, unaided by any anticipation or avoidance of defenses, discloses that it really and substantially involves a dispute or controversy respecting the validity, construction, or effect of an act of Congress. If the plaintiff thus asserts a right which will be sustained by one construction of the law, or defeated by another, the case is one arising under that law. Tennessee v. Union & Planters' Bank, 152 U. S. 454, 38 L. ed. 511, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 654; Boston & M. Consol. Copper & S. Min. Co. v. Montana Ore Purchasing Co., 188 U. S. 632, 47 L. ed. 626, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 434; Devine v. Los Angeles, 202 U. S. 313, 50 L. ed. 1046, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 662; Taylor v. Anderson, 234 U. S. 74, 59 L. ed. 1218, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 724; Hopkins v. Walker, 244 U. S. 486, 489, 61 L. ed. 1270, 1274, 37 Sup. Ct. Rep. 711. Clearly the plaintiff's bill discloses a case wherein his right to recover turns on the construction and application of the National Banking Law; and we think the proceeding is one to enjoin the Comptroller under provisions of that law, within the true intendment of the Judicial Code."

1. In General (p. 43)

Bill for directions in disposition of property.—A bill filed pursuant to a state statute by the administrators of the estate of a decedent for directions in the disposition of the properties that have come into their hands, is not a removable suit. Shehane v. Smith, (N. D. Ga. 1919) 257 Fed. 823. In passing upon this question, the court said:

"Whatever may be true as to the cases previously decided, a recent decision by the Supreme Court, which has come to my attention since I have had this case under investigation (Sutton v. English, 246 U. S. 199, 38 Sup. Ct. 254, 62 L. Ed. 664), is, I think, determinative of the matter. In the opinion in this case, by Mr. Justice Pitney, the following occurs:

"By a series of decisions in this court it has been established that since it does not pertain to the general jurisdiction of a court of equity to set aside a will or the probate thereof, or to administer upon the estates of decedents in rem, matters of this character are not within the ordinary equity jurisdiction of the federal courts; that as the authority to make wills is derived from the states, and the requirement of probate is but a regulation to make a will effective, matters of strict probate are not within the jurisdiction of courts of the United States; that where a state, by statute or custom, gives to parties interested the right to bring an action or suit inter partes, either at law or in equity, to annul a will or to set aside the probate, the courts of the United States, where diversity of citizenship and a sufficient amount in controversy appear, can enforce the same remedy, but that this relates only to independent suits, and not to procedure merely incidental or ancillary to the probate; and, further, that questions relating to the interests of heirs, devisees, or legatees, or trusts affecting such interests, which may be determined without interfering with probate or assuming general administration, are within the jurisdiction of the federal courts where diversity of citizenship exists and the requisite amount is in controversy. Broderick's Will, 21 Wall. [U. S.] 503, 509, 512 [22 L. Ed. 599]; Ellis v. Davis, 109 U. S. 485, 494, et seq. [3 Sup. Ct. 327, 27 L. Ed. 1006]; Farrell v. O'Brien, 199 U. S. 89, 110 [25 Sup. Ct. 727, 50 L. Ed. 101]; Waterman v. Canal-Louisiana Bank Co., 215 U. S. 33, 43 [30 Sup. Ct. 10, 54 L. Ed. 80]."

"The proceeding in the state court which is sought to be removed here certainly must be considered a suit supplemental or ancillary to the probate proceeding, and if it be such this authority is controlling on the question, without considering former decisions of the Supreme Court."

Suit to remove administrator.—A suit in a state court to remove an administrator, is not removable to a federal court. White v. Keown, (D. C. Mass. 1919) 261 Fed. 814. Regarding the removability of such a suit, the court said:

"Such a proceeding is plainly local, in the sense that it is one for the state court."

"According to Byers v. McAuley, 149 U. S. 608, 13 Sup. Ct. 906, 37 L. Ed. 867, an administrator appointed by a state court is an officer of that court, and as such cannot be disturbed by process issued from a subordinate federal court, and reasoning upon the well-understood theory that the jurisdiction of federal courts of first instance is a limited jurisdiction, depending upon the existence of federal questions and statutes in respect to diverse citizenship, it is there said that, where these elements of jurisdiction are wanting, the federal courts cannot proceed, even with the consent of the parties."

"In Ex parte Wisner, 203 U. S. 499, 27 Sup. Ct. 150, 51 L. Ed. 264, after explaining that the jurisdiction of the Circuit Court, which is now the District Court, depends upon acts of Congress, and cannot be extended beyond what is conferred, and that the Supreme Court of the United States alone possesses the broader jurisdiction derived immediately from the Constitution, it is said, in effect, that the test as to the jurisdiction of the subordinate federal courts under the removal provisions of the statutes is whether suit could have been originally brought therein, and, if not, that the case cannot be removed from the state court. Apply such test to the present situation, and assuming that diverse citizenship exists, it is not a removable case on the ground of diverse citizenship, because the subject-matter involved in the proceeding in the state court, to remove the administrator, is not subject-matter over which there is jurisdiction in the subordinate federal courts. The exceptional instances, in diverse citizenship situations, where suits have been sustained in federal courts of first instance against local administrators to compel the payment of debts, suits to establish lost wills, suits to recover a particular legacy, bills in equity to annul wills as muniments of title, suits to establish debts against estates, proceedings in equity to establish liens upon undivided shares of heirs at law (the Ingersoll Case [C. C.] 127 Fed. 418; Id. [C. C.] 132 Fed. 168; Id., 133 Fed. 226, 66 C. C. A. 280; Id. [C. C.] 136 Fed. 689; Id., 148 Fed. 169, 178, 78 C. C. A. 303; Id., 211 U. S. 335, 29 Sup. Ct. 92, 53 L. Ed. 208; Id. [C. C.] 174 Fed. 666; Id., 176 Fed. 194, 99 C. C. A. 548), and the like, have no pertinent application to a proceeding in a state probate court to remove an administrator, a proceeding which, in a broad and peculiar sense, relates to original and exclusive jurisdiction of probate courts in respect to the administration and settlement of estates in which many and diversified interests are necessarily involved."

g Suit Not Maintainable in Equity (p. 54)

In Miller v. Williams, (C. C. A. 4th Cir. 1919) 258 Fed. 216, 169 C. C. A. 284, a suit in equity was brought in a state court to subject certain real estate of the defendant to the payment of a judgment recovered against him in a federal court and to cancel a release of that judgment on the ground that it had been procured by fraud. The real estate in question was attached under the provisions of the state law at the time the suit was commenced. The defendant, because of nonresidence, removed the suit to a federal court, and moved to dismiss the suit for want of equity because the federal court had no jurisdiction to set aside the release and discharge entered of record in the state court. The motion was denied and the Circuit Court of Appeals, in affirming the judgment, said:

"It is also argued that the release could be canceled only by the court which rendered the judgment, and therefore the court below was without authority to decree its cancellation. The argument is not convincing. As above stated, the plaintiff filed a bill in equity in the state court and attached the real estate of the nonresident defendant, which was within the jurisdiction of that court, under the provisions of section 2964 of the Code of Virginia, which reads as follows:

"When a person has a claim, legal or equitable, to any specific personal property, or a like claim to any debt, whether such debt be payable or not, . . . if such claim exceed the sum of twenty dollars, exclusive of interest, he may, on a bill in equity filed for the purpose, have an attachment to secure and enforce the claim," etc.

"Even on defendant's theory that there was no judgment against him when the suit was commenced, because plaintiff had released it, manifestly she had a claim against him for the amount of the judgment, and the Virginia statute in express terms gave her a right of action in equity to enforce that claim. The property of defendant was seized by attachment as the statute provides, and he was personally served with process in that state. It follows that the state court, sitting as a court of equity, had full jurisdiction to grant the relief sought by plaintiff, if the proofs sustained her contention, and to that end could set aside the release and order a sale of the attached real estate to satisfy the judgment. This was the right of plaintiff in the court in which her suit was brought, and the defendant should not be permitted to take away that right by removing the case to a federal court and there setting up the plea that the cause of action stated in the bill was not cognizable by a federal court of equity. It seems but reasonable to hold that on this ground the motion to dismiss was properly denied."

V. REMOVAL FROM AND TO WHAT COURT

2. To What Court (p. 61)

"Proper district."—In Lockport Glass Co. v. H. L. Dixon Co., (W. D. Pa. 1919) 262 Fed. 976, the court said:

"The words 'proper district' have given rise to a diversity of opinion. Some cases have held that they mean any district of the United States in which the action could have been brought originally, and that therefore a removal from a state court to a District Court situate in another state can be had, because the suit could have been brought in the latter. The unreasonableness of such a construction must appear in the light of the application of such construction to extreme cases. Suppose a citizen of New Jersey has been aggrieved by a citizen of California, and immediately thereafter brings his action of tort in the state court of New York, where the offense was committed, and parties and witnesses are there to be conveniently found. The defendant, under such a construction of the words 'proper district,' would be entitled to have the cause removed to the District Court of the United States for the Southern District of California, if he were a citizen of Los Angeles. Again, if proceedings were instituted by a citizen of New Jersey in a state court of Pennsylvania, and immediately there was an attachment of personal property, the defendant and owner of the property, if he were a citizen of the Southern district of California, might remove the action to that district. Such cases, however, cannot arise if there is kept in mind the fact that the words 'proper district' are only in the provisions of the statute which determine the classes of cases which may be removed.

"When an examination of section 29 of the Judicial Code is made, we find the procedure for the removal of causes set forth in detail, and such procedure must be followed in every case of every class for the removal of which section 28 has provided, and those requirements show what is meant in the statute by the words 'proper district.' The petition must be presented by the defendant to the state court in the suit therein pending, within a time limited by the law governing such court for filing an answer or plea, and such petition must be, in the language of the act, 'for the removal of such suit into the District Court to be held in the district where such suit is pending.' In that language is found the expression of the legislative mind that the 'proper district' of section 28 is the district in which such suit is pending. A suit pending in the state court of New York, or a suit pending in the state court of Pennsylvania, cannot be held to be pending in the Southern district of California. The present action was pending in the state of New York at the time the petition for removal was filed. In no way can it be deemed to have been pending in the Western district of Pennsylvania."

In Thomas v. Delta Land, etc., Co., (D. C. Nev. 1918) 258 Fed. 758, several citizens of California sued a Nevada corporation in a Utah state court. The defendant removed the suit to the District Court for the district of Nevada. In granting a motion to remand, the court said:

"Section 28 of the Judicial Code provides that controversies over which the District Courts of the United States are given original jurisdiction, brought 'in any state court, may be removed by the defendant or defendants therein to the District Court of the United States for the proper district.' No attempt is made in section 28 to define the term 'proper district.' The Delta Company contends that it must be construed to be the district in which the plaintiff or defendant is a resident, and, as neither the Delta Company nor the plaintiffs are residents of Utah, the controversy between them cannot be removed to the United States District Court for that state; and if there can be no removal to California, the residence of the plaintiffs, nor to Nevada, the residence of the defendant, there can be no removal at all, notwithstanding the provision in section 28 for removal to the proper district.

"Section 51 of the Judicial Code declares that 'where the jurisdiction is founded only on the fact that the action is between citizens of different states, suit shall be brought only in the district of the residence of either the plaintiff or the defendant.' In the same section it is also provided that 'no civil suit shall be brought in any District Court against any person by any original process or proceeding in any other district than that whereof he is an inhabitant.'

"Plaintiffs could have instituted this suit against the Delta Company in the federal court for Nevada, but from this it does not necessarily follow that defendant has a reciprocal right of removal to Nevada. The provisions quoted from section 51 render it impossible to harass a defendant by bringing suits against him in a federal court of a distant state, simply because such distant state happens to be the residence of the plaintiff. This consideration for the defendant suggests similar safeguards for the plaintiff, and undoubtedly moved Congress, in formulating the procedure for removal of causes in section 29, to provide for removals only 'into the District Court to be held in the district where such suit is pending.'

"It might be a serious hardship, if not an absolute denial of justice, to permit a defendant by removal proceedings to transfer the trial of a cause to a federal court far distant from the state in which the cause of action arose, and from the district in which the plaintiff resides, with no other ground for such removal than the fact that defendant, possibly in anticipation of such litigation, may have taken the precaution to be organized and to be brought into existence in a state separated as far as possible from the locality in which it was proposed to do business. If the purpose in drafting section 28 was to confer an advantage on the defendant, the intention could have been clearly expressed in appropriate language."

To same effect see In re Vadner, (D. C. Nev. 1918) 259 Fed. 614.

Where both plaintiff and defendant are nonresidents.—To same effect as original annotation, see Pendar v. Empire Gas, etc., Co., (S. D. Tex. 1919) 260 Fed. 669, wherein it was said:

"The plaintiff is a citizen of the state of South Dakota. The defendant is a corporation incorporated under the laws of Maine, and therefore a citizen, and, for jurisdictional purposes, a resident, of the state of Maine. It is conceded by counsel for the respondent that, were this suit brought in this district by original process, this court could not [under section 51 of the Judicial Code], since neither of the parties reside here, entertain jurisdiction without consent of both parties to the proceeding. But he contends that the removal statute [section 28], authorizing the removal of a cause by a nonresident defendant into the District Court of the United States for the proper district, is not limited or qualified by section [51], but gives to a defendant the absolute right to remove any case into the federal district having jurisdiction over the place where the suit is brought in the state court, provided only the defendant is a nonresident of that state and district.

"It is conceded further by counsel for defendant that the case of Ex parte Wisner, 203 U. S. 449, 27 Sup. Ct. 150, 51 L. Ed. 264, is authority against this contention, and that, if that case is the law of this case, the motion to remand must be sustained. They point, however, to the fact that of the three propositions in effect decided in the Wisner Case—that a suit can only be removed into the district where it could have originally been brought, that mandamus will lie to correct the improper action of a district court in taking jurisdiction, and that jurisdiction cannot be conferred by consent where the parties are citizens of different states and neither is a citizen of the state where the suit is pending—the second and third have been overruled in Ex parte Hardin, 219 U. S. 363, 31 Sup. Ct. 324, 55 L. Ed. 252, 37 L. R. A. (N. S.) 392, and Ex parte Moore, 209 U. S. 490, 28 Sup. Ct. 585, 706, 52 L. Ed. 904, 14 Ann. Cas. 1164, respectively, and they declare that the first is so wanting in merit as that certain of the inferior federal courts have already refused to follow it. They call my attention to a lengthy opinion by Judge Cochran of the Eastern district of Kentucky, in the case of L. & N. Railway Co. v. Western Union Telegraph Co., 218 Fed. 91, an opinion of Judge Ervin, of the Southern district of Alabama, while sitting in the Northern district of Texas, in the case of James v. Amarillo City Light & Water Co., 251 Fed. 337, and a dissenting opinion by Judge Learned Hand of the district bench of the Second circuit, in the case of the Guaranty Trust Co. v. McCabe, 250 Fed. 704, 163 C. C. A. 31.

"I am not disposed to deny the force of much of the reasoning in the opinions of those judges, but it appears to me that their views are more cogent as arguments for an amendment of the law than as really declaring the law as it is written; besides, I derive little support from arguments ab inconvenienti. When a judge is able to say, 'Ita lex scripta,' he has completed his inquiry and established a firm basis for his judgment. The effect of those cases is to declare that, because it has been held that parties may waive the venue requirement of section [51], which lies at the threshold of actual jurisdiction in any particular case, the plaintiff by bringing a suit in a state court puts it entirely in the power of the defendant to bring the matter into the federal court of the district where the suit is brought without consulting or considering plaintiff's wishes in the premises. Judge Ervin even goes to the point of declaring that a plaintiff has no right at all to be consulted as to the district to which the cause may be removed, and this is the effect, if not the verbiage, of the views of Judge Cochran and Judge Hand.

"This view is directly in conflict, not only with the holding, but with the reasoning, of the Supreme Court in Ex parte Moore, supra, where the removal was sustained upon the express ground that the plaintiff, after the case had been removed by the defendant, had appeared and pleaded thus affirmatively, consenting to the jurisdiction of that court. Mr. Justice Moody, in Re Winn, 213 U. S. 464, 29 Sup. Ct. 516, 53 L. Ed. 873, speaking for the court, says:

"It is well settled that no cause can be removed from the state court to the Circuit Court of the United States unless it could originally have been brought in the latter court."

"And again, construing Ex parte Moore, said on page 469 (29 Sup. Ct. 519 [53 L. Ed. 873]):

"That case simply held that where there was a diversity of citizenship, which gave jurisdiction to some Circuit Court, the objection that there was no jurisdiction in a particular district might be waived by appearing and pleading to the merits."

"I think both the disposition made by the Circuit Court of Appeals of Guaranty Trust Co. of New York v. McCabe, 250 Fed. 700, 163 C. C. A. 34, and the reasons which underlie it, are eminently correct. In that case it is said:

"It has long been settled that a defendant may insist upon or waive his objection to venue, . . . but it is also settled by Ex parte Moore, 209 U. S. 490, 506, 28 Sup. Ct. 585, 706, 52 L. Ed. 904, 14 Ann. Cas. 1164, that in a case where jurisdiction depends upon diversity of citizenship, . . . the plaintiff, in case of removal, also has the right to insist upon or waive his objection to the jurisdiction because the district is not the "proper district"—that is, either the residence of plaintiff or of defendant."

In Pullman Co. v. Sutherlin, (Ga. App. 1919) 101 S. E. 314, the court said: "The petition in this case alleges the residence of the plaintiff to be in Alabama and that of the defendant to be in Illinois. In the petition for removal this is not denied, nor is there any other reason given upon which the petition for removal is based. 'A suit which, by reason of the nonresidence of both parties, could not have been brought in the federal court in the first instance, cannot be removed to that court from a state court. . . or the ground of diverse citizenship, at least where the plaintiff resists such removal, even if the consent of both parties could confer jurisdiction.' Ex parte Wisner, 203 U. S. 449, 27 S. Ct. 150, 51 U. S. (L. ed.) 264. While it is true that in some of the later cases there is a tendency to modify the ruling made in the Wisner Case, supra, this court is bound by that ruling until the United States Supreme Court expressly overrules it."

In Fairview Fluorspar, etc., Co. v. Bethlehem Steel Co., (E. D. Pa. 1919) 258 Fed. 681, an action which was brought in the court of a state of which neither party was a citizen, was held to be not removable by the defendant on the ground of diverse citizenship to the federal court for the district in which he resided. On this question, the court said:

"The argument supporting the jurisdiction of this district is that by the twenty-eighth section of the Judicial Code diversity of citizenship confers the right of removal upon the defendant, if he be a nonresident of the state in which he is sued, provided only the cause be removed to a court in which he might have been sued in the first instance. There is here such diversity of citizenship; this defendant has been sued in the state of Missouri, of which defendant is a nonresident, and the suit might have been here brought. Why, then, may not the cause be removed to this court? The only answer to be made is that section 29 provides that the cause, if removed, must be removed to the court of the Missouri district, and this is open to the retort that, as that court has no jurisdiction, to give this effect to the twenty-ninth section is to deny the right of removal given by the twenty-eighth. The soundness of the proposition involved in the retort must be conceded, and the result accepted. The acceptance of it has support in these (among other) considerations:

"1. There is no right of removal unless it is given by statute, and section 28 which gives, and section 29 which denies, may be read together as meaning in effect that there is no right of removal unless the plaintiff be a resident of the state in which the suit is brought.

"2. The denial is consistent with the withholding of the right, unless the defendant be a nonresident of the state in which suit is brought.

"3. It is consistent with the conformity statutes.

"4. The ab inconvenienti argument supports it.

"5. It has support in that such a finding is in accord with the conclusions reached in a number of cases ruled by other District Courts."

The rule stated.—To same effect as original annotation, see Monroe v. Detroit, etc., R. Co., (E. D. Mich. 1919) 257 Fed. 782.

In the case of In re Vadner, (D. C. Nev. 1918) 259 Fed. 614, it was said:

"It is well settled that a suit arises under the Constitution and laws of the United States, within the meaning of the foregoing statute, only when the plaintiff's statement of his own cause of action shows that it is based on that Constitution or those laws. Spencer v. Duplan Silk Co., 191 U. S. 526, 24 Sup. Ct. 174, 48 L. Ed. 287; Austin v. Gagan (C. C.) 39 Fed. 626, 5 L. R. A. 476.

"If it does not so appear, and the defendant has such a defense, he may ultimately bring it before the Supreme Court of the United States by setting it up in the state court; and if it be properly urged, and thereafter denied by the highest state court, it may then be brought to the attention of the Supreme Court of the United States on writ of error.

"The defendant cannot, by allegations in his answer or petition supplementing the complaint, show a federal question which will entitle him to removal. . . It must necessarily follow that one who has been sued in a state court cannot thereafter in such pending suit raise a federal question by filing a voluntary petition in bankruptcy which will entitle him to a removal."

j. Miscellaneous Cases (p. 88)

An action against the Emergency Fleet Corporation is removable on the ground that a federal question is involved. Commonwealth Finance Corp. v. Landis, (E. D. Pa. 1919) 261 Fed. 440.

c. Suit for Royalties on Patent (p. 89)

To same effect as original annotation, see International Fastener Co. v. Francis Mfg. Co., (W. D. N. Y. 1919) 259 Fed. 311, wherein it was said:

"The principal question presented for decision is whether the plaintiff, by its last amendment to the complaint, embodied a primary cause arising for the first time under the patent laws of the United States, of which this court has exclusive jurisdiction. Judicial Code, § 28.

"The original agreement conferring the right to manufacture the fasteners for a period of 30 years was later modified to permit defendant to manufacture, without royalties, other fasteners not included in the Page patent. The controversy, therefore, true enough, presents the question as to whether the sew-on fastener device, as distinguished from the cling fastener specified in the contract, was fairly included and described in the Page patent.

"Plaintiff does not assert a cause of action for infringement, nor seek to restrain the defendant company from manufacturing any of the fastener devices, or to have the claims of the Page patent construed, or to have it declared invalid. On the contrary, the action is plainly to recover damages for breach of a subsisting contract under which manufacturing rights were obtained and to recover for unpaid royalties. The claim that sew-on fasteners for garments are fairly included in the term 'cling' fastener, or in the description in the patent specification, even though involving the construction and interpretation of the Page patent, would not necessarily remove the case from the jurisdiction of the state court. There is a clear distinction between cases arising under the patent laws and mere questions presented thereunder. Pratt v. Paris Gaalight & Coke Co., 168 U. S. 255, 18 Sup. Ct. 62, 42 L. Ed. 458; Goodyear v. Union India Rubber Co., Fed. Cas. No. 5,596.

"In Chappell v. Waterworth, 155 U. S. 102, 15 Sup. Ct. 34, 39 L. Ed. 85, the Supreme Court of the United States decided that a case could not be removed from the state court into the federal court as one arising under the Constitution, laws, or treaties of the United States, unless the complaint showed that it did so arise, and the want of such showing could not be supplied by anything contained in the petition for removal. In Pratt v. Paris Gaalight & Coke Co., supra, the Supreme Court said:

"We have repeatedly held that the federal courts have no right, irrespective of citizenship, to entertain suits for the amount of an agreed license, or royalty, or for the specific execution of a contract for the use of a patent, or of other suits where a subsisting contract is shown governing the rights of the party in the use of an invention, and that such suits not only may, but must, be brought in the state courts. Hartell v. Tilghman, 99 U. S. 547 [25 L. Ed. 357]; Wilson v. Sandford, 10 How. 99 [13 L. Ed. 344]. . . Although in an action for royalties, if the validity and infringement of the patent are controverted, the case is considered as one "touching patent rights," for the purposes of an appeal to this court under Rev. Stat. § 699."

"See, also, Dale Tile Co. v. Hyatt, 125 U. S. 46, 8 Sup. Ct. 756, 31 L. Ed. 683.

"The cases of Atherton Machine Co. v. Atwood Co., 102 Fed. 955, 43 C. C. A. 72, and Leslie v. Mann Co. (C. C.) 157 Fed. 236, the latter a decision by this court, upon which reliance is placed by defendant, are not in point, for in the first-mentioned case the action was clearly brought for an infringement of the patent there in controversy, although the validity of a subsisting contract was also involved, while in the latter case the articles manufactured by the defendant were in fact claimed in the bill to be an infringement of the patent, and the defendant was avoiding payment of the stipulated royalties under a contract or license of assignment of patent on the ground of noninfringement.

"In my opinion this action is not one arising under the patent laws of the United States, and, without deeming it necessary to pass upon any other questions argued, the case is remanded to the Supreme Court of the state of New York."

f. Miscellaneous Cases (p. 90)

Action by municipality against railroad for violation of franchise agreement.—In Monroe v. Detroit, etc., R. Co., (E. D. Mich. 1919) 257 Fed. 782, it was held that a suit by a city against a railroad company, operating an electric railway between the plaintiff city and another city in the same state, charging the defendant with violating and having violated a franchise agreement with the plaintiff regarding rates of fare to be charged between the two cities, was not one arising under the Constitution or laws of the United States and was not entitled to removal.

Action for wrongful death against Director General of Railroads.—An action in a state court to recover damages for the wrongful death of the driver of an automobile truck in a collision with a train, operated by a railroad under federal control, is not removable in view of the provisions of section 10 of the Federal Control Act (1918 Supp. Fed. Stat. Ann. 763). Loughnan v. Hines, (W. D. Wash. 1919) 261 Fed. 218.

X. DIVERSE CITIZENSHIP, ALIENAGE, OR FOREIGN STATE AS GROUND FOR REMOVAL

1. Same as for Original Jurisdiction (p. 102)

Both plaintiff and defendant nonresidents. — See annotation under this section supra, p. 607.

4. Fraudulent Joinder of Defendants

c. Joinder of Master and Servant (p. 116)

Where an individual defendant, living in the same state and district as the plaintiff, is joined as a defendant with a corporation for which he was working, against which a suit for damages for injuries received is brought, and the joinder of the individual defendant is for the purpose of defeating the removal of the cause to the United States court, the case will be retained in the federal court and a motion to remand the case denied. Plunkett v. Gulf Refining Co., (N. D. Ga. 1919) 259 Fed. 968.

Where a declaration set out a cause of action against master and servant as joint tortfeasors, and the petition for removal, which contained several excerpts from evidence adduced on another trial in another court, failed to show that the resident defendant was made a party fraudulently and in bad faith, the refusal of the trial judge to pass an order removing the case to the federal court was not erroneous. Postal Tel.-Cable Co. v. Puckett, (Ga. App. 1919) 101 S. E. 397.

7. Suits by and against Aliens (p. 120)

Alien joined with citizen.—To same effect as original annotation, see Compania Minera Y Compradora, etc., v. American Metal Co., (W. D. Tex. 1920) 262 Fed. 183, but holding that a case is not removable where the alien defendant does not join in the petition for removal.

A suit by an alien against an alien.—To same effect as original annotation, see Compania Minera Y Compradora, etc. v. American Metal Co., (W. D. Tex. 1920) 262 Fed. 183.

A suit by an alien against a citizen and an alien is not a suit "between citizens of different states," and hence not removable on that ground. Compania Minera Y Compradora, etc. v. American Metal Co., (W. D. Tex. 1920) 262 Fed. 183.

XI. SEPARABLE CONTROVERSY AS GROUND OF REMOVAL

2. Citizenship and Diversity of Citizenship Essential

b. Alienage of Party (p. 123)

A separable controversy to which an alien is a party cannot be removed, whether the alien is a plaintiff or defendant. Compania Minera Y Compradora, etc. v. American Metal Co., (W. D. Tex. 1920) 262 Fed. 183.

3. Tests of Separability

a. In General (p. 123)

In order to justify such removal, on the ground of a separate controversy.—To the same effect as the original annotation see Postal Tel.-Cable Co. v. Puckett, (Ga. App. 1919) 101 S. E. 397; Roberts v. Underwood Typewriter Co., (D. C. N. J. 1919) 257 Fed. 583.

5. Proper or Indispensable Codefendant (p. 130)

Indispensable party.—Where, in a suit against two corporations, incorporated in different states, neither of the corporations is a necessary or indispensable party to the full determination of the controversy between the plaintiff and the other corporation, or for enforcing any judgment which he might recover against either, and other jurisdictional facts necessary to give the federal court cognizance of the controversy between the plaintiff and one of the corporations are present, the controversy is properly removed to the federal court. Roberts v. Underwood Typewriter Co., (D. C. N. J. 1919) 257 Fed. 583.

6. Plaintiff's Motive in Joining Defendants (p. 130)

See supra, this note X, 4, b, p. 610.

13. Separate Causes of Action (p. 137)

Failure to allege joint cause of action.—

"While it is true that a defendant has no right to say that an action shall be several which a plaintiff elects to make joint, yet if the complaint fails to allege facts showing a joint cause of action, or alleges facts showing separate causes, or fails to allege facts showing any cause of action against the resident defendant, then there is a separable controversy which entitles the nonresident defendant to remove." Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Gulf Refining Co., (S. D. Miss. 1919) 260 Fed. 262, holding that the complaint failed to show any cause of action against the resident defendants.

14. Several Plaintiffs (p. 138)

Action for negligence by owner and insurer.

—Where, in an action by a corporation and an insurance company against a railroad to recover damages for the loss of goods by fire alleged to have been occasioned by the negligence of the defendant, it appears that the insurance company has paid part of the loss to the corporation, and claims to be subrogated to the latter's rights under its policy, there is no separable controversy justifying removal. Isaac Kubie Co. v. Lehigh Valley R. Co., (D. C. N. J. 1919) 261 Fed. 806.

16. Separable Controversy, How Shown (p. 138)

In plaintiff's pleading.—In In re Vadner, (D. C. Nev. 1918) 259 Fed. 614, it was contended that the suit was removable because of a separable controversy between one of the plaintiffs, who was a trustee in bankruptcy of one of the parties to the suit, and several of the defendants. The court said:

"The existence of a separable controversy between the trustee Pruett and the Basic Fund Company is not set up in the petition for removal, unless it be in the allegation that the trustee 'has proceeded in the above-entitled cause with utter disregard to the jurisdiction of the bankruptcy court and the rights of' executors of the estate of Samuel Vadner, deceased, Basic Fund Company, and Phebe Vadner, to have their claims to the property of the bankrupt tried and determined in the bankruptcy proceedings."

"Prior to the petition for removal these claimants had filed petitions in intervention, and consented to submit their claims for adjudication to this court."

"The trustee in bankruptcy by intervening raised no new issues as against defendants. He joined the plaintiff in her demands, but as against her he claimed, and still claims, the fruits of the litigation. Clearly, whatever rights defendants had to removal as against Agnes Vadner were lost by delay. The intervention of the trustee could not revive a right already lapsed. If there was a right of removal as against the trustee, it must have accrued out of some controversy between him and one or more of the defendants. No such controversy is pointed out in either petition for removal, except those litigated with Agnes Vadner in the state court, and there decided before removal to this court was sought. If there be such a controversy, and it be true, as alleged in both petitions, that Charles S. Vadner, Phebe Vadner, Basic Fund Company, a corporation, Charles S. Vadner and Phebe Vadner, executors of the estate of Samuel Vadner, deceased, and W. E. Pruett, trustee in bankruptcy, all reside in the city of Reno, Washoe county, Nev., the requisite diversity of citizenship is lacking. If there is a controversy between the defendants on one side, the trustee and Mrs. Vadner on the other, then one plaintiff, Pruett, and two defendants, Vadner and Phebe Vadner, are residents of the same state.

"If the Basic Fund Company is a citizen and resident of Montana, no separable controversy exists between it and Pruett, 'which can be fully determined between them without the presence of any other defendant.' Ordinarily, to determine whether there is a separable controversy, the complaint is the only document to be considered.

"The only relief prayed for by Agnes Vadner or Pruett against the Basic Fund Company is that the conveyances of the Vadner Terrace and the interest in the Downing note and mortgage to that company be set aside as fraudulent.

"In an action to set aside a conveyance to which the grantor and grantee are defendants, there is no separable controversy between plaintiff and the grantee; the grantor is a necessary party. 34 Cyc. 1274; Graves v. Corbin, 132 U. S. 571, 588, 10 Sup. Ct. 196, 33 L. Ed. 462; Moore v. North River Constr. Co. (C. C.) 19 Fed. 803; Reineman v. Ball (C. C.) 33 Fed. 692; German Sav. & L. Soc. v. Dormitzer, 116 Fed. 471, 475, 53 C. C. A. 639; Beswick v. Dorris (C. C.) 174 Fed. 502, 508; Darnold v. Simpson (C. C.) 114 Fed. 368; Huncke v. Dold, 7 N. M. 5, 32 Pac. 45, 48.

"In Gaylord v. Kelshaw, 1 Wall. 81, 17 L. Ed. 612, where there was a bill to set aside a conveyance as made without consideration and in fraud of creditors, it was held that the alleged fraudulent grantor was a necessary defendant, and if his citizenship was not set forth the cause must be remanded or dismissed.

"Here, Pruett, the plaintiff, and Vadner, the grantor, a necessary party defendant, are citizens and residents of the same state.

"If there is a controversy between Agnes Vadner and the Basic Fund Company, Charles Vadner is a necessary party thereto. It is alleged in both petitions for removal that the Basic Fund Company resides in Reno, Nev. (paragraph 6); and also that it is a Montana corporation, and a citizen and resident of that state (paragraph 11). There is no allegation in either petition as to the residence and citizenship of Agnes Vadner. An examination of the record shows she claims to be a resident and citizen of Utah. In the petition for removal in the equity case to the Utah court, Charles Vadner, December 31, 1917, swore 'that the plaintiff at the time of the commencement of said suit was, and ever since said date has been, and still is, a citizen and resident of the state of Utah, and that she has been a resident and citizen since the institution of this action of the state of Utah.' Four days later, in his own petition for removal of the divorce case to the Utah federal court, the said Vadner swore 'that the said plaintiff at the date of the commencement of said suit (November 11, 1917) was, and still is, a citizen of the state of Massachusetts.' These conflicting statements undoubtedly explain the reason why allegations as to Agnes Vadner's citizenship are omitted from the petitions for removal to this court."

34. Miscellaneous Equity Suits (p. 148)

No separable controversy.—In a suit to set aside a conveyance to which the grantor and grantee are defendants, there is no separable controversy between the plaintiff and the grantee. The grantor is a necessary party. In re Vadner, (D. C. Nev. 1918) 259 Fed. 614.

Where, in a suit by a state against a fertilizer company to abate it as a nuisance, a subpoena duces tecum is served on another company doing a similar business, and on its failure to answer a rule for contempt filed against it, and subsequently a petition for attachment for contempt is filed, wherein it is prayed that the second company be made a party to the original suit, there is no separable controversy justifying the removal of the case to a federal court. Boykin v. Morris Fertilizer Co., (N. D. Ga. 1919) 257 Fed. 827. The court said: "The Armour Fertilizer Works got into this litigation in a peculiar way, as shown. They seem to have been served with a subpoena duces tecum, according to the pleadings, and, failing to answer that, were attached for contempt. Then, being engaged in the same character of business as the Morris Fertilizer Company, and, according to the record, about to be proceeded against as being guilty of the same character of nuisance as the Morris Fertilizer Company (that is, the emission from their works of noxious gases and odors claimed to constitute a nuisance), they executed this contract.

"Thus the way the Armour Fertilizer Works came to be a party to this proceeding, if at all, is certainly novel and peculiar. They were never served in the case, apparently, and there was never any order by the court, so far as I can see in the record, making them a party defendant in the case, and no pleadings against them until the present proceeding for contempt, and it seems to me to be at least exceedingly doubtful whether the Armour Fertilizer Works has ever become legally and effectually a party to this proceeding. If so, it appears to be certain that they became a party by reason of voluntarily entering into the contract which they did, and which was filed as a part of the record in the case. Whether this contract had that effect or not I need not determine, as that should be decided by the state court.

"But, whatever may be true about that, the proceeding which is now pending, and was pending when this removal was had, after setting out what had transpired in the case against the Morris Fertilizer Company, alleges that, at the time the original petition was filed against the Morris Fertilizer Company, the Armour Fertilizer Works was engaged in the manufacture and sale of fertilizers, was operating a plant largely similar to that of the Morris Fertilizer Company and but a short distance therefrom; that the plant of the Armour Fertilizer Works was as great a nuisance, and was guilty of the same acts and character of acts, as the defendant Morris Fertilizer Company. The petition then sets out, as stated heretofore, that petitioners were preparing to start litigation of the same kind and character against the Armour Fertilizer Works, but that a conference was had, which resulted in the contract which is set out above. Then, after setting out that under the contract both plants were shut down for some time, the petition alleges that for several months both plants have been violating said contract and agreement. The petition prays that rule be issued calling on the Morris Fertilizer Company and the Armour Fertilizer Works, on a date named, to show cause why each of them should not be attached and punished for contempt for violation of the order of the court of February 11, 1918.

"This is undoubtedly a joint proceeding on the part of the petitioners against both the Morris Company and the Armour Works. It might, probably, have been a separate proceeding against each; but the petitioners have elected to make it a joint proceeding against the two companies, and, as I understand the case, they charge that each is doing the same thing and together they constitute a nuisance, although each might, by itself, be a nuisance.

"One of the main grounds of the motion to remand in this case is that there is no separable controversy here. Evidently the basis of the present proceeding is the contract, which was a joint contract between the two companies and the plaintiff and relators. This contract must be the basis and foundation of any proceeding had against them now, and, the petitioners having chosen to proceed against the two jointly, the fact that they have so elected precludes the existence of a separable controversy. This doctrine is tersely stated by Simkins in 'A Federal Equity Suit,' page 74, as follows:

"Where the liability of two or more is joint and several, and plaintiff elects to sue jointly, a separable interest of one of the defendants cannot be set up to obtain federal jurisdiction'—citing Powers v. Chesapeake & Ohio Railway, 169 U. S. 97, 18 Sup. Ct. 264, 42 L. Ed. 673, and numerous other authorities.

"The contract, as above set out, provides in the third paragraph:

"Said plants shall not again be operated unless they can be operated without violating the restraining order of force in the above case, and if both of said plants, at the same time, or either separately, cannot be made so to operate, then such plants shall be immediately shut down and shall remain closed."

"It will be noticed that, if either or both of the plants cannot be operated in the manner provided, then both shall be shut down, and, as I have stated above, if the Armour Fertilizer Works is a legal party to this proceeding at all, it is a party because of this joint agreement that, if either shall do wrong, both shall be liable. This being a proceeding against them jointly for violation of this contract and of the order of the court, I do not think there is a separable controversy here, such as would justify its removal to this court.

"There is also grave doubt in my mind whether the character of the proceeding is such as can be removed. It is a proceeding for contempt for the violation of an order of a court, and while the argument is that the proceeding relates back through the entire case, and the controversy between the Armour Fertilizer Works and the petitioners is a separate and distinct controversy from that of the Morris Fertilizer Company, yet, after all, it is a proceeding for contempt for violation of an order of the court and the right to remove it, on that account, is questionable at least."

36. Action of Tort Against Master and Servant (p. 153)

Question of joint or several liability as governed by state law.—Where, in an action for the wrongful death of the plaintiff's intestate, the complainant joins with the decedent's employer, coemployees by whose alleged negligence plaintiff was killed, and whose citizenship is the same as that of the plaintiff, the question of the joint or several liability of the defendants is governed by the decisions of the highest court of the state rather than by the decisions of the federal courts. Kelly v. Robinson, (E. D. Mo. 1920) 262 Fed. 695.

Removal denied.—In Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Feaster, (E. D. S. C. 1919) 260 Fed. 881, a removal was denied where it appeared that, under the decisions of the highest court of the state in which the action was brought, a joint action in tort might be maintained against a master and servant, if the cause of action arose of one transaction, despite the fact that one of the defendants was liable under a statute and the other at common law. The court said:

"The position of the Atlantic Coast Line Railroad Company is that the statute known as the Employers' Liability Act passed by the state of South Carolina, on the 14th day of April, 1916, supersedes all law relating to the relations of the employer and employee in a case such as this, where the employer is a common carrier by railroad, and the right of the employee to recover depends entirely upon the terms of that act; whereas, his right to recover as against the other defendant, R. S. Jones, depends entirely upon the common law, making both employer and employee liable to the party injured in a case of injury caused by joint negligence; for this court cannot in the same cause administer a different rule as to liability to different defendants, the one being the liability imposed by the common law and the other being the rule as to the liability imposed by the Employers' Liability Act.

"There are some aspects in which this position would appear to be logical and reasonable and there are decisions of respectable courts supporting it; but the Supreme Court of South Carolina, in the case of Powell v. Southern Railway Co., 110 S. C. 70, 96 S. E. 292, decided on the 15th of April, 1918, has decided explicitly that, although a railway company may be liable as an employer under the act of Congress entitled 'Employers' Liability Act' (Act April 22, 1908, c. 149, 35 Stat. 65) the language of the South Carolina statute being the same, while the other defendant in that case may be liable under common law, yet that where the complaint alleged that the transaction was one and that both defendants had concurrent part in the transaction, it did not matter that the law cast upon each defendant a different duty thereabout; that that consideration does not separate them in the performance of the same act, and that the complainant had a right to allege the existence of a joint tort, and to recover upon the tort as a joint one, although a different measure of liability might be imposed by the court upon the separate defendants; that although a different rule of law would be applied as measuring the liability of the two separate defendants, that would not be sufficient to change the general character of the tort and convert the right against each defendant into a separable one.

"This being a matter of local law under the practice in the state courts, it would appear to this court that it should be more controlling in this court, as the rule to be followed, than the diametrically opposite conclusion arrived at by the Supreme Court of Georgia in the case of Lee v. Central of Georgia Railroad Co., 21 Ga. App. 558, 94 S. E. 888. The conclusions of the Supreme Court of Georgia and the Supreme Court of South Carolina are absolutely irreconcilable.

"In view of what appears to be the tendency of the Supreme Court of the United States to hold that, in these cases of liability for negligence, the local law of the place where the alleged tort was committed should control, it would be safer to follow the rule laid down by the Supreme Court of South Carolina."

Where, in an action by an employee to recover damages for personal injuries, a resident employee and the nonresident employer are joined as defendant, both being charged with negligence, there is no separable controversy. Plunkett v. Gulf Refining Co., (N. D. Ga. 1919) 259 Fed. 974.

Where a joint suit is brought by a resident of this state against a foreign corporation doing business in this state, and against one of its employees who resides in this state, for an injury alleged to have resulted from negligent acts committed by both defendants, the suit is not recoverable by the corporation as a separable controversy. Postal Tel.-Cable Co. v. Puckett, (Ga. App. 1919) 101 S. E. 397.

Removal allowed.—To same effect as second paragraph of original annotation, see Kelly v. Robinson, (E. D. Mo. 1920) 262 Fed. 695, wherein the court said:

"The learned observations of Mr. Story in his valuable work on the Law of Agency (Story on Agency [9th Ed.] § 308) seem most accurately to set forth the law on this question. Upon this precise point Mr. Story said this:

"We come, in the next place; to the consideration of the liability of agents to third persons, in regard to torts or wrongs done by them in the course of their agency. . . . And here the distinction ordinarily taken is between acts of misfeasance or positive wrongs and nonfeasances or mere omissions of duty by private agents. . . . The master is always liable to third persons for the misfeasances and negligences and omissions of duty of his servant, in all cases within the scope of his employment. So the principal, in like manner, is liable to third persons for the like misfeasances, negligences, and omissions of duty of his agent, leaving him to his remedy over against the agent in all cases where the tort is of such a nature as that he is entitled to compensation. . . . The agent is also personally liable to third persons for his own misfeasances and positive wrongs. But he is not . . . liable to third persons for his own nonfeasances or omissions of duty, in the course of his employment. His liability, in these latter cases, is solely to his principal."

"The above excerpt was quoted with approval by Judge Sherwood in the case of Steinhauser v. Spraul, supra [127 Mo. 541, 28 S. W. 620, 30 S. W. 102, 27 L. R. A. 441], which case is the latest utterance of the Supreme Court of Missouri which I have been able to find upon this subject. Substantially, however, what was said by Judge Sherwood in the Steinhauser Case only reiterated what had theretofore been said by the Supreme Court of Missouri in an early case. Harriman v. Stowe, 57 Mo. 93.

"Applying to the allegations of plaintiff's petition the test of misfeasance or nonfeasance connoted by the rule above quoted, it seems plain that defendants Robinson and Johnson were, as to plaintiff's decedent, guilty of a mere omission of duty. These defendants were authorized and required to employ a sufficient number of competent miners to inspect and keep safe the roof of the mine. Having thus pleaded the incumbent duties resting upon the individual defendants plaintiff thereupon avers that the defendants (which of course includes the individual defendants) 'negligently employed and provided an insufficient number of miners to inspect the roof of said mine,' so that the place where decedent was compelled to work became and remained 'an unsafe and dangerous place to work' and by this negligence it is averred decedent came to his death.

"In the light of these averments in the petition it is, I think, too plain for argument that the charge here against the individual defendants is merely a charge of a failure or omission to perform an incumbent duty; that is, a charge of nonfeasance of duty and not misfeasance or wrong performance of such duty. If this view of the fact be correct, then there is no liability in favor of the plaintiff as against the individual defendants. Therefore the case presented is one of a separable controversy, and since, as between plaintiff and the corporate defendant against which a cause of action is pleaded in the petition, diversity of citizenship exists, this court has jurisdiction."

"Where a resident employee is joined with a nonresident employer as a defendant in a suit for damages, and no cause of action is stated against the resident defendant, it will be treated by the court as a case only against the employer, the nonresident of the state, for the purpose of jurisdiction. Where nonfeasance only is charged against the resident employee, no case is stated against him, because an employee is not liable to a third party for mere nonfeasance in connection with some duty he owes to his employer." Plunkett v. Gulf Refining Co., (N. D. Ga. 1919) 259 Fed. 968.

State statute providing for appeal from condemnation award within certain time.—Where a state statute provides that an owner of property, in order to prevent the appraisers' award in condemnation proceedings from becoming final against him, must appeal therefrom within ten days after the filing of the award, a petition for removal of the case must be made within that time. Toccoa v. Marchbanks, (N. D. Ga. 1919) 261 Fed. 684, wherein the court said:

"The fact that in this case the condemnnee filed a pleading before the assessors may be treated as immaterial. The statute required no such thing. If they had been the final tribunal, although no written appeal or answer were required, of course removal would have to be sought at the time the condemnnee was compelled to appear for trial and there plead orally; but I think it may be fairly said that 'the statute of the state (there being no rule of court involved) required' nothing of the defendant until, the award being filed, it declared that he must, within ten days therefrom, in order to escape its becoming a final judgment against him, fixing the amount he might recover, 'make, in writing, his appeal therefrom.' This appeal is the only thing required by the condemnation statute, from beginning to end, for the condemnnee to do. The issue that is to be made up for trial by a jury the statute does not require to be made up by the defendant, but by the judge, and this cannot serve as the point of time at which removal is to be sought, as contended by Marchbanks. Practically it would be quite unreasonable to permit the condemnnee to wait, not only until the appraisers had heard the case, made their award, filed it, and appeal had been entered, but until the case was actually called for trial before a jury, with parties and witnesses present, to make his demand for removal. Promptness is certainly aimed at in the seeking of this remedy.

"Considering the filing of the appeal to be the only plea or answer required by the state statute of the condemnnee, I take the time fixed for that as the time at which removal must be sought, under Judicial Code, § 29, and that the right of removal expires with the ten days after the filing of the award. Whether it be possible to treat the Georgia procedure as judicial from its inception, and whether the removal may be sought at any time prior to the filing of the award, should the condemnnee consider it important to seek it at that time, need not be, and is not now, decided. But see Kaw Valley v. Metropolitan Water Co., 186 Fed. 315, 108 C. C. A. 393; Des Moines Water Co. v. City of Des Moines, 206 Fed. 657, 124 C. C. A. 445. It is held, however, that the removal must be sought during the period allowed for the filing of the appeal. This being true, the removal in this case was sought too late, and the case should be remanded. Compare Martin's Adm'r v. B. & O. R. R. Co., 151 U. S. 673, 14 Sup. Ct. 533, 38 L. Ed. 311; Heller v. Ilwaco Mill & Lumber Co. (C. C.) 178 Fed. 111; First Nat. Bank v. Appleyard & Co. (C. C.) 138 Fed. 939; Head v. Selleck (C. C.) 110 Fed. 786."

III. NOTICE OF PETITION AND BOND PRIOR TO FILING

2. Under Judicial Code

a. Notice Required (p. 269)

To same effect as original annotation, see In re Vadner, (D. C. Nev. 1918) 259 Fed. 614, wherein it was said:

"In the motion to remand, plaintiff states that no notice of the filing of any petition for removal was served on her. No evidence is furnished, by the record or otherwise, of any such service. Section 29 provides that 'written notice of said petition and bond for removal shall be given the adverse party or parties prior to filing the same.' This language is mandatory and imperative. Removal proceedings are purely statutory, and, unless they are had as directed in the statute, in the face of seasonable objections the state court does not lose, and the federal court does not acquire jurisdiction."

c. Sufficiency of Notice (p. 272)

Where a rule to show cause why the prayer of the defendant's petition for removal should not be granted, is served on the plaintiff's attorney, this constitutes sufficient notice to comply with the requirements of this section. Lewis v. Erie R. Co., (M. D. Pa. 1919) 257 Fed. 868. In considering this question, the court said: "The usual petition, with the required bond, was presented to court in the presence of counsel for plaintiffs, and out of abundance of caution the court entered a rule to show cause why the prayer of the petition should not be allowed, returnable at a time subsequent. Counsel accepted service of the rule. Is this a sufficient compliance with the statute, providing for written notice prior to the filing of the petition and bond in the removal of causes from state to federal courts?"

"We think it is. The plaintiffs were advised in writing of defendants' endeavor. Their counsel was in court, and defendants' petition and bond were before him. Ample opportunity was afforded to be heard before the court accepted the petition and bond and directed the removal. The record shows that plaintiffs appeared to the rule, filed an answer and were heard. What more could they expect from a more literal compliance of the statute, if that were possible? They were afforded a hearing and careful consideration of their objections to the attempted removal. While the recited provision of the statute is imperative, it is not intended to operate as a hindrance or obstacle in the way of those seeking to avail themselves of the provisions of the statute. Its aim and purpose is to give the opposing party full and timely notice of the attempt to remove a suit brought, possibly to afford such an opportunity for hearing before the court accepts the petition and bond tendered. When this is done, all has been accomplished that was intended. Accordingly it was held that notice is unnecessary, where the motion was made upon dismissal as to resident defendant while all parties were in court (Byrne's Adm'r v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. [1913] 151 Ky. 553, 152 S. W. 538; where copy of the petition for removal was furnished counsel of record in the state court before the same was filed and notice was satisfactory to that court, the court to which the case was removed held it to be a sufficient compliance, Chase v. Erhardt [D. C.] 198 Fed. 305); and if, as stated in Cropsey v. Sun Printing & Publishing Ass'n [D. C.] 215 Fed. 132, 'the main, if not the only, purpose of the statutory requirement as to notice is that the plaintiff be seasonably advised of the defendant's intention to remove the cause,' this was accomplished by submitting to their attorney the petition and bond, recognized by him as shown in the acceptance of service of the rule to show cause thereon endorsed. The formal notice, consisting of the petition and bond, and the rule fixing the time when the same would be taken up for action by the court, furnished the most substantial form of written notice to plaintiffs of the defendants' intention to remove the cause and constitutes, both in letter and spirit, compliance with the provisions of the act."

IV. PETITION FOR REMOVAL

13. Allegations of Fraudulent Joinder

a. In General (p. 293)

The right of a nonresident defendant to remove the cause cannot be defeated by the fraudulent joinder of a resident defendant; but the defendant seeking removal must allege facts which compel the conclusion that the joinder is fraudulent; merely to apply the term "fraudulent" to the joinder is not sufficient to require the state court to surrender its jurisdiction. Postal Tel.-Cable Co. v. Puckett, (Ga. App. 1919) 101 S. E. 397.

V. BOND FOR REMOVAL

1. Necessity of Bond (p. 318)

To same effect as original annotation, see Thomas v. Delta Land, etc., Co., (D. C. Nev. (1918) 258 Fed. 758, wherein it was said: "The filing of the bond, conditioned as provided, within the time fixed, is a condition precedent, and essential to the enjoyment of the right of removal.

"In preparing the petitions for removal and the bonds, defendant has ignored the provisions of section 29. This defect has not been waived. The only right of removal which defendant can claim is that conferred by the Judicial Code, and inasmuch as removal is purely a matter of grace, and the method by which defendant may avail itself thereof is provided by the statute, I am of the opinion that the method formulated in section 29 is exclusive, and that this court has no jurisdiction."

5. Condition (p. 319)

In In re Vadner, (D. C. Nev. 1918) 259 Fed. 614, the court said regarding the condition of a bond for removal: "The bond filed in the present case is conditioned, not to enter the record in the District Court to be held in the district where such suit is pending, but to enter it in the United States District Court for the District of Nevada. It also binds the petitioners to enter the record, not within 30 days after petition filed, but on the first day of the next session of this court. No condition of defendants' bond is broken by failure to enter the record within the time or in the court designated by statute.

"In Missouri, K. & T. Ry. v. Chappell (D. C.) 206 Fed. 688, 694, a bond similar to the one now under consideration, conditioned under the old law to file the record by the first day of the following term, was held insufficient to oust the jurisdiction of the state court. It was held that the suit as brought in the state court continued there, notwithstanding the attempted removal, because of the absence of a statutory bond; that in a proceeding to enter a default judgment the state court was acting within its powers, and that the federal court could not properly arrest by injunction the action of the parties in pursuing their remedies in the state court. The cause was remanded.

"In Webb v. Southern Ry. Co., 248 Fed. 618, 160 C. C. A. 518, a removal bond conditioned to file the record, either in the District Court for the district where the action was pending or in the District Court for another district, was held to be insufficient by the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit, and the judgment of the lower court holding to the contrary was reversed, with directions to remand the cause.

"I am aware there are a number of decisions which seem to establish a different rule. For example, Chase v. Erhardt (D. C.) 198 Fed. 305, and State Imp. Dev. Co. v. Leininger (D. C.) 226 Fed. 884. But in each of those cases the petition and a defective bond were presented to the state court. The bond was there approved, and an order of removal entered; but, inasmuch as the record had been filed in the proper federal court within the 30 days, the purpose of the undertaking had been accomplished before any objection was made, and as the moving party had asked permission to amend, or to file a new bond, jurisdiction was retained."

VII. PROCEEDINGS ON PETITION

7. Determination of Questions of Fact

b. Other Cases (p. 343)

Erroneous legal estimate of facts.—While the allegations in the petition to remove a cause from the state to the federal court are a part of the record and considered as true upon the hearing of the motion in the state courts, and all controverted facts are to be determined in the jurisdiction of the federal court, this does not apply when the real facts are not controverted, and there is a controversy raised only by an allegation in the petition based upon the petitioners' erroneous legal estimate of facts appearing in other portions of the record. Hill v. Director-General, (1919) 178 N. C. 607, 101 S. E. 376.

VIII. STATE COURT'S LOSS OF JURISDICTION

1. By Filing of Sufficient Petition and Bond (p. 356)

If a case be a removable one.—To same effect as original annotation, see Frazier v. Hines, (E. D. S. C. 1919) 260 Fed. 874, wherein it was said:

"The first question suggested is that this court will not consider any motion in the cause until an application has been made to the state court for an order to remove it to this court. Such has been, in a general way, the practice of this court, in removal cases, for many years. The general rule of law, however, is undoubtedly that if the case be a removable one, the mere filing of the bond and petition in the state court removes the case. Traction Co. v. Mining Co., 196 U. S. 239, 25 Sup. Ct. 251, 49 L. Ed. 462; Iowa Cent. Ry. v. Bacon, 236 U. S. 310, 35 Sup. Ct. 357, 59 L. Ed. 591.

"It is the duty of the state court to thereupon accept the petition and bond, and proceed no more in the cause. Whether, however, the state court accepts the petition and bond, or whether it grants or denies an order for removal, does not affect the fact of removal. The cause is removed, if it be a removable cause, although the state court may refuse to grant an order of removal. Donovan v. Wells Fargo & Co., 169 Fed. 363, 94 C. C. A. 609, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1250; Chesapeake & Ohio Ry. v. McCabe, 213 U. S. 207, 29 Sup. Ct. 420, 53 L. Ed. 765.

"Under such rule, the requirement of the submission of the matter to the state court for an order of removal before any action is taken by this court is a mere matter of comity or courtesy, and not a matter of right; and if the case presented is one in which some action should be taken, and in the opinion of this court it has been properly removed, it is the duty of this court to take action upon the application, whether the state court has granted or refused an order of removal, or whether or not any application for such an order has actually been made to it.

"Further, it is to be observed that the practice requiring application to the state court, and the decisions made thereunder, are very much affected by the requirement of the Judicial Code of 1911, § 29, which prescribes that written notice of the petition and bond for removal shall be given the adverse party or parties (not the state court) prior to filing the same. This written notice appears to have been given in the present cause, and under the terms of the statute it would not appear that any further notice or application to the state court is required, either as a matter of law or comity, but any proper action in the cause should be taken by this court, without regard to any action of the state court. Hansford v. Stone-Ordean-Wells Co. (D. C.) 201 Fed. 185; Cropsey v. Sun Printing & Publishing Ass'n (D. C.) 215 Fed. 132."

IX. JURISDICTION ACQUIRED BY FEDERAL COURT

3. By Filing Certified Copy of Record

a. Time to File, in General (p. 366)

In Lewis v. Erie R. Co., (M. D. Pa. 1919) 257 Fed. 868, regarding the time within which a certified copy of the record must be filed, it was said: "Plaintiffs' contention that certified copy of the record in this suit was not filed within 30 days from the date of the filing of the petitions in compliance with the requirements of the provisions of the act must also be denied. It is true that such certified record was not filed within 30 days from the filing of the petitions; however, the provisions requiring that certified copy of the record be filed within 30 days from the date of the filing of the petitions imply, no doubt, acceptance of such petitions and action thereon by the court, otherwise the clerk would be without authority to certify the record, if demanded by the removing parties. Petitions in this case, though filed early in December, were not accepted by the court ordering the removal until January 27th. The record having been filed in the United States court February 15th, following, was easily within the 30 days provided for filing."

b. Failure to File or Delay in Filing (p. 366)

Upon inexcusable laches.—To same effect as original annotation, see In re Vadner, (D. C. Nev. 1919) 259 Fed. 614, wherein the court said:

"Under section 29 of the Judicial Code, the record on removal should have been filed in this court on or before June 9, 1918. A portion of the record was filed here June 7th, but no bond on removal was filed in the state court until May 17th, seven days after the petitions were filed, and the bond then filed did not appear in this court until July 3d, 52 days after petitions filed. The final installment of the record was not forwarded to this court until September 20, 1918.

"If a proper bond and petition are filed in the state court within the time to answer, the jurisdiction of the lower court is divested; but in the event of delay beyond the 30 days in entering the record in the federal court, it is not improper to remand the cause, if no satisfactory explanation is presented. In this instance no excuse for the delay is offered."

I. IN GENERAL (p. 377)

Application generally.—In White v. Keown, (D. C. Mass. 1919) 261 Fed. 814, it was held that the provisions of this section have reference to a system of laws which impose restraint upon civil rights and equal protection, and that alleged discriminations and illegal acts, or even corrupt acts, not authorized by a state's system of laws, do not make a given case removable to federal courts of first instance, and that the remedy for wrongs of that character is to prosecute the case to the highest court of the state, with the right ultimately of prosecution by writ of error in the Supreme Court of the United States, a court of broader constitutional power.

Application for release on habeas corpus.—In Ex p. Beach, (S. D. Cal. 1919) 259 Fed. 956, it was held that this section was not decisive on a petition for habeas corpus to discharge a deputy collector of customs from custody under a warrant issued by a state court, charging him with felonious assault in the performance of his duty.

IV. PROCEDURE FOR REMOVAL

1. Time for Filing Petition (p. 384)

A petition for removal under this section is not too late if filed after the decision of the lower state court has been vacated by appeal and the entire controversy removed to the superior state court for retrial. In re Duane, (D. C. Mass. 1919) 261 Fed. 242, wherein it was said: "It is not controverted that the petitioner was an 'officer of the courts of the United States,' within the meaning of the Act. It has been several times decided, under language like this section, that a petition for removal was not too late if filed after a disagreement of the jury, or after a judgment had been rendered in the trial court, which had been vacated on appeal, and the case sent back for retrial. That is substantially the situation of the present controversy. There is at present no judgment or sentence outstanding against the petitioner. I therefore rule that the petition for certiorari is seasonably filed."

5. Certiorari (p. 385)

Procedure.—In re Duane, (D. C. Mass. 1919) 261 Fed. 242, the court, in discussing the procedure after the issuance of a writ of certiorari by the District Court to a state court, said:

"It seems to me that the best practice will be for this court, upon the filing of such a petition as is here presented, to the granting of which objection is seasonably made by the state authorities, to proceed to hear and determine the jurisdictional facts as far as necessary for the purpose of determining whether the case probably ought to be removed from the state court, unless the emergency appears so great that, in order to protect the petitioner's rights, the writ should issue at once. Which course should be pursued in a given case is, I think, a matter for the discretion of the court to which the application for certiorari is made."

"In the present case the petitioner is not in confinement and is suffering no hardship from delay. I will therefore hear the issues of fact presented by the answer of the state authorities, for the purpose of determining in a preliminary way whether the petitioner probably has a good case for removal. If that question be determined in his favor, the writ will thereupon issue, and the trial will take place in this court; if otherwise, the petition will be denied although without prejudice to the right to bring another, and the case left in the state court for trial."

I. DISMISSAL OF SUIT

3. Parties Improperly or Collusively Made or Joined

a. In General (p. 401)

The fact that the plaintiff, a partnership, has a controlling interest in one of the defendants, a corporation, does not justify a federal court in dismissing a suit on the ground of collusion. Toledo v. Toledo Rys., etc., Co., (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1919) 259 Fed. 450, 170 C. C. A. 426. The court said:

"If this constituted that collusion which is fatal to jurisdiction on the ground of citizenship, the court should not have entertained this bill nor any ancillary proceeding solely dependent thereon; but while it does indicate 'collusion,' in the vague sense in which that word is sometimes used, we think the law is clear that, unless there is something more, a District Court of the United States should entertain a case so presented.

"It is settled for this court (and we do not mean to intimate any doubt elsewhere), by our decision in City of Holland v. Holland Gas Co., Feb. 13, 1919, 257 Fed. 679, 168 C. C. A. 629, that there is, in such a case, no such merger of identity between the controlling stockholder and the controlled corporation as prevents the former from pursuing in good faith as a stranger could, any ordinary legal remedy against the latter; and so the question of collusion here becomes—save as to degree of proof and as to mere color—the same as if between strangers carrying out their common understanding. It is necessarily to be deduced from, if not expressly ruled in, Blair v. Chicago, 201 U. S. 400, 448, 26 Sup. Ct. 427, 50 L. Ed. 801; Chicago v. Mills, 204 U. S. 321, 330, 27 Sup. Ct. 286, 51 L. Ed. 504; Re Metropolitan Receivership, 208 U. S. 90, 110, 28 Sup. Ct. 219, 52 L. Ed. 403, and see opinion of Judge Lacombe (Pennsylvania Steel Co. et al. v. New York City Ry. Co. [C. C.] 157 Fed. 440, 444); and Wheeler v. Denver, 229 U. S. 342, 350, 33 Sup. Ct. 842, 57 L. Ed. 1219—that a nonresident plaintiff has an absolute right to pursue, in a federal court, all his remedies against a resident defendant, and it makes no difference what his motive may be in electing the federal remedy. He may do so expressly because he wishes to keep the litigation out of the state courts; that is his constitutional right. See also Cowles v. Mercer Co., 74 U. S. (7 Wall.) 118, 122, 19 L. Ed. 86. So, it is wholly immaterial whether the defendant, in acquiescing in the plans for a federal forum, is inspired by the same motives. If the consent of the defendant were important to the jurisdiction, that would be another question; but where the plaintiff's right to choose that forum is absolute and defendant's opposition cannot impair it, no more can defendant's consent do any harm."

II. GROUNDS FOR REMAND

2. Suit Not Within Original Federal Jurisdiction in the Particular District (p. 408)

Both plaintiff and defendant nonresidents.

—A suit commenced in a state court in which neither the plaintiff nor the defendant resides is not removable by the defendant to the District Court for the district in which he resides on the ground of diverse citizenship, and where, after such removal, objection to the jurisdiction of such District Court is made, the suit must be remanded to the state court. Fairview Fluorspar, etc., Co. v. Bethlehem Steel Co., (E. D. Pa. 1919) 258 Fed. 681, wherein it was said:

"The argument supporting the jurisdiction of this district is that by the twenty-eighth section of the Judicial Code diversity of citizenship confers the right of removal upon the defendant, if he be a nonresident of the state in which he is sued, provided only the cause be removed to a court in which he might have been sued in the first instance. There is here such diversity of citizenship; this defendant has been sued in the state of Missouri, of which defendant is a nonresident, and the suit might have been here brought. Why, then, may not the cause be removed to this court? The only answer to be made is that section 29 provides that the cause, if removed, must be removed to the court of the Missouri district, and this is open to the retort that as that court has no jurisdiction to give this effect to the twenty-ninth section is to deny the right of removal given by the twenty-eighth. The soundness of the proposition involved in the retort must be conceded and the result accepted. The acceptance of it has support in these (among other) considerations:

"1. There is no right of removal unless it is given by statute, and section 28 which gives, and section 29 which denies, may be read together as meaning in effect that there is no right of removal, unless the plaintiff be a resident of the state in which the suit is brought.

"2. The denial is consistent with the withholding of the right, unless the defendant be a nonresident of the state in which suit is brought.

"3. It is consistent with the conformity statutes.

"4. The ab inconvenienti argument supports it.

"5. It has support in that such a finding is in accord with the conclusions reached in a number of cases ruled by other District Courts."

A suit by an Idaho corporation against a railroad company, a Utah corporation, brought in an Idaho state court on claims growing out of an alleged violation of the Interstate Commerce Act (4 Fed. Stat. Ann. (2d ed.) 396), is not removable to the District Court for the district of Idaho, since under section 51 of the Judicial Code (5 Fed. Stat. Ann. (2d ed.) 486), the suit was not within the original jurisdiction of such court. Boise Commercial Club v. Oregon Short Line R. Co., (C. C. A. 9th Cir. (1919) 260 Fed. 769, 171 C. C. A. 495. In discussing the removability of such a suit, the court said:

"It is unnecessary to cite the numerous and conflicting decisions bearing upon the question of jurisdiction where the remand of an action like this is prayed for. In the later cases, such as Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Louisville & Nashville R. R. Co. (D. C.) 201 Fed. 932; Hohenberg & Co. v. Mobile Liners (D. C.) 245 Fed. 169, and James v. Amarillo Light & Power Co. (D. C.) 251 Fed. 337, the more important decisions are referred to and the differing views argued with special ability. In the two latter opinions Judge Ervin held that, where jurisdiction of the court is founded on the fact that the action is between citizens of different states and suit is brought in a state court of a state in which defendant is not a resident, there is a right of removal to the federal court of that district, which right cannot be contested by plaintiff on the ground that he could not have brought the suit in that federal court over the objection of plaintiff. The reasoning of the learned judge in James v. Amarillo Light & Power Co., supra, was that in Ex parte Wisner, 203 U. S. 449, 27 Sup. Ct. 150, 51 L. Ed. 264, the Supreme Court intended to hold that the District Court had no jurisdiction to try an action where neither party resided in the state of such court, and expressed the opinion that the provisions of section 51, limiting the bringing of the suit in the first instance, are limitations to bind the plaintiff, but are not binding upon the defendant. The court said:

"The provisions of section 51 expressly so state, and do not in any manner undertake to regulate or control or limit the right given by section 28 to defendant. If plaintiff, being a resident of one state, and defendant of another, bring his suit in a federal court of a third state, defendant can, by appearing generally, waive the objection as to venue, and such court has jurisdiction to try such suit. If therefore plaintiff brings his suit in a state court, defendant is given by section 28 the right to remove it to this same court, and it has just as much jurisdiction to try such case as if plaintiff had originally brought it there."

"Such was the view taken by the court in Rubber & Celluloid Harness Trimming Co. v. Whiting Adams Co. 210 Fed. 393, and Louisville & Nashville R. R. Co. v. Western Union Telegraph Co. (D. C.) 218 Fed. 91.

"There is much force in the view and we should be inclined to take a similar position were it not for the action of the Supreme Court (247 U. S. 505, 38 Sup. Ct. 427, 62 L. Ed. 1240) in denying certiorari applied for in Guaranty & Trust Company of New York v. McCabe et al., 250 Fed. 699, 168 C. C. A. 31. There the plaintiff was a New York corporation, with its principal place of business in the Southern district of New York, and the defendants were inhabitants of Charleston, in the Eastern district of South Carolina. The court considered the citizenship and residence of the members of the firm of Pell & Co., the assignors, and after stating that the plaintiff could have brought its action against the defendants in the United States District Court for the Eastern District of South Carolina, ruled that at no time could it have brought the action in the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York, because all the members of Pell & Co. were not residents of the Southern district of New York. Smith v. Lyon, 133 U. S. 315, 10 Sup. Ct. 303, 33 L. Ed. 635, and Interior Construction Co. v. Gibney, 160 U. S. 217, 16 Sup. Ct. 272, 40 L. Ed. 401, were cited in support of that proposition. The court quoted from Ex parte Wisner, supra, to the effect that, in order to make a suit removable under section 2 of the act of 1887-1888, it must be one which the plaintiff could have brought originally in the United States court to which it would be removed by original process, and regarded it as settled by the case of Ex parte Moore, 209 U. S. 490, 28 Sup. Ct. 706, 52 L. Ed. 904, 14 Ann. Cas. 1164, that in a case where jurisdiction depends upon diversity of citizenship the plaintiff, in case of removal, also has the right to insist upon or waive his objection to the jurisdiction because the district is not the proper district; that is, either the residence of plaintiff or of defendant. To the argument that Ex parte Moore, supra, had been overruled, the court replied by citing Ex parte Harding, 219 U. S. 363, 31 Sup. Ct. 324, 55 L. Ed. 252, 37 L. R. A. (N. S.) 392, as holding that the Supreme Court had disapproved of Ex parte Wisner only so far as that case had held that mandamus was a proper remedy, and argued that, if the Supreme Court had intended to go further, it would have said so. The court cited the classifications of section 51 of the Judicial Code and said:

"Where the parties are citizens of different states and the action is founded only on that fact, the statute clearly authorizes the bringing of the suit in one of two places, i. e., the residence of the plaintiff or the defendant, and, as held in Ex parte Moore, supra, when the suit is brought elsewhere, either plaintiff or defendant has the right to object to removal on the ground that such removal takes the cause to a district other than the residence of the plaintiff or defendant."

"Judge Learned Hand, in a dissenting opinion, took a contrary view; but, as already said, upon application for certiorari the Supreme Court denied the writ.

"We assume that ordinarily the denial of the writ of certiorari by the Supreme Court may not indicate the expression of an opinion in affirmance of the law of the case as applied by the Circuit Court of Appeals; but where there is a single question involved, and that question is entirely one of jurisdiction and there have been radically diverse decisions by the lower federal courts, the denial of the writ would fairly imply that the court was satisfied that the jurisdictional point had been rightly decided.

"Under the circumstances, therefore, it is proper that our decision should be against the view that there is jurisdiction in the present case."

A plaintiff, by bringing a suit in a state court in a district in which neither he nor the defendant resides, does not thereby waive his right to object to the removal of the case by the defendant to the District Court for such district, on the ground that the suit was not within the original jurisdiction of the federal court in that particular district. Isaac Kubie Co. v. Lehigh Valley R. Co., (D. C. N. J. 1919) 261 Fed. 806, wherein the court said regarding such a waiver:

"A plaintiff, in the first instance, has the right of choice between a state and a United States court to try a controversy of this character, but the defendant's right to remove is not a matter of choice. Having exercised their choice, and selected a state court, the plaintiffs in the instant case can be deprived or prevented from prosecuting the suit in the state court only if they have expressly or impliedly consented to this court taking jurisdiction. The defendant contends that the plaintiffs have impliedly consented; that is, that they have waived their right to object to the jurisdiction of this court. No general appearance has been entered by either of the plaintiffs, and no step taken by them here, except to move to remand the case to the state court, for which they appear specially. The sole contention of the defendant in this behalf is that by instituting a suit in the state court, over which some United States District Court could have taken cognizance if its jurisdiction had been invoked in the first instance, the plaintiffs have subjected themselves to the removal of the suit at the will of the defendant.

"Generally stated, one does not waive his right to object until he is confronted with the duty of objecting. In the case of waiving objections to a court's assuming jurisdiction over his person, he is not called upon to object until such jurisdiction is exercised. In removal proceedings the duty of objecting arises only after the proceedings have been taken. It is what he does after the proceedings have been removed that is pertinent upon the question whether he has waived his right to object, not what he did before. If the defendant's contention as to waiver were sound, many, perhaps the greater number, of the suits remanded should have been retained.

"The only case cited by defendant in support of its contention that the plaintiff waived its right to object to removal proceedings when it instituted the suit in the state court, is Barlow v. Chicago & N. W. Ry. Co. (C. C.) 164 Fed. 766, which so held. It is to be observed that in that case the court was dealing with a sole plaintiff, who was a nonresident alien, a situation which it considered sufficient to distinguish it from In re Wisner, supra, where all the parties were citizens. The doctrine enunciated in the Barlow Case has not met with general acceptance by the federal courts. The contrary has been expressly held in Mahopoulus v. Chicago, R. I. & P. Ry. Co. (C. C.) 167 Fed. 165; Sagara v. Chicago, R. I. & P. Ry. Co. (C. C.) 189 Fed. 220; Hall v. Great Northern Ry. Co. (D. C.) 197 Fed. 488; Ivanoff v. Mechanical Rubber Co. (D. C.) 232 Fed. 173; Jackson v. Wm. Kenefick Co. (D. C.) 233 Fed. 130."

See further on this subject annotations under sec. 28 (v, 2), supra, p. 606.

4. Collusive Joinder or Colorable Assignments (p. 411)

Joinder made in good faith.—"If plaintiff upon reasonable grounds in good faith believes that defendants are jointly liable to him, and properly makes it so appear on motion to remand, his joinder of defendants is not fraudulent, however the truth turns out to be, and remand will be granted." Zigich v. Tuolumne Copper Min. Co., (D. C. Mont. 1919) 260 Fed. 1014, holding, however, that the evidence did not show such a bona fide joinder.

III. WAIVER OR AMENDMENT OF DEFECTS

3. Amendment of Petition for Removal

a. In General (p. 417)

In Frazier v. Hines, (E. D. S. C. 1919) 260 Fed. 874, the plaintiff brought action under the Employers' Liability Act (8 Fed. Stat. Ann. (2d ed.) 1208) against the Director General of Railroads to recover damages for an alleged personal injury committed by the negligence of the employees of the defendant. The defendant filed his petition for removal of the action to the federal court on the ground of diversity of citizenship, and thereafter moved to amend the petition by inserting therein an allegation that the plaintiff was not an employee of the defendant at the time of the injury. In denying the motion the court said:

"The next question is whether an application of the character now made to amend the petition for removal should be granted. An inspection of the record shows that the amendment sought to the petition is a very substantial one. The theory of the amendment proposed is that the complaint in the state court is brought to obtain a recovery under the federal Employers' Liability Act (Act April 22, 1908, c. 149, 35 Stat. 65), and to obtain the benefit of that act; and the amendment now sought is one to introduce a new allegation of fact in the petition for removal filed in the state court to the effect that the party plaintiff was not an employee of the defendant and therefore not an employee within the terms of the federal statute, and as such not entitled to the benefit of that statute, and the cause of action being between citizens of different states, the action is not within the inhibition of that statute, which forbids the removal from the state court of actions brought under that statute.

"This would be an amendment of a substantial character, as interposing an allegation of fact denying an allegation in the complaint, which on the face it is apprehended will defeat a removal. The original petition for removal placed the ground for removal upon the sole fact that the plaintiff and defendant were citizens of different states. This amendment proposes to introduce an allegation of fact which is matter of defense on the merits, to wit, that the plaintiff was not an employee of the defendant, and therefore not entitled to claim the benefit of the federal Employers' Liability Act, and not being entitled to sue in that capacity, the cause could be removed.

"The rule as to amendments to petitions for removal is that these amendments may be permitted in this court to a petition filed for removal in the state court, where the amendment is one to cure technical defects or to amplify the allegations of the petition for removal; that is to say, where the amendment does not more than set forth in proper form what has been before imperfectly stated in the petition. Carson v. Dunham, 121 U. S. 421, 7 Sup. Ct. 1030, 30 L. Ed. 992; Kinney v. Columbia Savings & Loan Ass'n, 191 U. S. 78, 24 Sup. Ct. 30, 48 L. Ed. 103. The rule may be said to be summed up in the case of Southern Pacific Co. v. Stewart, 245 U. S. 359, 38 Sup. Ct. 130, 62 L. Ed. 345, that amendments have been permitted so as to make allegations of the removal petition more accurate and certain, when the amendment is intended to set forth in proper form the ground of removal already imperfectly stated. . . . But the issue of fact the proposed amendment seeks to import goes to the merits of the defense as well as to the right of removal. It would amount in effect to this court determining in advance of the trial on the merits before a jury that the plaintiff was not an employee of the defendant, and not entitled to the benefits of the federal Employers' Liability Act.

"The very question came up in the case of Southern Railway v. Lloyd, 239 U. S. 496, 36 L. Ed. 210, 60 L. Ed. 402. There the complaint was brought for a recovery under the federal Employers' Liability Act. The defendant sought to remove on the ground of diversity of citizenship, and to avoid the inhibition of the act against a removal alleged that the plaintiff was not engaged in interstate commerce at the time of the injury. The Supreme Court held the petition insufficient, for—

"In no case can the right of removal be established by a petition to remove, which amounts simply to a traverse of the facts alleged in the plaintiff's petition, and in that way undertaking to try the merits of a cause of action good upon its face.' Oesau, peake & Ohio Ry. v. Cockrell, 232 U. S. 146, 34 Sup. Ct. 278, 56 L. Ed. 544.

"The doctrine here laid down has been approved again in the case of Great Northern Ry. Co. v. Alexander, 246 U. S. 276, 38 Sup. Ct. 237, 62 L. Ed. 713, where it is held that it is settled:

"That a case arising under the laws of the United States, nonremovable on the complaint, when commenced, cannot be converted into a removable one by evidence of the defendant or by an order of court upon any issue tried upon the merits, but that such conversion can only be accomplished by the voluntary amendment of his pleadings by the plaintiff, or, where the case is not removable because of joinder of defendants, by the voluntary dismissal or nonsuit by him of a party or of parties defendant."

"With the exception mentioned in all these cases, that where there is a fraudulent purpose to defeat a removal, then upon proper allegations of fact showing that fraudulent purpose duly set forth in the petition, this court can entertain the decision of the issues involved on the question of a fraudulent purpose to defeat removal, and hold the cause removed, if such fraudulent purpose be established. No allegation is made in the petition for removal herein that there was any fraudulent purpose in any of the allegations of the complaint to defeat a removal to this court, and it follows that the application to amend the petition for removal should be and is hereby refused."

V. PROCEDURE FOR REMAND

7. Sufficiency of Motion (p. 433)

Affidavits submitted by a plaintiff in support of a motion to remand must set out facts showing the grounds of the motion, and not state mere conclusions. Zigich v. Tuolumne Copper Min. Co., (D. C. Mont, 1919) 260 Fed. 1014.

16. Costs on Remand (p. 436)

In Jones v. Delta Land, etc., Co., (D. C. Nev. 1918) 258 Fed. 761, it appeared that thirteen different plaintiffs instituted separate suits against a corporation of another state. The defendant removed the suits to a federal court. On motion to remand, it was held that each of the plaintiffs was entitled to costs. In passing upon the question, the court said:

"True, there has been but one argument covering all 13 cases; but there were 13 different plaintiffs, each of whom was put to expense and inconvenience, and each, under section 37 of the Judicial Code (Act March 3, 1911, c. 231, 36 Stat. 1098), is entitled to his costs. It is provided in that section that on remanding the cause the court shall make such order as to costs as shall be just. Here each plaintiff was represented by an attorney, who prepared and presented a motion to remand, and arranged to submit each motion to the court, and must attend to the re-entry of the cause in the state court. I am satisfied that the docket fee of $10 for such service is neither unreasonable nor unjust."

III. PROCEDURE AFTER REMOVAL

1. Status of Proceedings Had in State Court (p. 462)

Lack of precision in allegations.—Any lack of precision in some of the allegations of a complaint which fully meets the requirement of the local code is waived by failure to make timely objection after the case has been removed from a state to a federal court. Cole v. Ralph, 252 U. S. 286, 40 S. Ct. 321, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, reversing (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1918) 249 Fed. 81, 161 C. C. A. 133.

Vol. V, p. 467, Jud. Code, sec. 40.

Discretion of court.—This section does not confer upon a defendant an absolute right to a trial in the county where the offense was committed, but only a qualified right in cases where such a trial may be had "without great inconvenience." The District Court is vested with discretion in making this determination, and where the trial judge, after a hearing, determines that a trial cannot be had in the county where the offense was committed without great inconvenience, and no abuse of discretion is apparent, his finding will not be disturbed. Brown v. U. S., (C. C. A. 5th Cir. 1919) 257 Fed. 46, 168 C. C. A. 258.

Transfer of cause to another court.—This section does not contemplate a transfer of the cause to another court, but only a trial by the same court in the county where the offense was committed. Accordingly, an indictment for murder brought in the county where the offense was committed, may be dismissed and the defendant tried under an indictment brought in another county. Brown v. U. S., (C. C. A. 5th Cir. 1919) 257 Fed. 46, 168 C. C. A. 258.

II. PARTICULAR OFFENSES (p. 471)

False claim against United States.—Where a false claim for a reward for the apprehension of a deserter under the Selective Service Act (9 Fed. Stat. Ann. (2d ed.) 1136), is made in one district and transmitted to an officer in another district, the District Court in the former district has jurisdiction of the offense under this section. U. S. v. Downey, (D. C. R. I. 1919) 257 Fed. 366.

[First ed., 1912 Supp., p. 153.]

I. CONSTRUCTION AND SCOPE OF PROVISION

4. "Regular and Established Place of Business" (p. 478)

Factory and offices in different states.—A company which maintains in a certain state a large factory at which it employs some three thousand men and manufactures some of the product that it puts upon the market, has a "regular and established place of business" in such state within the meaning of this section, although its executive offices are situated in another state. McKinnon Chain Co. v. American Chain Co., (M. D. Pa. 1919) 259 Fed. 873.

II. CONSTRUCTION (p. 497)

Generally.—To same effect as fourth paragraph of original annotation, see Fairview Fluorspar, etc., Co. v. Bethlehem Steel Co., (E. D. Pa. 1919) 258 Fed. 681.

Venue of suit based on diversity of citizenship.—A civil suit, in which jurisdiction of the federal court is founded on diversity of citizenship of the parties, may be brought in the district in which the plaintiff resides only when the defendant is found there. Gutschalk v. Peck (N. D. Ohio 1919) 261 Fed. 212. Regarding the proviso of this section, concerning the venue of suits between citizens of different states, the court said:

"We hold that the language depended upon from section 51 of the Judicial Code is not in fact an attempt to enlarge, from previous legislation, the court's jurisdiction over the person of a nonresident defendant, but it is a limitation thereof. Previous to 1888, when section 51 became the law, jurisdiction of an individual was given to a federal court of first instance in this language (Act March 3, 1875, c. 137, § 1, 18 Stat. 470):

"No civil suit shall be brought before either of said courts against any person by any original process or proceeding in any other district than that whereof he is an inhabitant, or in which he shall be found at the time of serving such process or commencing such proceeding, except as herein-after provided."

"Comparing this language with that above quoted from the act of 1888 (Act Aug. 13, 1888, c. 866, § 1, 25 Stat. 433 [section 51, Judicial Code]), it will appear that the broad provision that a person might be proceeded against in a civil action in any district in which he might be found was repealed in the provision, in the new legislation, that 'no civil suit shall be brought in any District Court against any person by any original process of proceeding in any other district than that whereof he is an inhabitant;' . . . In writing this into section 51, Congress undoubtedly was protecting the individual against process wherever he might be. This language just quoted ends with a semicolon. The statute proceeds thereupon to a limitation of its effect to operate under certain circumstances, and so the statute says:

"But where the jurisdiction is founded only on the fact that the action is between citizens of different states, suit shall be brought only in the district of the residence of the plaintiff or the defendant."

"When we bear in mind that Congress is amending a statute which provided that the defendant might be sued in any district in which he is found, the meaning of this provision, it seems to us, is clear. By the old statute the plaintiff could begin an action in the district where he found the defendant, commanding for that purpose the power of the court to cause its own officers to summon the defendant, but this law, of course, compelled the plaintiff to go into the district in which he found his adversary to commence the action. The limitation in section 51 we are considering must, we think, be considered to be, pro tanto, a preservation, under the circumstance provided for, of the right accorded in the Act of 1875, and it should not be construed to give this court a kind of jurisdiction which was not provided for by the act of 1875.

"We are therefore of the opinion that the language in question means this, and nothing more than this: That a party may go into his adversary's district to sue him, or if he catches his adversary in plaintiff's own district, he may sue him there. To say that this language means that a party may go into the court of his own district, and command process to run out of that court, in an action of this general character, to a far-distant district where the adversary may be, is to plead for an innovation in the law which we cannot see that the language of the statute requires, and for one which is of so far-reaching a character, and so fraught with disadvantage to and possible invasion of the rights of a defendant, that it is inconceivable that Congress intended such a result. If such is the true meaning of this statute, then it follows that the processes of the court of the district of Maine are available in an action for money only to bring a sole defendant from the district of Alaska or Hawaii and force him to a defense under unconscionable conditions. Congress certainly meant to do no such thing."

V. APPLICABILITY

1. Generally (p. 497)

An injunction suit against the Comptroller of the Currency is not controlled by this section but by sections 24, cl. 16 (see vol. IV, p. 1054) and 49 (see vol. V, p. 482). Canton First Nat. Bank v. Williams, (1920) 252 U. S. 504, 40 S. Ct. 372, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, reversing (M. D. Pa. 1919) 260 Fed.

4. Corporations

b. Effect of Doing Business in State (p. 502)

To same effect as original annotation, see McNeely v. E. I. DuPont De Nemours Powder Co., (D. C. Del. 1920) 263 Fed. 252.

5. Action or Proceeding and Subject Matter (p. 506)

Admiralty suits.—Where there is concurrent jurisdiction between districts the plaintiff may select the district in which he can obtain security. Shamrock Towing Co. v. Manufacturers', etc., Lighterage Co., (E. D. N. Y. 1918) 262 Fed. 844. To same effect, see Cavanaugh v. Starbuck Towing Corp., (E. D. N. Y. 1919) 261 Fed. 656.

I. PURPOSE AND SCOPE (p. 521)

"Prosecution."—The term "prosecution" as used in this section means the proceedings which follow the finding and return of the indictment, and does not embrace the inquiry of the grand jury and the finding of the indictment. Biggerstaff v. U. S., (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1919) 260 Fed. 926, wherein it was said:

"While the inquisition of a grand jury is essential, it is preliminary, and not a part of the definite prosecution of any particular individual. It is in this restricted sense that the term is used in the statute, though in other relations it may have a broader meaning. As confirmatory of this it will be observed that the same section also authorizes the court or judge, upon the application of the defendant, to 'order the cause to be transferred for prosecution to another division of the district.' Doubtless the same meaning was intended in both connections. It is the cause which follows the indictment that is prosecuted."

Necessity of judge being within district when allowing appeal.—This section does not require a district judge in allowing an appeal or writ of error to be at the time of such allowance within the territory comprising the division of the court in which the decree or judgment to be reviewed was rendered. Wheeler v. Taft, (C. C. A. 5th Cir. 1920) 261 Fed. 978. Regarding this section, the court said:

"The defendant moved that the writ of error be dismissed. What is relied on to support that motion is the circumstance that, at the time of his allowance of the writ, the judge was not within the division of his district to which the case was removed from the state court. Attention is called to the provision of section 53 . . . that a removal of a suit from a state court shall be to the United States District Court in the division in which the county is situated from which the removal is made. It is contended that an effect of that requirement is to confine the action of the court in a suit at law to the territorial division in which the suit belongs.

"We do not think that anything in the provision referred to indicates a purpose to make the validity of the action of a district judge in allowing an appeal or writ of error dependent upon his being at the time of such allowance within the territory comprising the division of the court in which the decree or judgment to be reviewed was rendered. When the order is one which may be made at the chambers of the judge, it is not necessary that it be made within the territorial limits of the division in which the order is to be effective, if it is made where the judge at the time is performing the duties of his office, as the judge's chambers are considered to be where he is, and is authorized to be, engaged in performing his judicial duties. Ex parte Holtor Parker, 131 U. S. 221, 9 Sup. Ct. 708, 33 L. Ed. 123; Apgar v. United States, 255 Fed. 16, 166 C. C. A. 344.

"Even if the writ of error had been subject to be dismissed, as an appeal was sued out within the time allowed, the case would be in this court for review as a consequence of the provision of the Act of Congress of September 6, 1916, that:

"No court having power to review a judgment or decree rendered or passed by another shall dismiss a writ of error solely because an appeal should have been taken, or dismiss an appeal solely because a writ of error should have been sued out, but when such mistake or error occurs it shall disregard the same and take the action which would be appropriate if the proper appellate procedure had been followed."

Vol. V, p. 525, Jud. Code, sec. 57.

III. DIVERSITY OF CITIZENSHIP (p. 533)

Necessity of residence in district.—To the same effect as original annotation, see Howard v. Leete, (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1919) 257 Fed. 918, 169 C. C. A. 68, wherein the plaintiff, in a suit involving the right to rescind a purchase of real estate, denied jurisdiction of the District Court to render judgment against him upon a counterclaim on the ground that such court, sitting in the state where the property was situated, had no jurisdiction over him, since he was a citizen of another state and the defendants were citizens of a third state. Answering this contention, the court said:

"That the court had jurisdiction over the parties is equally plain. It is a mistake to say that this jurisdiction was acquired merely because the original action was local. Embracing, as it did, the right to rescind a purchase of real estate, the action was, even under the supplemental bill, a local action in a proper enough sense whether or not the second bill was rightly labeled 'supplemental.' But there was all the time diversity of citizenship of the parties, and appellant could not be allowed to question a jurisdiction he had himself invoked. His inability to get the counterclaim to the original bill of interpleader dismissed did not alter the situation. The difficulty was that by that time he wished other and wholly inconsistent relief. The fact that he was not a resident of Kentucky, thus making suit at law against him in that state difficult, if not impracticable, would have furnished additional reason for the exercise of complete jurisdiction in the equity suit. Cafilisch v. Humble (C. C. A. 6) 251 Fed. 1, 5, 163 C. C. A. 251. And see Springfield Co. v. Barnard Co., supra, 81 Fed. at pages 264 and 265, 26 C. C. A. 389."

II. JURISDICTION AND POWERS OF FEDERAL AND STATE COURTS

2. State Courts (p. 543)

Purchaser at receiver's sale is not entitled to intervene in a receivership proceeding for the trial of a claim against the property growing out of its management by the receiver, he having assumed such claims. The matter is within the jurisdiction of a state court. American Brake Shoe, etc., Co. v. Pere Marquette R. Co., (E. D. Mich. 1920) 263 Fed. 237. The court said:

"Petitioner, of course, under the circumstances of the present case, is liable or otherwise interested in this matter only because it has succeeded to the rights and obligations of the receivers heretofore appointed by this court, and now occupies their former position with respect to liabilities arising out of their acts in carrying on the business connected with their duties as such receivers; and the terms of the statute just quoted are now as fully applicable to said petitioner as they would have been to the receivers whom they have succeeded, if the latter had not been discharged, and they, instead of petitioner, had been sued in respect of the alleged negligence of their servants in the suit which is the subject of this controversy. This suit was properly brought in the state court, and the latter has full jurisdiction to determine all of the issues involved therein without interference by this court."

III. "Final decisions."

1. Necessity.
2. Definition and nature.
10. Injunction.
11. Intervention and interpleader.
17. Receivership proceedings.
18. Miscellaneous.

III. "FINAL DECISIONS"

1. Necessity (p. 611)

Where the record in a case does not show a judgment on the verdict in the court below, a writ of error will not lie to the Circuit Court of Appeals. U. S. v. Long Branch Distilling Co., (C. C. A. 5th Cir. 1920) 262 Fed. 768.

2. Definition and Nature (p. 611)

Generally.—To same effect as original annotation, see National Brake, etc., Co. v. Christensen, (C. C. A. 7th Cir. 1919) 258 Fed. 880, 169 C. C. A. 600.

10. Injunction (p. 614)

On an appeal from an interlocutory injunctive order the Circuit Court of Appeals has the right to dismiss the suit upon a proper showing. Bell, etc., Co. v. Bliss, (C. C. A. 7th Cir. 1919) 262 Fed. 131.

11. Intervention and Interpleader (p. 615)

An order of a federal District Court denying the application of a municipality to intervene in a suit by a gas company against the attorney general, the district attorney, and the state Public Service Commission, to enjoin the enforcement of state legislation fixing gas rates, is not of that final character which furnishes the basis for an appeal. New York v. Consolidated Gas Co., (1920) 253 U. S. 219, 40 S. Ct. 511, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, reversing (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1919) 260 Fed. 1022, 171 C. C. A. 669.

17. Receivership Proceedings (p. 616)

An order of a federal District Court which denied the application of a receiver of an insolvent corporation, appointed by a state chancery court, for an order turning over to him the assets of the corporation in the possession of a receiver previously appointed by the federal court, is a final decision within the meaning of the Judicial Code, § 128, governing the appellate review in the Circuit Court of Appeals of final decisions of the District Court. Ex p. Tiffany, (1920) 252 U. S. 32, 40 St. Ct. 239, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, wherein the court said:

"By the Judicial Code, § 128, the circuit court of appeals is given appellate jurisdiction to review, by appeal or writ of error, final decisions in the district courts, with certain exceptions not necessary to be considered. It is clear that the order made in the district court, refusing to turn over the property to the chancery receiver, was a final decision within the meaning of the section of the Judicial Code to which we have referred, and from which the chancery receiver had the right to appeal to the circuit court of appeals. By the order the right of the state receiver to possess and administer the property of the corporation was finally denied. The words, 'final decision in the district court,' mean the same thing as 'final judgments and decrees,' as used in former acts regulating appellate jurisdiction. Loveland, Appellate Jurisdiction of Federal Courts, § 39. This conclusion is amply sustained by the decisions of this court. Savannah v. Jesup, 106 U. S. 563, 27 L. ed. 276, 1 Sup. Ct. Rep. 512; Gumbel v. Pitkin, 113 U. S. 545, 28 L. ed. 1128, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 616; Krippendorf v. Hyde, 110 U. S. 276, 287, 28 L. ed. 145, 149, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 27. See also a well-considered case in the circuit court of appeals, ninth circuit, Dexter Horton Nat. Bank v. Hawkins, 111 C. C. A. 514, 190 Fed. 924."

18. Miscellaneous (p. 616)

Order setting aside verdict.—The Circuit Court of Appeals has no jurisdiction to review an order of a district judge setting aside a verdict, since such an order is not final. Dry Dock, etc., R. Co. v. Petkunas, (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1919) 261 Fed. 988.

Order denying petition for return of seized books and papers.—An order of a District Court denying the petition of a company, which is a defendant in a criminal prosecution, for a return of its books, papers and memoranda impounded by an ex parte order of the District Court, so that they might be used by the government in the trial of indictments pending against the company, is interlocutory and not reviewable on a writ of error by the Circuit Court of Appeals. Coastwise Lumber, etc., Co. v. U. S., (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1919) 259 Fed. 847, 170 C. C. A. 647. The court said: "In the case of Wise v. Mills, 220 U. S. 549, 31 Sup. Ct. 597, 55

L. Ed. 579, the District Court entered an order committing the United States attorney for contempt, because of his refusal to obey its order to return books and papers of the defendant in a criminal action seized without a warrant. Upon his writ of error the Supreme Court held that the order committing for contempt was final as to the United States attorney because, he not being a party to the criminal action, nothing more remained to be done as far as he was concerned, while it held the order to return the defendant's books and papers was interlocutory.

"When one not a party to the action has been committed for contempt, the order is final and appealable as to him (Nelson v. United States, 201 U. S. 92, 26 Sup. Ct. 358, 50 L. Ed. 673; Alexander v. United States, 201 U. S. 117, 26 Sup. Ct. 358, 50 L. Ed. 686); and when there is no action pending a demand for a return of books and papers seized is of course an independent special proceeding (Perlman v. United States, 247 U. S. 12, 38 Sup. Ct. 417, 62 L. Ed. 950; Veeder v. United States, 252 Fed. 414, 164 C. C. A. 338).

"Because it is not before us, we express no opinion upon the question whether this wholesale seizure of the Coastwise Company's books and papers was an infringement of its rights under the Fourth and Fifth Amendments of the Constitution of the United States, but, because the order before us is interlocutory, the writ of error is dismissed without prejudice."

Denial of motion to vacate order of commitment for contempt.—An order denying a motion to vacate an order of commitment for contempt is not final, and hence not subject to review under this section. Gill v. U. S., (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1919) 262 Fed. 502, wherein the court said:

"Judicial Code, § 128 gives appellate jurisdiction only when decisions of the district courts are final; and the only final decision in this matter was the original order of commitment. The decision of the court denying the motion to vacate is one which may be renewed at any time, and is not final. Therefore it is not subject to review upon writ of error."

V. Injunction.

4. "Refusing, dissolving, or refusing to dissolve."

XII. Scope of review.

V. INJUNCTION

4. "Refusing, dissolving, or refusing to dissolve" (p. 634)

Refusing to dissolve.—To same effect as original annotation, see Mississippi Valley Trust Co. v. Railway Steel Spring Co., (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1919) 259 Fed. 346, 169 C. C. A. 362.

XII. SCOPE OF REVIEW (p. 639)

Appeal from an order granting, etc., injunction.—A Circuit Court of Appeals, on appeal from an order of a District Court which had granted a preliminary injunction in entire reliance upon a decree of another District Court, properly takes notice of and considers the changed circumstances arising out of the subsequent reversal of such decree. Meccano v. Wanamaker, (1920) 253 U. S. 136, 40 S. Ct. 463, 64 U. S. (L. ed. —, affirming (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1918) 250 Fed. 450, 162 C. C. A. 520, which reversed (S. D. N. Y. 1917) 241 Fed. 133.

Whether a preliminary injunction shall be awarded rests in the sound discretion of the trial court, and on appeal an order granting or denying such an injunction will not be disturbed unless contrary to some rule of equity, or the result of improvident exercise of judicial discretion. Meccano v. Wanamaker, (1920) 253 U. S. 136, 40 S. Ct. 463, 64 U. S. (L. ed. —, affirming (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1918) 250 Fed. 450, 162 C. C. A. 520, which reversed (S. D. N. Y. 1917) 241 Fed. 133.

Dismissal of bill for injunction.—The power of Circuit Courts of Appeals under this section to review preliminary orders granting injunctions, is not limited to the mere consideration of, and action upon, the order appealed from, but, if insuperable objection to maintaining the bill clearly appears, it may be dismissed and the litigation terminated. Meccano v. Wanamaker, (1920) 253 U. S. 136, 40 S. Ct. 463, 64 U. S. (L. ed. —, affirming (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1918) 250 Fed. 450, 162 C. C. A. 520, which reversed (S. D. N. Y. 1917) 241 Fed. 133) which held however that a final decree upon the merits may not be entered by a Circuit Court of Appeals on grounds of estoppel by judgment upon an appeal from an order granting a preliminary injunction.

"This appellate court, on an appeal from an order granting or denying an injunction, may decide the case upon the merits, and direct a dismissal of the suit, if it is of the opinion that the plaintiff was not entitled to an injunction because his bill had no equity to support it. Smith v. Vulcan Iron Works, 165 U. S. 518, 17 Sup. Ct. 407, 41 L. Ed. 810. This court is not confined in its review of the injunction order to the justice of the denial of the temporary injunction, but it may consider the sufficiency of the defense interposed. Linde Air Products Co. v. Morse Dry Dock Co., 246 Fed. 834, 159 C. C. A. 136." Victor Talking Mach. Co. v. Starr Piano Co., (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1920) 263 Fed. 82.

Disclaimer as to patent in suit for infringement of patent and copyright, and for unfair competition.—Petitioner in a suit for infringement of a patent, for unfair competition, and for the infringement of a copyright, may not file a disclaimer as to the patent upon certiorari to a Circuit Court of Appeals to review a decree which reversed an order of the trial court granting a preliminary injunction. Meccano v. Wanamaker, (1920) 253 U. S. 136, 40 S. Ct. 463, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1918) 250 Fed. 450, 162 C. C. A. 520, which reversed (S. D. N. Y. 1917) 241 Fed. 133.

II. JURISDICTION

7. Claims Sounding in Tort (p. 657)

A suit to recover from the United States the losses incurred by a public contractor because of the misrepresentations by the government as to the character of the materials to be encountered cannot be said to be one sounding in tort, and hence not tenable against the United States, where there is no intimation of bad faith against the officers of the government, and the Court of Claims regarded the representation as in the nature of a warranty, and there was nothing punitive in its judgment, it being simply compensatory of the cost of the work of which the government received the benefit. U. S. v. Atlantic Dredging Co., 253 U. S. 1, 40 S. Ct. 423, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (1918) 53 Ct. Cl. 490.

Vol. V, p. 667, Jud. Code, sec. 153. [First ed., 1912 Supp., p. 203.]

Subsidies in Spanish concession for operation of cables in Philippine Islands.—No contract, express or implied, on the part of the United States, justiciable in the Court of Claims, to pay the annual subsidies provided for in a Spanish concession for the construction and operation of submarine cables in the Philippine Islands, can be deducted from the use of such cables by the United States government at the reduced rate prescribed in such concession for official despatches, where this was the full rate demanded by the cable company, nor from the acceptance by subordinate officials of the Philippine government of the tax on receipts from messages computed as required by such concession, nor from a statement of account showing a balance favorable to the United States which was paid to and accepted by the treasurer of the Philippine government, which statement was prepared without suggestion of demand from the government of the United States, or even from the Philippine government, and in which, in order to give it the form of an account, the company was obliged to treat as unpaid, charges for tolls over the Hong-kong-Manila cable, all of which had been paid by the United States government and accepted by the company. Eastern Extension, etc., Co. v. U. S., (1920) 251 U. S. 355, 40 S. Ct. 168, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —.

IV. COMPUTATION OF TIME (p. 670)

Taking property for army post.—The taking of a placer mining claim as part of a site for an army post must, for the purpose of applying the statute of limitations to a suit against the government for compensation, be deemed to have been on the date of the approval or ratification by the Secretary of War of the unauthorized action of a military commander in taking possession, and not on the date of the latter's action, in view of the fact that the Secretary of War alone possessed the requisite authorization from Congress to determine whether the army post should be established and what land should be taken therefor, and the Secretary's action was none the less a taking of the mining claim because the President, when reserving the tract from sale and setting it aside for military purposes, had done so "subject to any legal rights which may exist to any land within its limits." U. S. v. North American Transp., etc., Co., (1920) 253 U. S. 330, 40 S. Ct. 518, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (1918) 53 Ct. Cl. 424.

Vol. V, p. 673, Jud. Code, sec. 162. [First ed., 1912 Supp., p. 205.]

Inquiry into ownership.—In determining the jurisdictional question of ownership, in cases brought under the provisions of this section, the validity of a sale of cotton to the Confederate states by the tutor of infant owners residing in Louisiana, may be inquired into by this court, even though the property at time of seizure by the federal government were in the possession of the purchaser. Walker v. U. S., (1919) 54 Ct. Cl. 48.

Vol. V, p. 680, Jud. Code, sec. 177. [First ed., 1912 Supp., p. 208.]

Condemnation proceedings.—The compensation recoverable in the Court of Claims for the taking by the government of private property in Alaska for a public use is the value of the property as of the date of the taking. It cannot include any amount for use and occupation between the time of the taking and the entry of judgment, where, except for an allegation in the petition that the United States is indebted in a specified amount for use and occupation, there was no request in the Court of Claims of any kind in respect to such allowance, and that court did not mention the subject in its opinion, and it is not referred to in the application for an appeal, since, if it is interest that the owner seeks, its allowance is forbidden by this section, and, if it is not interest, the facts found fail to supply the basis on which any claim in addition to that for the value of the property should rest. U. S. v. North American Transp., etc., Co., (1920)

253 U. S. 330, 40 S. Ct. 518, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (1918) 53 Ct. Cl. 424.

In U. S. v. Rogers, (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1919) 257 Fed. 397, 168 C. C. A. 437, it was held that interest might be awarded against the United States in a condemnation proceeding from the date of the taking. The court said:

"In the rule of immunity of the government from liability for interest, the term 'interest' is generally used as meaning compensation for the use or forbearance of money, or damages for its detention. But the position of the government in the case at bar is not like that which it occupies when a claim or demand on contract is asserted against it. True, it is said that, when the government takes possession of private property for public use in advance of formal proceedings in eminent domain, the right of the acquiescing owner arises ex contractu (United States v. Great Falls Mfg. Co., 112 U. S. 645, 5 Sup. Ct. 306, 28 L. Ed. 846); but that is by way of implication that compensation is intended by the government, instead of a trespass for which the landowner has no enforceable remedy. The duty and obligation to make just compensation in such a case is fundamental, and whatever is an essential element in that compensation cannot be excluded, even by legislative enactment. The question of compensation is a judicial one."

Indian claims.—The provision of this section against the allowance of interest upon any claim against the United States up to the time of the rendition of judgment thereon by the Court of Claims unless upon a contract expressly stipulating for the payment of interest, is applicable to the unpaid consideration due to Indians under a treaty which made a present cession of their lands to the United States for a consideration to be paid thereafter, with no mention made of interest. U. S. v. Omaha Tribe of Indians, (1920) 253 U. S. 275, 40 S. Ct. 522, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming in part and reversing in part (1918) 53 Ct. Cl. 549.

Interest was allowed in U. S. v. Rogers, (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1919) 257 Fed. 397, 168 C. C. A. 437; U. S. v. Highamith, (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1919) 257 Fed. 401, 168 C. C. A. 441.

A writ of certiorari to the Court of Customs Appeals was granted in U. S. v. Aetna Explosives Co., (1920) 253 U. S. 481, 40 S. Ct. 483, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —.

Assignments of error.—An appellee in Court of Customs Appeals must confine himself to supporting the decision of the Board of United States General Appraisers. U. S.

v. Coroners Bros., (1919) 9 U. S. Cust. App. 220.

Burden of proof.—A protestant must show not only the incorrectness of the classification protested against but also the correctness of the one claimed. Where the merchandise is dutiable neither as classified nor claimed, the protestant has not sustained this burden of proof, and must fail. U. S. v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., (1918) 9 U. S. Cust. App. 33.

A finding by the appraiser and collector that the value of a carton is part of the value of a handkerchief contained in it and not a packing charge, puts upon one claiming the contrary the burden of proof. U. S. v. Rappolt, (1918) 9 U. S. Cust. App. 21.

Conclusiveness of findings.—The finding of the Board of United States General Appraisers upon a question of fact is entitled to controlling weight in the absence of satisfactory evidence to the contrary. U. S. v. Mutual China Co., (1919) 9 U. S. Cust. App. 232.

And with the testimony in conflict, the Board of General Appraisers' finding of fact should control. Seward v. U. S., (1918) 9 U. S. Cust. App. 4.

- II. State a party.
 4. State against state.
 8. Citizen against state.

I. SCOPE AND CONSTRUCTION (p. 709)

Citizen against United States officers.—The Supreme Court may not entertain original jurisdiction of a suit brought by a citizen of a state against officers of the United States. Duhne v. New Jersey, (1920) 251 U. S. 311, 40 St. Ct. 154, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —.

II. STATE A PARTY

4. State Against State (p. 710)

Consolidation of controversies between states.—In Pennsylvania v. West Virginia, (1920) 252 U. S. 563, 40 S. Ct. 357, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, controversies between states were consolidated and a commissioner appointed, with the power of a master in chancery, to take and return the testimony.

Intervention by United States.—In a suit between states the motion of the United States for leave to intervene therein for an injunction and the appointment of a receiver was granted. Oklahoma v. Texas, (1920) 252 U. S. 372, 40 S. Ct. 353, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —.

8. Citizen Against State (p. 715)

The judicial power granted by the Constitution to the United States does not embrace the authority to entertain a suit brought by a citizen against his own state, without its consent. Duhne v. New Jersey, (1920) 251 U. S. 311, 40 S. Ct. 154, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —.

Vol. V, p. 717, Jud. Code, sec. 234.

Error in order for appointment of auditor as ground for issuance of mandamus or prohibition.—Error in providing, in an order for the appointment of an auditor in an action at law, that the expense be paid by one or both of the parties, in accordance with the discretion of the trial court, does not require that the extraordinary remedies of mandamus or prohibition be granted, but, if petitioner deems himself prejudiced by the error, he may seek redress through application to the District Court for a modification of the order, or, after final judgment, by writ of error from the Circuit Court of Appeals. Ex p. Peterson, (1920) 253 U. S. 300, 40 S. Ct. 543, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —.

Mandamus or prohibition to District Court judge where constitutional right to trial by jury involved.—The Supreme Court has jurisdiction of a petition for writs of mandamus or prohibition directed to a District Court judge, by which relief is sought against the appointment of an auditor to make a preliminary investigation as to the facts, hear the evidence, and report his findings, with a view to simplifying the issues for the jury, where the petitioner asserts that, by the appointment of such auditor and proceedings thereunder, his constitutional right to trial by jury would be violated. Ex p. Peterson, (1920) 253 U. S. 300, 40 S. Ct. 543, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —.

II. GENERAL CONSIDERATIONS AFFECTING REVIEW OF JUDGMENTS OF STATE COURTS

1. Statutory Limitation on Authority to Review (p. 725)

Assignments of error which involve no federal question cannot be reviewed by the Supreme Court of the United States. Kinzell v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., (Idaho, 1920) 190 Pac. 255.

V. "HIGHEST COURT OF A STATE (p. 730)

"Highest" court.—In general.—A judgment of a Missouri Court of Appeals which reversed the judgment below after the state Supreme Court had, on certiorari, quashed a prior judgment of affirmance in the Court of Appeals, and had remanded the cause to that court for decision, is a judgment of the highest state court for purposes of a writ of error from the federal Supreme Court. Mergenthaler Linotype Co. v. Davis, (1920) 251 U. S. 256, 40 S. Ct. 133, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, dismissing writ of error to review State v. Robertson, (1917) 271 Mo. 475, 196 S. W. 1132.

A judgment of a California District Court of Appeal refusing certiorari to an inferior court is the judgment of the state court of last resort having power to consider the case so far as the appellate jurisdiction of the federal Supreme Court is concerned, where such appellate court assumed jurisdiction of the cause, and the Supreme Court of the state refused, for want of jurisdiction, to review the judgment, although the District Court of Appeal may have erred in assuming jurisdiction, since this is purely a question of state law. Pacific Gas, etc., Co. v. Police Ct., (1919) 251 U. S. 22, 40 S. Ct. 79, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming on other grounds (1915) 28 Cal. App. 412, 152 Pac. 928.

Jurisdiction of a writ of error from the federal Supreme Court to the Pennsylvania Superior Court to review a judgment which sustained, on the supposed authority of a decision of the state Supreme Court, an order of the state Public Service Commission challenged as repugnant to the Federal Constitution, is not excluded on the theory that the refusal of the state Supreme Court to permit an appeal must have been upon the ground that the commission was a purely administrative body; that it had no judicial power to declare the statute under which it acted unconstitutional; and that therefore no question of the constitutionality of the statute was before the Superior Court, inasmuch as an appeal to the state Supreme Court was a matter of right if the case had involved such a question, since whatever powers a state may deny to its commissions, it may not give them power to do what the laws of the United States forbid, whether they call their action administrative or judicial, and the Superior Court treated the question as open. The state Supreme Court must be regarded as having merely denied an appeal upon a point that possibly was thought to have been decided already by that court. Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Public Service Commission, (1919) 250 U. S. 566, 40 S. Ct. 36, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, reversing (1917) 67 Pa. Super. Ct. 575.

VI. QUESTIONS REVIEWABLE BY SUPREME COURT

1. Federal Questions

a. Necessity (p. 733)

The general rule.—Non-federal grounds put forward by the highest state court as the basis for its decision, but which are plainly untenable, cannot serve to bring the case within the rule that the federal Supreme Court will not review the judgment of a state court where the latter has decided the case upon an independent ground not within the federal objections taken, and that ground is sufficient to sustain the judgment. Ward v. Love County, (1920) 253 U. S. 17, 40 St. Ct. 419, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, reversing (1918) 68 Okla. —, 173 Pac. 1050, followed in Broadwell v. Carter County, (1920) 253 U. S. 25, 40 S. Ct. 422, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, reversing (1918) 71 Okla. —, 175 Pac. 828.

3. Local and General Law (p. 742)

Assessments.—A judgment of the highest court of a state which, by affirming, without more, a judgment of the trial court directing a reassessment against the property itself instead of against a street railway company of the share of the expense of a pavement properly apportioned to a central strip in a highway owned in fee by the street railway company, leaves in serious doubt the right of the company to a new and adequate hearing in respect of the assessment, will be so modified and corrected by the federal Supreme Court on writ of error as definitely to preserve such right. Oklahoma R. Co. v. Severns Pav. Co., (1919) 251 U. S. 104, 40 S. Ct. 73, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, modifying and affirming (Okla. 1918) 170 Pac. 216.

8. Presumptions (p. 750)

Taxing power of state in question.—When the constituted authority of the state undertakes to exert the taxing power, and the validity of its action is brought before the federal Supreme Court, every presumption in its favor is indulged, and only clear and demonstrated usurpation of power will authorize judicial interference with legislative action. Green v. Frazier, (1920) 253 U. S. 233, 40 S. Ct. 499, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, (affirming) (N. D. 1920) 176 N. W. 11), wherein it was held that judicial interference with state tax legislation, the purpose of which has been declared by the people of the state, the legislature, and the highest state court to be of a public nature and within the taxing power of the state, cannot be justified unless it is clear beyond reasonable controversy that rights secured by the Federal Constitution have been violated.

IX. VALIDITY OF STATUTE OF, OR AUTHORITY EXERCISED UNDER, STATE "DRAWN IN QUESTION"

1. "Statute of State" (p. 752)

Following construction of state statute.—The federal Supreme Court, when dealing with the constitutionality of state statutes challenged under U. S. Const., 14th Amend., accepts the meaning of such statutes as construed by the highest court of the state. Farncomb v. Denver, (1920) 252 U. S. 7, 40 S. Ct. 271, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (1918) 64 Colo. 13, 171 Pac. 66.

X. "REPUGNANT TO CONSTITUTION, TREATIES OR LAWS OF UNITED STATES"

2. Validity of State Constitution or Laws Drawn in Question (p. 753)

To the same effect as the original annotation see Green v. Frazier, (1920) 253 U. S. 233, 40 S. Ct. 499, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —.

3. Proper Construction of State Law Drawn in Question (p. 753)

Whether a state statute did or did not validate a contract theretofore unenforceable is a question for the state courts to decide, and their decision is not subject to review in the federal Supreme Court. Munday v. Wisconsin Trust Co., (1920) 252 U. S. 499, 40 S. Ct. 365, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (1918) 168 Wis. 31, 168 N. W. 393, 169 N. W. 612.

5. Impairment of or Giving Effect to Contract (p. 756)

Questions determined by court.—"When this court is called upon to decide whether state legislation impairs the obligation of a contract, it must determine for itself whether there is a contract, and what its obligation is, as well as whether the obligation has been impaired. Detroit United Railway v. Detroit, 242 U. S. 238, 249, 37 Sup. Ct. 87, 61 L. Ed. 268. But, as stated in Southern Wisconsin Railway v. Madison, 240 U. S. 457, 461, 36 Sup. Ct. 400, 401 (60 L. Ed. 739):

"The mere fact that without the state decision we might have hesitated is not enough to lead us to overrule that decision upon a fairly doubtful point." Milwaukee Electric R., etc., Co. v. Milwaukee, (1920) 252 U. S. 100, 40 S. Ct. 306, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming on other grounds (1917) 166 Wis. 163, 164 N. W. 844.

XVII. RECORD

1. In General (p. 790)

The claim in the state trial court that a ruling was contrary to U. S. Const., 14th Amend., affords no basis for a writ of error from the federal Supreme Court, where no such contention was made in the assignment of errors in the highest court of the state, nor was it, so far as appears by the record, otherwise presented to or passed upon by that court. Hiawasse River Power Co. v. Carolina-Tennessee Power Co., (1920) 252 U. S. 341, 40 S. Ct. 330, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, (dismissing writ of error to review (1918) 175 N. C. 668, 96 S. E. 99) wherein the court said:

"If a general statement that the ruling of the state court was against the 14th Amendment were a sufficient specification of the claim of a right under the Constitution to give this court jurisdiction (see Clarke v. McDade, 165 U. S. 168, 172, 41 L. ed. 673, 674, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 284; Capital City Dairy Co. v. Ohio, 183 U. S. 238, 248, 46 L. ed. 171, 176, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 120; Marvin v. Trout 199 U. S. 212, 217, 224, 50 L. ed. 157, 159, 161, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 31), still the basis for a review by this court is wholly lacking here. For the 14th Amendment was mentioned only in the trial court. In the supreme court of the state no mention was made of it in the assignment of errors; nor was it, so far as appears by the record, otherwise presented to or passed upon by that court. The denial of the claim was specifically set forth in the petition for the writ of error to this court and in the assignment of errors filed here. But obviously that was too late. Chicago, I. & L. R. Co. v. McGuire, 196 U. S. 128, 132, 49 L. ed. 413, 417, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 200. The omission to set it up properly in the supreme court of the state was not cured by the allowance of the writ of error by its chief justice. Appleby v. Buffalo, 221 U. S. 524, 529, 55 L. ed. 838, 840, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 699; Hulbert v. Chicago, 202 U. S. 275, 280, 50 L. ed. 1026, 1028, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 617; Marvin v. Trout, 199 U. S. 212, 223, 50 L. ed. 157, 161, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 31.

"We have no occasion, therefore, to consider whether the claim of denial of rights under the 14th Amendment was substantial in character which is required to support a writ of error. Equitable Life Assur. Soc. v. Brown, 187 U. S. 308, 311, 47 L. ed. 190, 192, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 123. Compare Hendersonville Light & P. Co. v. Blue Ridge Interurban R. Co., 243 U. S. 563, 61 L. ed. 900, 37 Sup. Ct. Rep. 440."

See notes to 1918 Supp., p. 411, sec. 2 (Act Sept. 6, 1916), infra, this Supplement, p. 657.

Scope of review.—"When a writ of certiorari is issued to the highest court of a state, the Supreme Court of the United States is not concerned with, nor does it have jurisdiction to dispose of, the merits, except in so far as they relate to the federal question upon which its jurisdiction depends." Kinzell v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., (Idaho 1920) 190 Pac. 255, distinguishing review under this section from review on certiorari directed to the Circuit Court of Appeals under Judicial Code section 240, 6 Fed. Stat. Ann. (2d ed.) 854.

I. SCOPE OF STATUTE AND GENERAL MATTERS

1. In General (p. 797)

Jurisdiction of a direct writ of error from the federal Supreme Court to a District Court once having attached because of the presence of constitutional questions continues, although such questions have since been decided in other cases to be without merit, for the purpose of disposing of other questions raised in the record. Pierre v. U. S., (1920) 252 U. S. 239, 40 S. Ct. 205, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —.

8. Frivolous Grounds and Moot Questions (p. 799)

The contention, by the owner of a non-exclusive franchise to use the streets of a town for the distribution of electric current, that competition in business likely to result from a similar grant to another corporation would be a violation of its own contract, or a taking of its property in violation of the Federal Constitution, is too plainly frivolous to serve as the basis of an appeal to the Supreme Court from a decree of a District Court dismissing a suit for injunctive relief. Piedmont Power, etc., Co. v. Graham, (1920) 253 U. S. 193, 40 S. Ct. 453, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —.

III. FINAL JUDGMENTS (p. 800)

Admiralty suit.—A decree of a federal District Court dismissing for lack of jurisdiction the petition of the defendant vessel owner in an admiralty suit to bring in as a party defendant a corporation which it is asserted would be liable as an indemnitor if the liability of the vessel should be established lacks the finality essential to support an appeal. Oneida Nav. Corp. v. Job, (1920) 252 U. S. 521, 40 S. Ct. 357, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —.

Judgment on habeas corpus based on three separate affidavits.—A single judgment upon a petition for a writ of habeas corpus setting forth a detention of the relator in extradition proceedings on three separate affidavits is not reviewable on appeal, where such judgment, though directing that the writ be denied as to the commitment on one of these affidavits, also declared that the writs of habeas corpus are granted as to the commitments on the other two affidavits, and ordered that the case be remanded for further hearing, since only one branch of the case having been finally disposed of below, none of it is reviewable. Collins v. Miller, (1920) 252 U. S. 364, 40 S. Ct. 347, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —.

Effect of failure of either party to raise question of finality of judgment.—The fundamental question whether the judgment appealed from is a final one must be answered, although not raised by either party. Collins v. Miller, (1920) 252 U. S. 364, 40 S. Ct. 347, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —.

IV. "JURISDICTION OF COURT IN ISSUE"

1. In General (p. 801)

To same effect as original annotation, see Shapley v. Cohoon, (C. C. A. 1st Cir. 1920) 263 Fed. 893.

Appeals which must go directly to the Supreme Court are those wherein the jurisdiction of the District Court as a federal court is involved. An objection to the jurisdiction of a bankruptcy court over certain property is not within the act. In re Amy, (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1920) 263 Fed. 8.

Decision of other questions.—That other questions which were incidentally involved in the main question of jurisdiction were also decided does not permit an appeal to the Circuit Court of Appeals. Nickels v. Pullman Co., (C. C. A. 4th Cir. 1919) 263 Fed. 551.

2. Separate Appeals and Right of Election Between Supreme Court and Circuit Court of Appeals

a. General Consideration of Subject (p. 801)

A case may properly be appealed to the Circuit Court of Appeals where there are other questions in the case beside that of jurisdiction. Stebbins v. Selig, (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1919) 257 Fed. 230, 168 C. C. A. 314.

b. Jurisdiction Sole Question in Issue (p. 905)

To same effect as original annotation, see Blumenstock Bros. Advertising Agency v. Curtis Pub. Co., (C. C. A. 7th Cir. 1919) 258 Fed. 927, 170 C. C. A. 123.

5. When Jurisdiction is in Issue (p. 806)

Other illustrations.—Chipman v. Thomas B. Jeffrey Co., (1920) 251 U. S. 373, 40 S. Ct. 172, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, holding service of summons insufficient to give jurisdiction over foreign corporation. Canton First Nat. Bank v. Williams, (1920) 252 U. S. 504, 40 S. Ct. 372, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, holding that a suit by a national bank to restrain the Comptroller of the Currency can be brought only in the district where such bank is located and may there be maintained upon service made upon the defendant wherever found.

VI. CONSTITUTIONAL QUESTIONS IN ISSUE

3. Constitution or Law of State Claimed to be in Contravention of Constitution

e. Illustrations (p. 832)

Impairment of obligation of contract.—The question whether the obligations of a contract with a state were impaired by subsequent state legislation is one which will warrant a direct writ of error from the federal Supreme Court to a District Court. Hays v. Seattle, (1920) 251 U. S. 233, 40 S. Ct. 125, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (W. D. Wash. 1915) 226 Fed. 287.

A decision of the highest court of a state is not reviewable in the federal Supreme Court as presenting the question whether contract obligations were impaired by the effect given to a municipal ordinance repealing a street lighting and power franchise, where this contention was first made in the intermediate state appellate court, and no effect whatever was given to such ordinance, either by that court or by the state court of last resort, each court reaching the conclusion under review independently of and without reference to such ordinance. Hardin-Wyandot Co. v. Upper Sandusky, (1919) 251 U. S. 173, 40 S. Ct. 104, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (1916) 93 Ohio St. 428, 113 N. E. 402.

I. POWER TO REVIEW BY CERTIORARI, IN GENERAL

1. Confined to Cases Not Reviewable on Appeal or Writ of Error (p. 855)

The Supreme Court may, under this section, bring up by certiorari directed to a Circuit Court of Appeals a cause in which the decree of the latter court is made final by § 128, and may treat the cause as if on appeal. Meccano v. Wanamaker, (1920) 253 U. S. 136, 40 S. Ct. 463, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming on other grounds (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1918) 250 Fed. 450, 162 C. C. A. 520, which reversed (S. D. N. Y. 1917) 241 Fed. 133.

2. Comprehensive Power of Review (p. 856)

In general.—The federal Supreme Court, on certiorari to review a judgment of a Circuit Court of Appeals which reversed a judgment below in favor of plaintiffs and ordered a new trial, may deal only with the matter considered by the Circuit Court of Appeals, and remand the cause for any needed action upon other questions, or it may proceed itself to a complete decision, where defendant does not rely entirely upon the ground of decision advanced by the Circuit Court of Appeals, but urges that if it be not well taken, the record discloses other grounds not considered by that court for reversing the judgment and ordering a new trial, and that if its decision be right, it is not sufficiently comprehensive to serve as a guide to the court and the parties upon another trial, plaintiffs insisting that the judgments in the District Court were right and should be affirmed. Cole v. Ralph, (1920) 252 U. S. 286, 40 S. Ct. 321, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, reversing on other grounds (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1918) 249 Fed. 81, 161 C. C. A. 133.

The Supreme Court will not undertake, on certiorari sued out to review a decree of a Circuit Court of Appeals which reversed a decree of a District Court, granting a preliminary injunction, to decide which one of two conflicting views expressed by two Circuit Courts of Appeals is the correct one, nor to decide the several issues involved upon the merits. Meccano v. Wanamaker, (1920) 253 U. S. 136, 40 S. Ct. 463, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1918) 250 Fed. 450, 162 C. C. A. 520, which reversed (S. D. N. Y. 1917) 241 Fed. 133.

II. DISCRETION IN EXERCISE OF POWER

2. Power Sparingly Exercised (p. 856)

A decree of a Circuit Court of Appeals which, upon a view of all relevant circumstances, reversed an order of the trial court granting a preliminary injunction, will not be disturbed by the Supreme Court on certiorari except for strong reasons. Meccano v. Wanamaker, (1920) 253 U. S. 136, 40 S. Ct. 463, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1918) 250 Fed. 450, 162 C. C. A. 520, which reversed (S. D. N. Y. 1917) 241 Fed. 133.

3. Before Final Decree in Circuit Court of Appeals (p. 857)

In Spiller v. Atchison, etc., R. Co., (1920) 253 U. S. 117, 40 S. Ct. 466, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, judgments not final were reviewed on certiorari, the court saying: "Upon consideration of the particular circumstances of the case, we have concluded that a writ of certiorari ought to be allowed, without further protracting the litigation to the extent that would be necessary in order to reach final judgments."

4. Illustrations of Exercise of Power (p. 858)

Recovery of amounts awarded in reparation order of Interstate Commerce Commission.—Decrees of a Circuit Court of Appeals which reversed decrees below for the recovery of the amounts awarded in a reparation order made by the Interstate Commerce Commission, and remanded the cause for a new trial, are reviewable in the Supreme Court by certiorari under this section, in the case of those which are made final by the combined effect of sections 128 and 241, because the requisite jurisdictional amount is not involved, and in the case of the other decrees by virtue of section 262, in aid of the ultimate jurisdiction of the Supreme Court to review such decrees by writ of error. Spiller v. Atchison, etc., R. Co., (1920) 253 U. S. 117, 40 S. Ct. 466, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, reversing on other grounds (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1917) 246 Fed. 1, 158 C. C. A. 227; (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1918) 249 Fed. 677, 161 C. C. A. 587.

III. PROCEDURE FOR OBTAINING WRIT

6. Petition for Certiorari United with Appeal or Writ of Error (p. 860)

Pell v. McCabe, (1919) 250 U. S. 573, 40 S. Ct. 43, 63 U. S. (L. ed.) 1147, was a case of an appeal and a certiorari, the former being dismissed.

In Spiller v. Atchison, etc., R. Co., (1920) 253 U. S. 117, 40 S. Ct. 466, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, there was a writ of error and a petition for a writ of certiorari, the former being dismissed and a hearing had on the latter.

7. On Motion to Dismiss Appeal or Writ of Error (p. 861)

After dismissal of a writ of error by the Supreme Court for want of jurisdiction, a writ of certiorari was awarded, a petition therefor having been filed in due season, in Spiller v. Atchison, etc., R. Co., (1920) 253 U. S. 117, 40 S. Ct. 466, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —.

V. HEARING AND EXAMINATION, DETERMINATION, AND REMAND (p. 862)

Concurrent findings of fact by two courts below.—The concurrent judgment of the two courts below that a railway carrier was not negligent in failing to give warning to a brakeman concerning the use of freight cars with handholds only at two diagonal corners will not be disturbed by the Supreme Court. Boehmer v. Pennsylvania R. Co., (1920) 252 U. S. 496, 40 S. Ct. 409, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1918) 252 Fed. 553, 165 C. C. A. 3.

(L. ed.) —, "its general importance in the administration of the Bankruptcy Act warranted a review of the case by certiorari" to determine the question "whether a claim for unliquidated damages, arising out of a pure tort which neither constitutes a breach of an express contract nor results in any unjust enrichment of the tortfeasor that may form the basis of an implied contract, is provable in bankruptcy."

(L. ed.) —, the court saying: "The cases are here upon writs of error which were granted because the ground upon which the Circuit Court of Appeals put its decision—the construction and application of some of the mineral land laws—was deemed of general interest in the region where those laws are operative."

3. Division of Opinion in Circuit Court of Appeals (p. 867)

(L. ed.) —, an action on the federal Employers' Liability Act, the question being whether the plaintiff was employed in interstate commerce where the courts below "seemed to have been constrained to that conclusion by the same cases, and a review of them, therefore, is immediately indicated to see whether in their discord or harmony, whichever exists, a solution can be found for the present controversy." See also as a case "not distinguishable" from the foregoing, Erie R. Co. v. Szary, (1920) 253 U. S. 86, 40 S. Ct. 454, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —.

II. MODE AND SCOPE OF REVIEW (p. 878)

Only final judgments.—Decrees of a Circuit Court of Appeals which reversed decrees below for the recovery of amounts awarded in a reparation order made by the Interstate Commerce Commission, and remanded the cause for a new trial, are not final for the purpose of a writ of error. Spiller v. Atchison, etc., R. Co., (1920) 253 U. S. 117, 40 S. Ct. 466, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, reversing on other grounds (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1917) 246 Fed. 1, 158 C. C. A. 227, (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1918) 249 Fed. 677, 161 C. C. A. 587.

Refusal of District Court to direct verdict.—The refusal of the trial court to direct a verdict for defendant will not be disturbed by the Supreme Court where that court is of the opinion that the evidence presented several disputable questions of fact which it was the province of the jury to determine, and this was the view, not only of the judge who presided at the trial, but of another judge who overruled a motion for a new trial. Cole v. Ralph, 252 U. S. 286, 40 S. Ct. 321, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, reversing (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1918) 249 Fed. 81, 161 C. C. A. 133.

Jurisdiction of Circuit Court of Appeals in issue.—An appeal having been taken to a Circuit Court of Appeals in a case in which jurisdiction below was based upon constitutional grounds, and hence was not appealable to that court, and a final order having been made by the Circuit Court of Appeals, the Supreme Court has jurisdiction under this section to review the question of the jurisdiction of the Circuit Court of Appeals. New York v. Consolidated Gas Co., (1920) 253 U. S. 219, 40 S. Ct. 511, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, reversing (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1919) 260 Fed. 1022, 171 C. C. A. 669) which further held that the proper course for the Supreme Court on an appeal from a decree of affirmance made by a Circuit Court of Appeals in a case wrongfully appealed to that court, was to reverse the judgment of the Circuit Court of Appeals and remand the case to that court, with directions to dismiss the appeal.

Consideration of trial court's jurisdiction.—After final judgment entered by a federal District Court and affirmed by a Circuit Court of Appeals, the trial court's jurisdiction will not ordinarily be denied on the theory that the requisite jurisdictional amount was not involved, where the action was in tort, the alleged damages exceeded the prescribed amount, the declaration discloses nothing rendering such a recovery impossible, and no bad faith appears. Chesbrough v. Northern Trust Co., (1920) 252 U. S. 83, 40 S. Ct. 237, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1918) 251 Fed. 881, 164 C. C. A. 97.

Vol. V, p. 890, Jud. Code, sec. 243.

Time within which to appeal.—A motion for new trial, seasonably made, suspends the running of the time within which to file an application for appeal, but in the absence of any such motion or of some proceeding of which the court has jurisdiction, and seasonably filed, the court is powerless, after the period within which an appeal can be applied for, to extend the time fixed by section 243 of the Judicial Code for appeal. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. U. S., (1919) 54 Ct. Cl. 116.

Findings of fact.—A finding of the Court of Claims that an infirmity building constructed by the government for Indians was not used and was not such a building as was contemplated by treaties with such Indians means not that a building of this general character was not contemplated, but that the particular building was not what it ought to have been, and not suitable for the use of the Indians, and, so construed, it is either a finding upon a mere question of fact, or, at most, is a finding of mixed fact and law, where the question of law is inseparable, and in either case the finding is not reviewable by the federal Supreme Court on appeal. U. S. v. Omaha Tribe of Indians, (1920) 253 U. S. 275, 40 S. Ct. 522, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming in part and reversing in part (1918) 53 Ct. Cl. 549.

The failure of the Court of Claims to find certain facts in accordance with claimant's contention may not be assigned as error on appeal to the federal Supreme Court, since the review by the latter court is based upon the findings as made. U. S. v. Omaha Tribe of Indians, (1920) 253 U. S. 275, 40 S. Ct. 522, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming in part and reversing in part (1918) 53 Ct. Cl. 549.

A case in which the Court of Claims filed a written opinion decreeing dismissal of a suit for want of jurisdiction, but made no finding of facts, will not be remanded for such finding where all the relevant facts were admitted by that court. Cartas v. U. S., (1919) 250 U. S. 545, 40 S. Ct. 42, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —.

C. 1919) 258 Fed. 160) was granted in American Steel Foundries v. Newton, (1919) 250 U. S. 655, 40 S. Ct. 10, 63 U. S. (L. ed.) 1192; denied in Chesapeake, etc., Telephone Co. v. Summerville, (1919) 250 U. S. 661, 40 S. Ct. 10, 63 U. S. (L. ed.) 1195 (for opinion below see (App. Cas. D. C. 1919) 258 Fed. 147).

Saks*, (1920) 253 U. S. 479, 40 S. Ct. 482, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, to review a judgment of the District of Columbia Court of Appeals reported in (App. Cas. D. State workmen's compensation law.—By amendment to this paragraph in the Act of Oct. 6, 1917 (see 1918 Supp. p. 414) "rights and remedies under the workmen's compensation law of any state" are saved to claimants. The amendment has been held to be unconstitutional. Knickerbocker Ice Co. v. Stewart, (1920) 253 U. S. 149, 40 S. Ct. 438, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, reversing (1919) 226 N. Y. 302, 123 N. E. 382.

In Gibson v. Gernat, (1920) 253 U. S. 487, 40 S. Ct. 483, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, a writ of certiorari to the District of Columbia Court of Appeals was denied.

II. JURISDICTION

1. Generally (p. 962)

To same effect as original annotation, see Detroit, etc., R. Co. v. Monroe, (E. D. Mich. 1919) 262 Fed. 177, holding that a federal court had no jurisdiction to enjoin proceedings in a state court in a case which it has previously remanded to such court.

2. Court First Acquiring Jurisdiction Retains It (p. 982)

Appointment of receiver.—Where a District Court and a state court have concurrent jurisdiction of suits against a corporation for the appointment of a receiver, the court first appointing a receiver acquires control over the corporation's property and has jurisdiction to the exclusion of the other court. Wheeler v. Badenhausen Co., (E. D. Pa.) 1919) 260 Fed. 991, wherein the court said:

"Where two courts have concurrent jurisdiction, it is the policy of the law that the jurisdiction of both shall not be concurrently invoked and exercised, and, as between two courts having concurrent jurisdiction of the subject-matter of an action, the court which first obtains jurisdiction has the right to proceed to its final determination without interference from the other."

V. OTHER PARTICULAR MATTERS AND PROCEEDINGS (p. 976)

Bankruptcy proceedings.—To same effect as original annotation, see In re Levy, (E. D. Pa. 1919) 259 Fed. 314.

A bankruptcy court is powerless to enjoin a state court from punishing a bankrupt for refusing to obey the order of the latter court to pay alimony, or to relieve him from his obligation to pay installments of alimony. In re Pyatt, (D. C. Nev. 1918) 257 Fed. 362.

Violation of state constitution.—Three judges proceeding under this section may consider also whether the statute in question contravenes the constitution of the state. Wofford Oil Co. v. Smith, (M. D. Ala. 1920) 263 Fed. 396.

V. APPEAL AND EFFECT OF APPEAL (p. 988)

Appeal direct to Supreme Court.—An appeal to the Supreme Court, taken under the Judicial Code, § 266, from the denial by a District Court of an interlocutory application for an injunction to restrain the enforcement of a state statute on constitutional grounds, must be dismissed where the decree as entered not only disposed of the application, but dismissed the action, and another appeal was later taken from the same decree under section 238, this being the proper practice, since the denial of the application was merged in the final decree. Shaffer v. Carter, (1920) 252 U. S. 37, 40 S. Ct. 221, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —.

II. JURISDICTIONAL MATTERS GENERALLY (p. 990)

Disposition of all questions raised by bill.—Equitable jurisdiction of a suit which presents one ground for equitable relief, with no adequate remedy at law, extends to the disposition of all the questions raised by the bill, since a court of equity does not do justice by halves, and will prevent, if possible, a multiplicity of suits. Shaffer v. Carter, (1920) 252 U. S. 37, 40 S. Ct. 221, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —.

Suit against Treasury officials to establish equitable lien upon fund in Treasury.—A court of equity may grant relief against Treasury officials by way of mandatory injunction or a receivership to one who has an equitable right in a fund appropriated by Congress to pay a specified person, conformably to a finding of the Court of Claims, where such person is made a party so as to bind her, and so that a decree may afford a proper acquittance to the government. Houston v. Ormes, (1920) 252 U. S. 469, 40 S. Ct. 369, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (1918) 47 App. Cas. (D. C.) 364.

IV. REMEDY AT LAW

1. Adequate Remedy at Law Bars Relief in Equity (p. 996)

To same effect as original annotation, see Canadian Car, etc., Co. v. American Can Co., (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1919) 258 Fed. 363, 169 C. C. A. 379, 6 A. L. R. 1182, modifying (S. D. N. Y. 1918) 253 Fed. 152.

VI. APPLICATION OF RULES IN PARTICULAR MATTERS AND PROCEEDINGS

8. Cloud on Title (p. 1003)

Statutes which may furnish an adequate legal remedy against taxes assessed under an unconstitutional law do not bar resort to equity by a taxpayer who avers that the tax lien asserted by virtue of the levy and tax warrant, itself attacked on constitutional grounds, creates a cloud on title, where there appears to be no legal remedy for the removal of a cloud on title cast by an invalid lien imposed for a tax valid in itself. Shaffer

r. Carter, (1920) 252 U. S. 37, 40 S. Ct. 221, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, wherein the court said: "For removal of a cloud upon title caused by an invalid lien imposed for a tax valid in itself, there appears to be no legal remedy. Hence, on this ground, at least, resort was properly had to equity for relief; and since a court of equity does not 'do justice by halves,' and will prevent, if possible, a multiplicity of suits, the jurisdiction extends to the disposition of all questions raised by the bill. Camp v. Boyd, 229 U. S. 530, 551, 552, 57 L. ed. 1317, 1326, 1327, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 785; McGowan v. Parish, 237 U. S. 285, 296, 59 L. ed. 955, 963, 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 543."

13. Fraud Generally (p. 1005)

Fraudulent representations inducing sale.—

A suit in equity for the rescission of the sale of the notes of a corporation may not be maintained by purchasers of the notes against a bank because of alleged false representations regarding the value of the security for the notes, made by it to a firm of brokers who superintended the sale of the bonds, where the bank was neither the vendor nor indorser of the notes. In such case only the vendors or indorsers could be compelled by equitable process to rescind, and moreover the purchasers have an adequate remedy at law against the bank by an action for fraud and deceit. Passaic Nat. Bank v. Commercial Nat. Bank, (App. Cas. D. C. 1919) 262 Fed. 234.

22. Taxes (p. 1007)

Equity has jurisdiction, there being no adequate remedy at law, of a suit to enjoin state officials from enforcing an alleged unlawful tax upon foreign railway companies where such tax is made a first lien upon all the property of the railways in the state, thus putting a cloud upon their titles, and where delay in payment is visited with considerable penalties. Wallace v. Hines, (1920) 253 U. S. 66, 40 S. Ct. 435, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, wherein the court said: "This is an appeal from an order of three judges restraining the defendants, the appellants, from taking steps to enforce taxes imposed by an act of North Dakota, approved March 7, 1919 (chap. 222), until the further order of the court. The plaintiff railroads are corporations of other states, with lines extending into North Dakota. The defendants are the state tax commissioner, the state treasurer, the state auditor, the attorney-general, and the secretary of state for North Dakota. As the tax is made a first lien upon all the property of the plaintiff railroads in the state, and thus puts a cloud upon their title, and as delay in payment is visited with considerable penalties, there is jurisdiction in equity unless there is an adequate remedy at law against the state to which the tax is to be paid. Schaffer v. Carter, 252 U. S. 37; Gaar, Scott & Co. v.

Shannon, 223 U. S. 468, 472, 56 L. ed. 510, 512, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 236. The only ground for supposing that there is such a remedy is a provision that 'an action respecting the title to property, or arising upon contract, may be brought in the District Court against the state the same as against a private person.' N. D. Comp. Laws 1913, § 8175. This case does not arise upon contract except in the purely artificial sense that some claims for money alleged to have been obtained wrongfully might have been enforced at common law by an action of assumpsit. Nothing could be more remote from an actual contract than the wrongful extortion of money by threats, and we ought not to leave the plaintiffs to a speculation upon what the state court might say if an action at law were brought. Union P. R. Co. v. Weld County, 247 U. S. 282, 62 L. ed. 1110, 38 Sup. Ct. Rep. 510."

IV. PARTICULAR ACTS OR CONDUCT AS CONTEMPTS

4. Court Officers' Acts (p. 1020)

Attorney.—In U. S. v. Markewich, (S. D. N. Y. 1919) 261 Fed. 537, it appeared that an attorney made a speech at a public meeting in which he falsely represented the District Court was influenced by certain interests in granting orders in a specified case. It was held that, as an officer of the court, his conduct should be severely censured and that the record of the contempt proceeding should be transmitted to his state bar association.

II. POWER OF COURT (p. 1048)

Duty of Circuit Court of Appeals to order new trial on reversing judgment below.—A Circuit Court of Appeals may not reverse the judgment below, entered on a verdict for plaintiff in a personal injury action, without ordering a new trial. Fidelity Title, etc., Co. v. Du Bois Electric Co., (1920) 253 U. S. 212, 40 S. Ct. 514, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, reversing (C. C. A. 3d Cir. 1918) 253 Fed. 987, 165 C. C. A. 668.

Discretion of court.—Where there is substantial evidence to support the verdict the exercise of discretion by the trial court in refusing a new trial is not subject to review on a writ of error. Bristol Gas, etc., Co. v. Boy, (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1919) 261 Fed. 297.

Vol. V, p. 1059, Jud. Code, sec. 274a.

Scope of section.—This section "permits one who is entitled to a remedy to retain it in the suit he has brought by a transfer of the case to the proper docket, although his suit may have been brought at law when it should have been brought in equity, or vice versa; but it does not restore a remedy to one who is not entitled thereto, when he has abandoned and waived it in favor of an inconsistent remedy." Issenhuth v. Kirkpatrick, (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1919) 258 Fed. 293, 169 C. C. A. 309, wherein it was held that the action of the court in permitting a transfer under this section to the equity docket of a properly instituted action at law for deceit was a reversible error.

Amendments permissible.—Where a trustee in bankruptcy brings suit on the equity side of the court to set aside a sale of certain goods made, within four months prior to the filing of the petition in bankruptcy, by the bankrupts to one of their creditors, on the ground that such sale was made with intention to hinder, delay, and defraud creditors of the bankrupts, the petition in the case may be amended under this section so as to show that at the time of the alleged sale the bankrupts were insolvent, that the creditor then knew of such insolvency, that the transfer or sale alleged operated as a preference, and that the creditor at that time had reasonable cause to believe that such transfer or the enforcement of it would operate to effect a preference in his favor, and a surrender of the goods may also be prayed. Hicks Co. v. Moore, (C. C. A. 5th Cir. 1919) 261 Fed. 773.

Application to District of Columbia courts.—This section applies to the courts of the United States generally, including those of the District of Columbia. Tuckerman v. Mearns, (App. Cas. D. C. 1919) 262 Fed. 607. Regarding this section, the court said:

"It is urged by counsel for plaintiff that, assuming the court was correct in holding that there was a complete and adequate remedy at law, it was error to dismiss the bill. The proper order, it is contended, should have been to transfer the case for trial from the equity to the law side of the court. It was held in Curriden v. Middleton, 232 U. S. 633, 636, 34 Sup. Ct. 458, 58 L. Ed. 765, that equity rule 22 of the Supreme Court of the United States (198 Fed. xxiv, 115 C. C. A. xxiv) has no application to the courts of the District of Columbia. The ruling is based upon section 85 of the District Code, which, defining the jurisdiction of the equity court, provides:

"The practice in said court shall be according to the established course of equity and procedure and the rules established by the said Supreme Court of the District not inconsistent with law."

"This brings us to the consideration of section 274a of the federal Judicial Code. . . . This statute was enacted as an amendment to the Judicial Code, and appended to and made a part of chapter 11 thereof, which relates to the jurisdiction common to the courts of the United States generally, including the courts of the District of Columbia. It must be held, therefore, that the provisions of 274a are superior to any rule inconsistent therewith formulated under authority of section 85 of the Code.

"Rule 76 of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, adopted April 25, 1919, is as follows:

"If at any time it appear that a suit commenced in equity should have been brought as an action on the law side of the court, or that a suit at law should have been brought in equity, it shall be transferred to the law or equity side of the court, as the case may be, and be there proceeded with, with only such alteration in the pleadings as shall be essential."

"This rule is in conformity with section 274a, supra. The statute seems to more particularly define the course of procedure in the District Courts of the United States where the same judge simultaneously holds both an equity and a law court. The rule, however, merely conforms the procedure defined in the statute to the custom of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia in holding the equity and law courts in separate divisions and presided over by different judges.

"We come now to the procedure which should have been adopted in the court below. It will be observed that, under the statute:

"Any party to the suit shall have the right, at any stage of the cause, to amend his pleadings so as to obviate the objection that his suit was not brought on the right side of the court."

"This, in effect, forbids the dismissal of a bill in equity on the ground of an adequate remedy at law, or the sustaining of a demurrer at law on the ground that the remedy is in equity. When either of these conditions arise, it is the duty of the trial judge, either upon motion of counsel or upon his own motion, to order a recasting of the pleadings and the transfer of the cause to the proper side of the court. In Collins v. Bradley Co. (D. C.) 227 Fed. 199, 201, the court, considering the broadening effect of section 274a upon equity rule 22 of the Supreme Court of the United States, said:

"The equity rule and the statute have swept away entirely any and all technical objection whatsoever. While the Constitution preserves the right to a jury trial in every action at law, the practice as to raising the objection is revolutionized. Defendant's motion to dismiss may be taken as a motion to transfer the case to the law side, if the remedy at law is adequate."

"We are in accord with this practical construction of the intent of Congress to establish a simple, speedy, and inexpensive means of according justice, and at the same time closing the door against the bar of the statute of limitations which, under the former practice, frequently furnished an available avenue of escape for the party justly liable, thereby resulting in a miscarriage of justice.

"Rule 76 had not been adopted when the decree in this case was entered, and therefore is not applicable here. Section 274a was enacted after the original bill was filed, but it was in force when the decree here appealed from was entered, and applies directly to this action. Collins v. Bradley Co., supra. The court, therefore, erred in dismissing the bill. The order should have been to recast the pleadings and transfer the cause to the law side of the court." See also National Sav., etc., Co. v. Ryan, (App. Cas. D. C. 1919) 262 Fed. 613, wherein this section was applied.

Vol. V, p. 1061, Jud. Code, sec. 274b.

Setting up equitable defense in action at law.—Under this section a defense cannot be set up by equitable answer in an action at law. Breitung v. Packard, (D. C. Mass. 1919) 260 Fed. 895. In commenting on the scope of this section, the court said:

"The questions are: (1) Whether such facts constitute in equity a defense; and if so (2) whether the defense can be set up by equitable answer in an action at law, under the Act of March 3, 1915, c. 90 (38 Stat. 956).

"Discussing the second of these questions, it is obvious that the third person is a necessary party to such a defense, and that the defense ought not to be allowed unless the third party can be brought into the case. The ordinary practice in actions at law affords no way of doing so. It cannot be done under the act unless the answer be given the effect of a bill in equity to restrain the action at law. There is a dictum in U. S. v. Richardson, 223 Fed. 1010, 1013, 139 C. C. A. 386—a jury-waived case—which perhaps sustains that view. But the point has never been decided, and the practical difficulties which such a construction of the act would create in jury trials are so great and apparent, that it seems to me unlikely Congress could have so intended. Bills setting up equitable defenses are often complicated, involving many parties, and raising many questions. A jury trial is not a flexible proceeding, nor well adapted to the determination of complicated and confused issues. If the act be given the broad construction suggested, cases can easily be imagined which it would be impossible to try properly before a jury.

"Massachusetts has had a statute allowing equitable defenses in actions at law since 1883. Rev. Laws Mass. c. 173, § 28. The point under discussion seems not to have been raised under it; but I have found no decision in which a third party was brought into an action at law by an equitable answer. It seems to have been assumed that the statute only applied to such defenses as could be adequately made between the two parties to the original action. That seems to me to be the sound construction of the act in question.

"It follows that, as this answer discloses the necessity of a third party in order to establish the defense which it sets up, it is not good under the act; and the demurrer to it should be sustained."

Effect of failure to plead equitable defense.

—Where the defendant in an action for breach of contract does not avail himself of the provisions of this section and fails to plead mutual mistake and ask for a reformation of the contract, he is estopped from filing a bill on the equity side of the court to restrain the enforcement of a judgment at law in favor of the plaintiff and to reform the contract. Lyons v. Empire Fuel Co., (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1920) 262 Fed. 465. The court said:

"We think the injunction was improperly granted, for the reason that it plainly appears by the bill that the proposition of fact asserted thereby as necessary basis for relief was, by the judgment in the suit at law, conclusively determined against the Fuel Company's contention. Lyons' suit for damages was planted upon the proposition that the contract required the Fuel Company absolutely to furnish for transportation at least 350 tons of coal per day. The suit was based upon the written contract alleged in the petition to so provide, and the writing itself, which was made part of the petition, expressed Lyons' agreement to 'furnish sufficient barges . . . in which to load not less than 350 tons of coal per day, and . . . to transport all such coal to Pomeroy, Ohio, . . . and to load such coal into such cars as may be furnished at' that place.

"The Fuel Company thus had explicit notice, thorough the petition, of Lyons' construction of the contract, and was thereby given the right and opportunity, under section 274b of the Judicial Code (Act March 3, 1915, 38 Stat. 956), to interpose and have heard the defense that the writing did not express the actual agreement, and to ask affirmative relief by way of its reformation. That (as the company contends) the case for equitable reformation would necessarily be tried as a case in equity (Union Pacific R. R. Co. v. Syas [C. C. A. 8] 246 Fed. 561, 566, 158 C. C. A. 531; Keatley v. Trust Co. [C. C. A. 2] 249 Fed. 296, 161 C. C. A. 304; Philippine Sugar Co. v. Philippine Islands, 247 U. S. 385, 388, 389, 38 Sup. Ct. 513, 62 L. Ed. 1177; arising under the Philippine Code of Civil Procedure) is not, in the view we take of the case, important here; and we think it equally unimportant that, as held in Railroad Co. v. Syas, supra, the case for equitable relief should be disposed of before proceeding in the action at law. In any event, the action at law would be stayed pending the hearing on prayer to reform. Prudential Co. v.

Miller (C. C. A. 6) 257 Fed. 418, 421, — C. C. A. —. The point is that by the action at law opportunity was given the Fuel Company to try out then and there the case for reformation, and, to all intents and purposes, in the same case, although perhaps without a common-law jury, as to the plea for reformation. The Fuel Company did not take the benefit of this statute, but contented itself with a plea denying every allegation in the petition except its West Virginia incorporation. Had it pleaded mutual mistake, and asked reformation, it clearly could not again raise the question. Werlein v. New Orleans, 177 U. S. 390, 399, 20 Sup. Ct. 662, 44 L. Ed. 817. And there is respectable authority that the result would be the same if the existing right was not availed of."

Political faith of commissioner.—Under this section the selection of a jury commissioner is left to the sound discretion of the judge, and is not violated by the appointment of a commissioner who is registered as an Independent. U. S. v. Caplis, (W. D. La. 1919) 257 Fed. 840. Regarding the purpose of this section, the court said:

"The purpose of the act originally adopted in 1879 (Act June 30, 1879, c. 52, 21 Stat. 43), when many political questions were before the court, was to insure, as far as possible, the selection of jurors without regard to political bias. There were then but two political parties, or at least no third party of any consequence, and so it was provided that the commissioner should be selected from the principal political party opposed to that of the clerk. It was not contemplated, however, that in the making of a jury list each in turn should select a man of his own political faith; but, on the contrary, it was provided that such selection of jurors should be made without reference to party affiliation. This was the end to be obtained.

"Since then other parties have come into existence, and at times in certain districts it might be difficult to say which was the principal political party opposed to that of the clerk. One party might be considered such to-day, and another a week hence, after an election. Not only have new political parties arisen, but a large proportion of the electorate now aligns itself with no party, choosing rather to remain independent, to vote for those party nominees who may, in the opinion of the voter, be best qualified. As suggested in the query of Judge Pardee, suppose the clerk of the court is an Independent, affiliated with no party, how is the law to be complied with? The case at bar presents the converse of that situation. The clerk belongs to the dominant political party, and the jury commissioner, although a lifelong Republican, is perhaps technically not a member of that party, because, in his registration, he designates himself an Independent. By his registration he denies to himself the right to participate in the primaries of either party, in order that he may remain free to vote in the general election as his own good judgment and conscience may dictate. Why should this disqualify him for appointment as jury commissioner? Would not the very purpose of the act, the elimination of politics or political influence in the selection of juries, be better subserved by the appointment of such an Independent than by the selection of a partison, a well known member of the political party opposed to that of the clerk?"

"The selection of a jury commissioner the law wisely leaves to the good judgment and sound discretion of the judge. Its provisions as to his party affiliation are advisory; but even were the statute in this particular mandatory, rather than directory, in this instance it could not be said that the appointment was not in accord with the spirit of the act and in substantial compliance with its terms."

Joint indictment.—To the same effect as the original annotation, see Schaeffer v. U. S., (1920) 251 U. S. 466, 40 S. Ct. 259, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) — (affirming in part and reversing in part (E. D. Pa. 1918) 254 Fed. 135), wherein the court said that the constitutionality of this section "by which several defendants may be treated as one party for the purpose of peremptory challenges is attacked. Its constitutionality is established by Stilson v. U. S., 250 U. S. 583."

"The requirement to treat the parties defendant as a single party for the purpose of peremptory challenges has long been a part of the federal system of jurisprudence; it certainly dates back to 1865, and was adopted in the Revised Statutes, and has now become a part of the Judicial Code." *Stilson v. Contingent attorney's fee under Omnibus Claims Act.—An existing contract for the payment to an attorney for professional services to be rendered in the prosecution of a Civil War claim against the United States of a sum equal to 50 per cent of whatever might be collected was invalidated by the provision of the Omnibus Claims Act of March 4, 1915, which, after making an appropriation for payment of such claim, made it unlawful for any attorney to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum which, in the aggregate, exceeds 20 per cent of the amount of any item appropriated in that act, on account of services rendered or advances made in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. *Calhoun v. The provision of other parts of this Act limiting to twenty per cent the payments to attorneys and agents, out of moneys appropriated by said Act, for payment of certain claims against the United States, is not a denial of due process, or of the liberty of contract, to an attorney who has rendered professional services in the prosecution of one of such claims, under a contract whereby he was to receive a fee equal to fifty per cent of whatever might be awarded or collected. Black v. Crouch, (W. Va. 1919) 100 S. E. 749, wherein the court said: "Since the entry of the decree the Supreme Court of the United States has rendered a decision in which the statute in question has been held to be valid and constitutional. Capital Trust Co. v. Calhoun, 250 U. S. 208, 39 S. Ct. 486, 63 U. S. (L. ed.) —. It holds that the money appropriated by the Act cannot be subjected in any manner to a charge for fees in excess of twenty per cent."

c. Local Law; Rules of Property (p. 1130)

Rules of property.—The validity and interpretation of surrender clauses in oil and gas leases is the kind of question which, as held in Guffey v. Smith, (1915) 237 U. S. 101, 35 S. Ct. 526, 59 U. S. (L. ed.) 856, is to be settled by the local law as determined by the highest court of the state. Washburn v. Gillespie, (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1920) 261 Fed. 41, 171 C. C. A. 637.

II. APPLICATION OF RULES TO PARTICULAR SUBJECTS

5. Commercial Paper

a. Absence of State Statute (p. 1157)

Liability of bank accepting commercial paper for collection.—The question of the liability of a bank accepting commercial paper for collection is one of general rather than local law, and the federal courts are not bound by the decisions of the highest court of a state on the subject. Taylor, etc., Co. v. National Bank, (N. D. Ohio 1919) 262 Fed. 168, wherein it was said:

"In my opinion, the true question of law upon which the case turns is not that assumed by counsel. There is, in my opinion, no question involved of conflict in law, and therefore no inquiry need be made as to where the contract was made, or by the law of what state or forum it is to be controlled. The applicable rule is that stated in Swift v. Tyson, 16 Pet. 1, 10 L. Ed. 865; B. & O. Railroad v. Baugh, 149 U. S. 368, 13 Sup. Ct. 914, 37 L. Ed. 772. The rule thereby established is that, when the question is one of general law, and not of purely local law, it is to be determined by reference to all the authorities, and upon due consideration of the principles of general jurisprudence applicable to the subject, and not by reference merely to those of the state in which the cause of action arose.

"Swift v. Tyson, supra, involved the question of whether or not one who acquired negotiable paper for a pre-existing debt in due course before maturity and without notice of any defense thereto was to be regarded as a holder for value. The cause of action arose in New York, by the decisions of which one taking a note for a pre-existing debt was not regarded as a holder for value. It was held that this was a question, not of local law, but of general commercial law, and was to be decided upon an examination of all the authorities and due consideration of the principles underlying the general commercial law of the land. The result was that the United States Supreme Court held in that case that one taking negotiable paper for a pre-existing debt was a holder in due course. Mr. Justice Story, delivering the opinion, says that the laws of the state, which were made by the original Judiciary Act the rule of decision in the United States court, mean state laws, strictly local; that is to say, positive statutes of the state and the construction thereof adopted by the local tribunals, and decisions relating to rights or titles to things having a permanent locality, such as the rights and titles to real estate and other matters immovable and intra-territorial in their nature and character.

"In B. & O. Railroad v. Baugh, supra, this and all the intervening cases were fully reviewed, and the law reiterated to the same effect. It was therein held that the rule of fellow servantry in negligence cases was not a question of local law, but of general jurisprudence, and that the Ohio vice principal rule would not be followed and applied in the United States courts, even when the injury was sustained and the cause of action arose in Ohio after the pronouncement by its Supreme Court of that rule. It results that, if the United States Supreme Court has declared a rule applicable to the present controversy, it must control, and hence it is immaterial to inquire whether the so-called New York or Massachusetts rule is the true rule, or which has been adopted in Ohio."

b. Effect of State Statute and Construction Thereof by State Court (p. 1159)

The question of validity of a note for the purchase of stock of a corporation organized in a state whose constitution forbids corporations to issue stock except for money paid, etc., is one of general commercial law, in deciding which the federal courts are not bound to follow the decisions of the highest state courts. Wilson v. Spencer, (C. C. A. 5th Cir. 1919) 261 Fed. 357.

10. Courts (p. 1168)

A decision of the highest court of a state, defining the powers of an inferior court under the state constitution and laws, is binding on the federal courts. Barnett v. Kunkel, (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1919) 259 Fed. 394, 170 C. C. A. 370.

12. Decedents' Estates Generally (p. 1169)

Nature of state inheritance tax.—Decisions of the highest court of a state regarding the nature of a state inheritance tax are binding on the federal courts. Lederer v. Northern Trust Co., (C. C. A. 3d Cir. 1920) 262 Fed. 52, affirming (E. D. Pa. 1919) 257 Fed. 812.

c. Damages (p. 1173)

The federal court will follow the decision of the highest court of a state that no recovery can be had for the suffering and anguish of either parent in an action under the state statute for the death of a minor. Bristol Gas, etc., Co. v. Boy, (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1919) 261 Fed. 297.

14. Deeds, Mortgages and Leases of Realty

a. Deeds (p. 1174)

In general.—The question whether a foreclosure sale and sheriff's deed are invalid because the order of sale was not authenticated by the seal of court is one as to which decisions of the state court are controlling. Harlan v. Houston, (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1919) 258 Fed. 611, 170 C. C. A. 65.

Sufficiency of order approving deed.—A decision of the highest court of a state determining when an order approving a deed of real property in the state is sufficient to give the deed full validity, constitutes a rule of real property and is probably binding upon a federal court sitting in the state. Barnett v. Kunkel, (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1919) 259 Fed. 394, 170 C. C. A. 370.

b. Mortgages (p. 1175)

In general.—To same effect as original annotation, see Blackshear v. Dothan First Nat. Bank, (C. C. A. 5th Cir. 1919) 261 Fed. 601; Rader v. Star Mill, etc., Co., (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1919) 258 Fed. 599, 169 C. C. A. 541.

Foreclosure of deed of trust.—The provision of a state statute that a foreign corporation or individual trustee cannot foreclose a deed of trust covering property in the state without joining a resident trustee as a party plaintiff, does not control the bringing of such a foreclosure suit in a federal court in that state by a foreign corporation. Lane v. Equitable Trust Co., (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1919) 262 Fed. 918.

23. Interest and Usury (p. 1196)

Interest generally.—A federal District Court sitting in bankruptcy will follow the interpretation given by the highest state court to a provision in a state statute specifying what obligations shall bear interest after they become due and the rate thereof. In re Morrison, (C. C. A. 7th Cir. 1919) 261 Fed. 355.

Attorney's lien.—To same effect as original annotation, see Sun L. Assur. Co. v. Casanova, (C. C. A. 1st Cir. 1919) 260 Fed. 449, 171 C. C. A. 275; Turner v. Woodard, (C. C. A. 1st Cir. 1919) 259 Fed. 737, 170 C. C. A. 537.

29. Mortgages, Sales and Bailments of Personality (p. 1210)

Rights of parties under conditional sale contract.—The federal courts will accept as binding the decisions of the highest courts of a state regarding the question whether a vendee under a contract retaining title to personal property can convey good title thereto, against the vendor, to a purchaser without notice. Evanston First Nat Bank v. Waynesboro Bank, (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1919)

262 Fed. 754; Murphy v. Waynesboro Bank, (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1919) 262 Fed. 756.

Fraudulent sales.—The question whether a sale of personal property is fraudulent, is one of fact on which decisions of state courts construing a state statute on the subject are controlling. Young v. Gordon, (E. D. N. Y. 1919) 257 Fed. 846.

30. Municipal and Quasi Municipal Corporations (p. 1211)

The doctrine of the United States Supreme Court that municipalities will not be regarded as possessed of the right to bind themselves to a specified public service rate and term, except only under statutes granting to them express power to contract or agree as to such rates and time, controls in the lower federal courts "unless a settled course of decision in the court of last resort of [the particular state] requires a different conclusion." Knoxville Gas Co. v. Knoxville, (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1919) 261 Fed. 283, overruling the contention "that the rule thus established as to the necessity of explicit statutory language does not prevail in the courts of Tennessee."

V. APPLICABILITY IN PARTICULAR INSTANCES

24. Judgments and Proceedings Subsequent Thereto

c. Motions for New Trials (p. 42)

Necessity for motion.—A state practice requiring a motion for a new trial as prerequisite to an appellate review is not adopted by the Conformity Act. Chicago L. Ins. Co. v. Tiernan, (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1920) 263 Fed. 325.

New trial in respect of damages only.—Rule 73 of the New Jersey Practice Act of 1912 provides that "when a new trial is ordered because the damages are excessive or inadequate, and for no other reason, the verdict shall be set aside only in respect of damages, and shall stand good in all other respects." A rule of the state supreme court adopted the statutory rule above quoted. In a case subsequently decided by the New Jersey Court of Errors and Appeals it was held that the New Jersey courts have power to set aside a verdict and grant a new trial in respect of damages only. In McKeon v. Central Stamping Co., (D. C. N. J. 1919) 259 Fed. 917, an action to recover damages for a tort, brought in the federal district court for New Jersey, the court ordered a new trial solely for inadequacy of damages, deeming that the New Jersey rule above cited was mandatory and necessary to be followed by force of this section and R. S. sec. 721 [5 Fed. Stat. Ann. (2d ed.) 1123], both of which sections were quoted by the court, the latter also saying: "Neither the Constitution, treaties, nor statutes of the United States require a procedure in setting aside verdicts and ordering new trials otherwise than is provided in this rule of the New Jersey Supreme Court."

Requiring remittitur as condition to denying motion for new trial.—In Bristol Gas, etc., Co. v. Boy, (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1919) 261 Fed. 297, affirming judgment on a verdict for the plaintiff rendered in a federal District Court in Tennessee, the court said:

"We are clearly of opinion that the trial judge's action in requiring remittitur as a condition of denying motion for a new trial is not reviewable. In the absence of statute providing therefor, such would plainly be the case. Woodworth v. Chesbrough, 244 U. S. 79, 37 Sup. Ct. 583, 61 L. Ed. 1005. The statute of Tennessee, however, gives a plaintiff a right to a review of an order of remittitur (complied with under protest) made because of the trial judge's opinion that the verdict is 'so excessive as to indicate passion, prejudice, corruption, partiality, or unaccountable caprice on the part of the jury.' Acts Tenn. 1911, c. 29; Thompson's Shannon's Code, §§ 4694a, 4694a1. But were the instant case thought to be within the terms of that statute (although the only finding was that the verdict was 'excessive'), the statute itself is inapplicable, because not within the federal Conformity Act. That act does not apply to the personal conduct and administration of the judge in the discharge of his separate functions, nor to motions for new trial nor to proceedings on review. Were this Tennessee statute applicable, it would result, not only in requiring a trial judge, sitting in a federal court, to decide on motion for new trial the question of fact whether the size of the verdict is such as to indicate 'passion, prejudice,' etc., but also in requiring a federal court of review to determine for itself this same question of fact—all contrary to the settled practice in the federal courts. U. P. Ry. Co. v. Hadley, 246 U. S. 330, 334, 38 Sup. Ct. 318, 62 L. Ed. 751.

"That a state statute having such effect is not within the Conformity Act appears to us too plain for argument. It seems enough to refer to this court's discussion of the general subject in Knight v. Illinois Central R. R. Co., 180 Fed. 370, 103 C. C. A. 514. The decisions giving effect in the federal courts to state statutes guaranteeing as of absolute right, and as matter of law, a second trial of an action for the recovery of real property within the state (Equator Co. v. Hall, 106 U. S. 86, 1 Sup. Ct. 128, 27 L. Ed. 114; Smale v. Mitchell, 143 U. S. 99, 12 Sup. Ct. 353, 36 L. Ed. 90) are not analogous. Such statutes are not merely remedial, but are matter of substantive right, like the right to voluntary nonsuit. Barrett v. Virginian Ry. Co., 250 U. S. 473, 478, 39 Sup. Ct. 540, 64 L. Ed. —; Knight v. Illinois Central R. R. Co., supra. Simms v. Simms, 175 U. S. 162, 169, 20 Sup. Ct. 58, 44 L. Ed. 115, is not opposed to the conclusion we have reached."

d. Bill of Exceptions (p. 42)

To same effect as original annotation, see Blisse v. U. S., (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1920) 263 Fed. 961; Goldfarb v. Keener, (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1920) 263 Fed. 357.

f. Methods of Review (p. 45)

A state statute giving a plaintiff a right to a review of an order of remittitur (complied with under protest) made because of the trial judge's opinion that the verdict is "so excessive as to indicate passion, prejudice, corruption, partiality, or unaccountable caprice on the part of the jury" is not within this section and is not binding on a federal Circuit Court of Appeals. Bristol Gas, etc., Co. v. Boy, (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1919) 261 Fed. 297.

26. Jurisdiction (p. 46)

Nature of action.—The question whether an action is local or transitory is to be determined by the law of the state. Josevig-Kennecott Copper Co. v. James F. Howarth Co., (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1919) 261 Fed. 567.

36. Pleadings

d. Joinder of Causes of Action (p. 55)

To same effect as original annotation, see United Mine Workers v. Coronado Coal Co., (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1919) 258 Fed. 829, 169 C. C. A. 549.

A federal court will follow the state rule as to whether the causes of action set up by the plaintiff and the parties defendant are properly joined. Compania Minera Y Compradora, etc. v. American Metal Co., (W. D. Tex. 1920) 262 Fed. 183.

Personal injury under Federal Employers' Liability Act and at common law.—Rights conferred by federal law are not denied by the refusal of a state court to permit the joinder in a single count of a cause of action against a railway company to recover damages under the federal Employers' Liability Act, and of a common-law action against the railway employee whose concurrent negligence was alleged to have contributed in producing the injury. Lee v. Central of Georgia R. Co., (1920) 252 U. S. 109, 40 S. Ct. 254, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) — (affirming (1918) 21 Ga. App. 558, 94 S. E. 888), wherein the court said: "An injured employee brought an action in a state court of Georgia jointly against a railroad and its engineer, and sought in a single count, which alleged concurring negligence, to recover damages from the company under the federal Employers' Liability Act, and from the individual defendant under the common law. Each defendant filed a special demurrer on the ground of misjoinder of causes of action and misjoinder of parties defendant. The demurrers were overruled by the trial court. The Court of Appeals—an intermediate appellate court to which the case went on exceptions—certified to the Supreme Court of the state the question whether such joinder was permissible. It answered in the negative. 147 Ga. 428, 94 S. E. 558. Thereupon the Court of Appeals reversed the judgment of the trial court (21 Ga. App. 558, 94 S. E. 888) and certiorari to the Supreme Court of the state was refused. The plaintiff then applied to this court for a writ of certiorari on the ground that he had been denied rights conferred by federal law, and the writ was granted.

"Whether two causes of action may be joined in a single count or whether two persons may be sued in a single count are matters of pleading and practice relating solely to the form of the remedy. When they arise in state courts the final determination of such matters ordinarily rests with the state tribunals, even if the rights there being enforced are created by federal law. John v. Paullin, 231 U. S. 583, 34 Sup. Ct. 178, 58 L. Ed. 381; Nevada-California-Oregon Railway v. Burrus, 244 U. S. 103, 37 Sup. Ct. 576, 61 L. Ed. 1019. This has been specifically held in cases arising under the federal Employers' Liability Act. Minneapolis & St. Louis Railroad Co. v. Bombolis, 241 U. S. 211, 36 Sup. Ct. 595, 60 L. Ed. 961, L. R. A. 1917A, 86, Ann. Cas. 1916E, 505; Atlantic Coast Line Railroad Co. v. Mims, 242 U. S. 532, 37 Sup. Ct. 188, 61 L. Ed. 476; Louisville & Nashville Railroad Co. v. Holloway, 246 U. S. 525, 38 Sup. Ct. 379, 62 L. Ed. 867. It is only when matters nominally of procedure are actually matters of substance which affect a federal right, that the decision of the state court therein becomes subject to review by this court. Central Vermont Railway Co. v. White, 238 U. S. 507, 35 Sup. Ct. 865, 59 L. Ed. 1433, Ann. Cas. 1916B, 252; New Orleans & North Eastern Railroad Co. v. Harris, 247 U. S. 367, 38 Sup. Ct. 535, 62 L. Ed. 1167.

"The federal Employers' Liability Act does not modify in any respect rights of employees against one another existing at common law. To deny to a plaintiff the right to join in one count a cause against another employee with a cause of action against the employer in no way abridges any substantive right of the plaintiff against the employer."

f. Plea in Abatement (p. 56)

In general.—To same effect as original annotation, see Philadelphia, etc., Coal, etc., Co. v. Kever, (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1919) 280 Fed. 534, 171 C. C. A. 318.

Vol. VI, p. 80, sec. 921. [First ed., vol. IV, p. 587.]

Objection to the consolidation of causes of action can only be made if the parties are deprived of a right material to their defense, and such objection can only be made at the trial of the cause and not by demurrer to the complaint. United Mine Workers v. Coronado Coal Co., (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1919) 258 Fed. 829, 169 C. C. A. 549. In distinguishing this case from Mutual L. Ins. Co. v. Hillmon, (1892) 145 U. S. 285, 12 S. Ct. 909, 36 U. S. (L. ed.) 707, in the original annotation, the court said: "It is contended that there is an act of Congress regulating the consolidation of causes (section 921, Rev. Stat.), and that in Mutual Life Insurance Co. v. Hillmon, 145 U. S. 285, 12 Sup. Ct. 909, 36 L. Ed. 706, this has been construed adversely to the ruling of the court below. We do not so construe the opinion of the court. What the court decided was that—

"Where the English consolidation rule has not been adopted, the American courts, state and federal, have exercised the authority of ordering several actions by one plaintiff against different defendants to be tried together, whenever the defense is the same and unnecessary delay and expense will be thereby avoided."

"The court then proceeded:

"But although the defendants might lawfully be compelled, at the discretion of the court, to try the cases together, the causes of action remain distinct, and required separate verdicts and judgments; and no defendant could be deprived, without its consent, of any right material to its defense, whether by way of challenge of jurors, or of objection to evidence, to which it would have been entitled if the cases had been tried separately."

"In the instant case there was no consolidation of actions, but assuming, without deciding, that the same rule applies to actions originally brought by several plaintiffs, or against several defendants, which could properly be consolidated under that section, objection can only be made if the parties are deprived of a right material to their defense, 'whether by way of challenge of juror or of objection to evidence to which it would have been entitled if the causes had been tried separately.' Of course, such rights can only be claimed at the trial of the cause, and not by demurrer to the complaint. There is no claim that the defendants were deprived of either of these rights at the trial. To entitle the defendants to insist in the appellate court that they were entitled to more than three peremptory challenges of jurors, that right must be claimed at the trial, and also that the parties complaining had exhausted their right of peremptory challenges. It was so held in Connecticut Mutual Life Insurance Co. v. Hillmon, 188 U. S. 208, 212, 23 Sup. Ct. 294, 47 L. Ed. 446, when the case, reported in 145 U. S. 285, 12 Sup. Ct. 909, 36 L. Ed. 706, was for the second time before the Supreme Court. The record here shows that the defendants only challenged one juror peremptorily. It fails to show that they had made any claim to more than three challenges. How, then, can it be claimed that the court erred, when it was never called on to rule on the question, when the jury was selected, and the defendants were not prejudiced by having exhausted the three challenges?"

Statute of limitations as affecting power to amend.—The allowance of an amendment to the declaration after the statute of limitations had run is not error, where the original declaration was sufficient, and the amendment plainly left the cause of action unchanged. Fidelity Title, etc., Co. v. Du Bois Electric Co., (1920) 253 U. S. 212, 40 S. Ct. 514, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —.

Power of United States district attorney to present charges to grand jury as affected by state rule of law.—A state rule of law which forbids a district attorney, without first obtaining leave of court, to present to one grand jury charges which a previous grand jury has ignored, can have no application by virtue of this section to a prosecution in the federal courts for a crime against the United States, committed within such state, in view of the existence of a controlling federal rule which would be overthrown by applying the state rule. U. S. v. Thompson, (1920) 251 U. S. 407, 40 S. Ct. 289, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —.

III. TRIAL BY REFEREE OR AUDITOR (p. 126)

A compulsory reference to an auditor to simplify and clarify the issues, in an action at law involving long accounts with many disputed items, and to make tentative findings of fact, is within the inherent power of a federal district court as a trial court. Matter of Peterson, (1920) 253 U. S. 300, 40 S. Ct. 543, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, wherein the court said: "A compulsory reference with power to determine issues is impossible in the federal courts because of the 7th Amendment (United States v. Rathbone, 2 Paine, 578, Fed. Cas. No. 16,121) but no reason exists why a compulsory reference to an auditor to simplify and clarify the issues and to make tentative findings may not be made at law, when occasion arises, as freely as compulsory references to special masters are made in equity. Reference of complicated questions of fact to a person specially appointed to hear the evidence and make findings thereon has long been recognized as an appropriate proceeding in an action at law. Hecker v. Fowler, 2 Wall. 123, 17 L. ed. 759. The inherent power of a federal court to invoke such aid is the same whether the court sits in equity or at law. We conclude, therefore, that the order, in so far as it appointed the auditor and prescribed his duties, was within the power of the court."

Review of rulings of court.—In Raymer v. Netherwood, (C. C. A. 7th Cir. 1919) 257 Fed. 284, 168 C. C. A. 368, Evans, J., in a dissenting opinion, said of this section: "Plaintiff brought this action for damages for alleged breach of contract. The contract, if any, grew out of two letters, one, written by defendant in California, which may well be called the offer; the other, written by plaintiff at Madison, Wis., and termed the acceptance. Whether the second letter was an acceptance of the offer found in the first was the sole disputed issue in the case. No question of fact, but simply one of law, was involved. Had a jury been drawn, the District Court, in disposing of the action, would have been compelled to direct a verdict.

"Under these circumstances, it seems to me, it was the duty, as well as the privilege, of counsel to avoid the expense to litigants and to the government incident to a jury trial. On the other hand, the litigants' right to review the decision of the District Court should be as clear and as extensive as in case the idle formality of calling a jury was respected.

"In either case any adverse ruling in the course of the trial, to which exception was taken, should be subject to review upon writ of error. Section 649 R. S. did not take from the litigants the right to review the rulings of the lower court. This section was intended to give litigants the right to waive jury trials in law actions, and to give to the findings of the court the force of a verdict of a jury. Rulings on questions of law, properly presented, were subject to review in such a trial, the same as in a case of trial by jury."

In Mississippi Valley Trust Co. v. Railway Steel Spring Co., (C. C. A. 8th Cir.

1919) 258 Fed. 346, 169 C. C. A. 362, it was held that an order granting a preliminary injunction because of numerous irregularities failed to conform to the provisions of this section and equity rule 73, but that objections to such irregularities were not made at the proper time.

What constitutes labor dispute.—A strike to enforce a secondary boycott is not within the act. Vonnegut Machinery Co. v. Toledo Mach., etc., Co., (N. D. Ohio 1920) 263 Fed. 192, wherein it was said: "The construction which would emasculate the act is no more unjust than that liberality of interpretation which would expand its provisions beyond the clearly understood purpose of the measure. . . What is the scope of the language 'terms and conditions of employment,' for these words, from section 20 of the act in question, need interpretation here? The court should not attempt an inelastic definition. One should be given which would keep step with the advance in sentiment, as conditions change, to make good the very proper demand that the laboring man should receive consideration from his employer which will maintain his health and self-respect, and secure to him the full measure of the fruits of his toil, while preserving to him all those opportunities for social intercourse and self-improvement which should be his to enjoy that he may realize his aspirations. But even a most liberal definition in this direction has its limitations. The mind, in considering the words 'terms and conditions of employment,' unconsciously, but directly, goes to a contemplation of such things as hours of labor, wages, classification of employees, sanitary and physical conditions controllable by the employer, opportunities for reasonable redress of grievances, and for bargaining respecting the conditions of employment, whether collectively, as enlightened public sentiment as well as convenience approves, or individually. This view is well supported in this case by the character of the new contract which the labor organization tendered in writing to the defendant company, and which had been under consideration before the strike. Its fifteen paragraphs deal exclusively with subjects, as 'terms and conditions of employment,' which come within the above limitations. At the time of the strike, the factory was what is known as an open shop, and the proposed new agreement with the defendant labor organization recognizes, as a condition tendered by the latter itself, that the factory should remain open. In no case, however, does it seem possible that the definition of this term should be so wide as to make the employé a dictator to his employer respecting the manner generally, and beyond the above-indicated limitations, in which the latter should conduct his business. It is possible, of course, to conceive of things which have a collateral tendency to affect those considerations to which the employé is entitled. He may have a collateral interest in the success of a labor dispute with another employer, so that he nurses an impulse to help through a sympathetic strike against his own employer, with whose conditions of employment he is entirely satisfied. But to enter the field of collateral possibilities is to explore a territory without boundaries, where lurk immeasurable and unbearable restraints upon industrial freedom. A certain line must be drawn somewhere. It surely is at the place where a man whose asset is his daily toil has guaranteed to him sufficient recompense and proper environment. Therefore no conceits or whims, or mere prejudices, of the employé, may be by him elevated to the dignity of terms and conditions of employment, to be protected in any degree by the statute in question, and thereby to become the basis for a demand under it of a discriminatory nature. The employé may refuse to work—that is, he may strike—for any reason, however frivolous; but if he strikes for a whim the controversy so brought about does not gain that status which would bring into operation the act in question.

"In the present instance the testimony shows that on the 13th of August last certain employés of the defendant company struck, not because they objected to hours of labor, not for better wages, not for new classifications, not because there was anything objectionable in physical or sanitary conditions at the factory, not because they were interfered with in any degree respecting their privilege for bargaining, but simply and solely because they did not like a customer with whom the employer was doing business—only because they did not care to work on certain contracts their employer had. It is true that a new working agreement to supersede the one whose term had expired, and upon which the men were insisting, had not been signed; but it is most clear that the objection to Overland work alone precipitated the strike. Before this action was taken, the Grand Lodge of Machinists was consulted under union rules respecting sanction of strikes, and 'sanction' was given, by this superior authority, to go out for this cause only. The last action of the 'shop committee' of the men was simply on this ground. The evidence is clear that no other reason was offered. Some time afterwards attempts were made to negotiate for reinstatement on the basis of a new agreement, coupled with the company's abandonment of the work in question; but it is quibbling only to argue that on August 13 the controversy actually involved anything else than the latter condition."

Where there has been a strike, but the employer has fully replaced the striking employees and has restored his plant to normal productiveness, there is no longer a dispute between employer and employees within this section, and picketing and similar practices may be enjoined. Dail-Overland Co. v. Willys-Overland, (N. D. Ohio 1920) 263 Fed. 171. The court said: "What are the obvious facts? When the dispute arose May 5, 1919, the plant had 12,842 employes. It continued in operation for three days, with a greatly reduced force, closing May 8 because of the unrestrained violence to which its loyal employes were subjected. May 26 it resumed operations, continuing with a force augmented to a little over 20 per cent. of normal, until June 2, when again violence of extreme character forced it to comply with the request of the local authorities to close. June 13 operations were resumed under the mandatory order of this court, enforced by our special officer. The initial working force was 1,276. This number of employes has steadily increased, until, on December 20, the day these motions were submitted, 13,556 persons were at work, an increase of more than 700 over the number at work more than seven months ago, when were last at work the persons who are represented in this case by the labor defendants and in whose behalf 'picketing' is still carried on. The plant is in successful operation, turning out more machines daily than ever before.

"As long as conditions are such that what is called a 'settlement' might seem reasonably possible between the company and its late workmen, the latter, it seems, should be considered 'employes,' within the meaning of that term in the Clayton Act. But when the controversy has reached a practical end, there is no reason why the term 'employee' should not be held to its ordinary meaning of one who actually works for hire for another and under the latter's control. It is obvious that the Willys-Overland Company, which refused to 'settle' last May with 'employes' represented by the labor defendants here, preferring to endure the hardships which the dispute then entailed, will not 'settle' now, when, with no assistance whatever, except the enforcement of its right to operate without unlawful interference, it has built up a working force greater than that from which those 'employes' of last May seceded. The circumstances force the court to find, as we do, that no 'employes' not actually at work in the plant of the Overland are now entitled to special consideration of this court; that those who, because of adherence to their own ideas of how their late employer's business should be conducted, have chosen to remain off the Overland pay roll for more than seven months, no longer are entitled to be called 'employes' of this company; that no dispute, such as existed in May and June last, longer continues between the Overland and any persons entitled to be considered as the company's employes. We cannot recognize the right of individuals to prolong, long after its substance has fled, a labor controversy, and to demand that it be accorded special consideration as a real and substantial industrial dispute, with advantages to them derivable from a law said to discriminate in favor of their class if certain conditions exist.

"The situation on the picket lines established by the court now suggests nothing more real, dignified, or effective than a heckling and nagging of employes who enter the plant, some of whom are exhibiting a natural impatience with the futile and irritating activities of the pickets. The court's observation suggests that the time has come when the semblance of indorsement of picketing, which may seem to exist in the fact that it proceeds under this court's order, should be removed. We ought not to leave a record open to the imputation that activities which amount to mere teasing of the company and its employes is indorsed by the court. We are impressed with the feeling, substantiated by reports which come to us, that at any time the annoyance which picketing naturally gives to the employes of the company may be resented by the latter, and the court may therefore be called upon to consider some conflict between pickets and workmen, on the theory that the former should be protected by the court; in fact, that proposition has been advanced several times in the past. The court owes it as a duty to itself, therefore, to relieve the record of the imputation that picketing, under present conditions, is sanctioned by the court, preserving to the defendants those rights which they undoubtedly have without specific judicial grant—that liberty of action and speech at all times and places which is ordered by law. As we understand the spirit of our institutions, no other variety of freedom or liberty is enjoyed by any one."

Mode of interference with employees.—Where an electric railway company makes nonmembership in a union a condition of employment in its contract with its various employees, union organizers who undertake to interfere with such contract will be enjoined from doing so, where they attempt such interference not by "recommending, or advising, or persuading" the employees to break their contract and stop the work in which they are engaged by any lawful or peaceful means, but by threats, opprobrious epithets, and insults, to such an extent that their actions necessitate the placing of a military guard on the company's cars. Montgomery v. Pacific Electric R. Co., (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1919) 259 Fed. 382, 169 C. C. A. 398. The court said:

"With the contract between the complainant company and its employes the appellants Montgomery and Farquharson in their respective capacity, and others acting with them, undertook to interfere, not by 'recommending, or advising, or persuading' such employes to break their contract and stop the work in which they were engaged by any peaceful or lawful means, but by threats, opprobrious epithets, and insults, to such an extent that it became necessary for the commanding officer of the United States Submarine Base at San Pedro to give public warning to all persons concerned against any interference, or attempt to interfere, or attempt to obstruct the free passage of freight or passenger trains or trolley cars to or from San Pedro and the Outer Harbor there, and to actually put naval guards on each car to enforce his command. Surely nothing more need be said to show the absurdity of the pretension that the appellants' interference with the existing contract between the complainant company and its employees was not that peaceful, lawful recommending, advising, or persuading the latter to cease work and terminate their employment, permitted by the provisions of the act of Congress of October 15, 1914 (38 Stat. 730)."

III. Construction and sufficiency of indictment.

V. Special pleas in bar.

III. CONSTRUCTION AND SUFFICIENCY OF INDICTMENT (p. 161)

Construction of indictment.—Upon a writ of error under the Criminal Appeals Act the Supreme Court has no authority to revise the mere interpretation of an indictment and is confined to ascertaining whether the court, in a case under review, erroneously construed the statute. U. S. v. Schrader, (1920) 252 U. S. 85, 40 S. Ct. 251, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, following U. S. v. Colgate, (1919) 250 U. S. 300, 39 S. Ct. 465, 63 U. S. (L. ed.) 992, 7 A. L. R. 443.

V. SPECIAL PLEAS IN BAR (p. 152)

A ruling taking the form of a grant of a motion to quash an indictment on the ground that the charges, having been submitted to a previous grand jury which failed to indict, were resubmitted to a later grand jury by the federal district attorney without leave of court first obtained, is a "decision or judgment sustaining a special plea in bar when the defendant has not been put in jeopardy," within the meaning of this Act, granting the government a right to review in a criminal case. U. S. v. Thompson, (1920) 251 U. S. 407, 40 S. Ct. 289, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —.

I. Necessity of compliance with statute.

1. In general.
3. Excuse for delay.

I. NECESSITY OF COMPLIANCE WITH STATUTE

1. In General (p. 161)

An appeal was dismissed as not prosecuted in time where the decree was entered on June 14, the petition for appeal, the assignments of error, and the bond were not filed until December 16, the appeal was allowed and the order signed on the latter date, and the matter was not presented to any judge before that date. Farmers' State Bank v. Thompson, (C. C. A. 5th Cir. 1919) 261 Fed. 166.

3. Excuse for Delay (p. 162)

"Delay in the mail is no excuse." Farmers' State Bank v. Thompson, (C. C. A. 5th Cir. 1919) 261 Fed. 166, where, dismissing an appeal because not perfected within six months, the court said:

"Appellants seek to excuse the delay on the grounds that Judge Meek, judge of the District Court for the Northern District of Texas, was ill and could not be reached to present the papers, and that they were mailed to Circuit Judge Batts, who was designated to hold the District Court in the Northern District of Texas, in time, had the mail been promptly delivered. As to this it is sufficient to say that the District Court is always open for the filing of pleadings, and the appeal could have been allowed by Judge Ervin, who tried the case under proper designation, or by any Circuit Judge. Judicial Code, § 132."

Vol. VI, p. 163, sec. 997. [First ed., vol. IV, p. 605.]

XI. FILING OF ASSIGNMENT OF ERRORS (p. 167)

Sufficiency of assignment of error.—In J. M. Radford Grocery Co. v. Haynie, (C. C. A. 5th Cir. 1919) 261 Fed. 349, an assignment of error based upon an exception to a part of the charge given by the court was disregarded because of a noncompliance with the requirement of rule 11 of that court that:

"When the error alleged is to the charge of the court, the assignment of errors shall set out the part referred to in totidem verbis whether it be in instructions given or in instructions refused."

X. DAMAGES AND COSTS (p. 191)

Foreclosure suit.—Where a supersedeas bond causes the postponement of a foreclosure sale for nearly a year, the plaintiff is entitled, as a part of his damage, to interest on the proceeds of the sale during the period of the delay. He should also be allowed the amount of taxes on the property, the payment of which was necessitated by the delay caused by the supersedeas bond, and the amount paid for readvertising the sale of the property. Graysonia-Nashville Lumber Co. v. Goldman, (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1919) 260 Fed. 600, 171 C. C. A. 364. In discussing the amount of damages on such a bond, the court said:

"The next question for consideration is the amount of damages which the plaintiff was entitled to recover on the supersedeas bond. When that bond was given the sale under the foreclosure decree had been advertised to take place on July 10, 1917. The supersedeas bond caused the postponement of that sale until April 29, 1918, when the property was sold for $250,000, which was but little more than half of the amount due on the bonds which the property was mortgaged to secure. If the sale had been on July 10, 1917, the plaintiff could and probably would have obtained interest on this $250,000 at 6 per cent. per annum during this delay. The court accordingly allowed him interest during this time as a part of his damages for the delay. The bond is in the usual form, and is conditioned that the Graysonia Company shall answer all damages and costs, if it fails to make its appeal good. It was given and approved under rule No. 13 of this court, which specifies just damages for delay, costs, and interest on the appeal among the matters to be secured by such bonds. Why was not this interest among the damages the plaintiff suffered by the delay?

"Counsel for the Graysonia Company answer, because plaintiff received about $26,000 above costs and disbursements out of the rents and profits of the mortgaged property which accrued during this stay, and therefore he lost nothing, but gained much, thereby. But this $26,000 was a part of the fund deposited in the registry under the order of October 24, 1916. It was the proceeds of the sale of the merchantable timber cut and purchased by the Allen Company, and there is no evidence that any of this $26,000, or, if any of it, how much of it, was derived from the rentals. The record makes it probable that none of it was—that the rentals were less than the amounts paid out of the fund for allowances and disbursements. As, therefore, this $26,000 must be deemed to have been the proceeds of the timber cut and removed the plaintiff gained nothing therefrom. This sale and removal of the timber presumptively diminished the value of the mortgaged property by the amount paid for the timber. Presumptively the mortgaged property would have sold for $26,000 more on July 10, 1917, before this $26,000 worth of timber was removed therefrom, than it did sell for on April 29, 1918, after its removal, and the result is that the plaintiff lost the interest on the $250,000 by the delay.

"It is said that it was error to allow this interest, because interest is never allowed on any decree that is not for a sum of money or is silent as to interest, and that there was no judgment for money against the Graysonia Company, and no provision for interest in the decree of foreclosure. But this $12,040 is not interest on any judgment, or on the decree, or on the amount thereof. It is the legal damages the plaintiff sustained because the Graysonia Company delayed his receipt of the $250,000 derived from the sale from June 10, 1917, to April 29, 1918. Other arguments against this allowance are that interest is never allowed on an unliquidated amount, and that the Supreme Court in Kountze v. Hotel Co., 107 U. S. 391, 2 Sup. Ct. 911, 27 L. Ed. 609, held that interest on the debt adjudged due by the decree, which accrues pending the appeal, is not properly assignable as damages caused by the appeal bond, but that such damage as arises from the delay incident to the appeal is such damage. This $12,040, however, is not interest on any unliquidated amount. The amount was liquidated by the sale, and this $12,040 is the amount which the court below found to be the damage resulting from the postponement of the plaintiff's receipt of the $250,000 produced by the sale from July 10, 1917, to April 29, 1918. In making this finding it undoubtedly measured this damage, as it lawfully might in the absence of other pertinent evidence, by the legal and prevalent rate of interest commonly paid for the use of money. Nor was this $12,040 the interest on the debt held inadmissible as the measure of the damages on the supersedeas bond in the Kountze Case. The debt was $471,495.30. It was not interest on that amount. On the other hand, it was one of the damages for delay incident to the appeal held to be allowable by the court in the Kountze Case, and there was no error in its allowance."

Granite Sav. Bank, etc., Co.*, (C. C. A. 4th Cir. 1911) 261 Fed. 75.

IV. FINDINGS AND REVIEW

1. In General (p. 211)

Where the record contains no finding of facts and no opinion of the court below, so that there is nothing but the decrees it rendered to indicate its findings of fact or its conclusions of law, the legal presumption is that its findings and conclusions were right, and they ought not to be disturbed by an appellate court, unless the record proves that the District Court made a material mistake of fact or committed a serious error of law. Shearer v. Farmers' L. Ins. Co., (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1919) 262 Fed. 861.

2. General Findings (p. 212)

Sufficiency of complaint.—The review where the finding is general is limited to the sufficiency of the complaint and the ruling in the progress of the trial, if any be preserved, on questions of law. Kindred v. Black, (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1919) 257 Fed. 302, 168 C. C. A. 386.

Sufficiency of evidence.—Where a trial by jury was waived and the record does not show that there was any request by the plaintiff for a finding of facts or for a declaration of law in its favor, the sufficiency of the evidence is a question that cannot be raised by it on appeal. U. S. v. Bowling, (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1919) 261 Fed. 657.

3. *General and Special Findings*a. In General (p. 214)

The findings of the court being like a verdict of a jury, the appellate court may review only errors in the admission or rejection of evidence and if the findings are special, whether such findings support the judgment. Where, however, there is no assignment of error covering these points, there is nothing for the appellate court to review. Cassleton First Nat. Bank v. National City Bank (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1919) 261 Fed. 912.

Where a chancellor has considered conflicting evidence, and made his findings and decrees thereon, they must be deemed to be presumptively correct by the Circuit Court of Appeals, and unless an obvious error has intervened in the application of the law, or some serious mistake has been made in the consideration of the evidence, they will not be disturbed. Benedict v. Setters, (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1919) 261 Fed. 492.

Where there is a conflict of testimony and the credibility of witnesses is involved, the finding of the District Court will not be disturbed, unless it is clearly wrong. Where, however, there is no conflict and the finding is a conclusion from admitted facts, the rule does not apply. Dunn v. Trefry, (C. C. A. 1st Cir. 1919) 260 Fed. 147, 171 C. C. A. 183.

VI. RULINGS AND EXCEPTIONS

1. Necessity (p. 221)

To same effect as original annotation, see Ford v. U. S., (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1919) 260 Fed. 657, 171 C. C. A. 421; Flour City Ornamental Iron Works v. Schuler, (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1919) 260 Fed. 662, 171 C. C. A. 426.

Where by stipulation a case is tried by the court without a jury, and no exceptions are taken to any ruling of the court nor any request made for special findings, the judgment must be affirmed, unless the complaint fails to state a cause of action. Northern Idaho, etc., Co. v. A. L. Jordan Lumber Co., (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1920) 262 Fed. 765.

In Haynes Automobile Co. v. Kansas Casualty, etc., Co., (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1919) 261 Fed. 347, affirming a judgment in an action at law tried by the court upon waiver of a jury, the court said:

"The record discloses no objection or exception to any ruling or proposed ruling of the court below, no request or motion for any judgment for the plaintiff on the ground that there was no substantial evidence in support of the defense which the court below found to be proved, or for any declaration of law to that effect, or to any other effect. Since in an action at law this is exclusively a court for the review of errors of law of the court below, and a record of an objection and exception to any ruling on evidence or an exception to the refusal of a request for a ruling or declaration of law denied is ordinarily indispensable to a review by this court, there is nothing in the record or briefs in this case to require the consideration or decision of any question by this court. Wear v. Imperial Window Glass Co., 224 Fed. 60, 63, 139 C. C. A. 622, 625, and cases there cited. Notwithstanding this fact, the court has examined the record and learned that the only important question of law in this case that might have been presented for review was whether or not there was any substantial evidence to sustain the finding of the court, and in order to be certain that no injustice results to the plaintiff in error, has attentively listened to the arguments of counsel, read their briefs and the evidence, and become convinced that there was such evidence before the court below, and that there was no error in the trial of this case."

Remanding case with instructions.—Error below in overruling the objection of Treasury officials in a suit by attorneys against their client and such officials, that a valid act of Congress prohibited the recovery sought, requires that a judgment for plaintiffs be reversed upon the appeals of such officials, and that the cause be remanded, with directions to dismiss the bill as to them. Newman v. Moyers, 253 U. S. 182, 40 S. Ct. 478, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, reversing in part (1917) 47 App. Cas. (D. C.) 102, Ann. Cas. 1918E 528.

Effect of dismissal of appeal for want of prosecution.—A dismissal of an appeal for want of prosecution will remit the cause to the lower court in the same condition as before the appeal was taken, and will leave the lower court free to take appropriate action to prevent itself from being used as an instrument in illegality. Newman v. Moyers, (1920) 253 U. S. 182, 40 S. Ct. 478, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, reversing in part (1917) 47 App. Cas. (D. C.) 102, Ann. Cas. 1918E 528.

II. AFFIRMANCE BY CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS (p. 230)

Affirming a decree for the United States against the surety on a contractor's bond, in a suit for the benefit of subcontractor claimants, the court said: "Taxable costs cannot be made to reimburse the claimants for the expenses of briefs and oral arguments on appeal. Paragraph 3 of rule 28 should be applied. The decree is affirmed, with interest and costs, and with damages in the sum of 10 per cent. of the face of the claims." Chicago Bonding, etc., Co. v. U. S., (C. C. A. 7th Cir. 1919) 261 Fed. 266.

Vol. VI, p. 230, sec. 1011. [First ed., vol. IV, p. 624.]

V. QUESTIONS OF FACT AND EVIDENCE (p. 231)

In general.—To same effect as first paragraph of original annotation, see O. C. Barber Min., etc., Co. v. Brown Hoisting Machinery Co., (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1919) 258 Fed. 1, 169 C. C. A. 139.

Motion for judgment on issues.—Where a case is tried by the court without a jury, a request or motion to adjudge either all the issues or some specific issues in favor of the requesting party or against the adverse party, must make apparent that it is based on the ground that there is no substantial evidence to sustain any other conclusion in order to be reviewable. Raymer v. Netherwood, (C. C. A. 7th Cir. 1919) 257 Fed. 284, 168 C. C. A. 368.

Weight of evidence.—Where there was evidence proper for the consideration of the jury, the objection that the verdict was against the weight of the evidence cannot be considered. Erie R. Co. v. Connors, (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1919) 261 Fed. 303.

Questions as to verdict being excessive.—Objection that the damages awarded by the jury were excessive cannot be considered where there was evidence to support the verdict. Erie R. Co. v. Connors, (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1919) 261 Fed. 303.

Vol. VI, p. 234, sec. 10. [First ed., vol. IV, p. 428.]

I. DISPOSITION OF CASE ON APPEAL OR WRIT OF ERROR (p. 235)

Remand with leave to amend, etc.—The action of a federal Circuit Court of Appeals in simply reversing the judgment of a District Court against a collector of internal revenue for the recovery back of certain taxes paid under protest without remanding the case for a new trial, is not open to attack in the federal Supreme Court where there was no objection made to that action and no request for a remand of the case,—especially where there was nothing to retry, the case involving only propositions of law. Forged Steel Wheel Co. v. Lewellyn, (1920) 251 U. S. 511, 40 S. Ct. 285, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (C. C. A. 3d Cir. 1919) 258 Fed. 533, 169 C. C. A. 473.

1918 Supp., p. 401, sec. 1.

Constitutionality of amendment saving remedies under State Workmen's Compensation Law.—This amendment, so far as it provides that "rights and remedies under the workmen's compensation law of any state" are saved to claimants, is unconstitutional. Knickerbocker Ice Co. v. Stewart, (1920) 253 U. S. 149, 40 S. Ct. 439, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, reversing (1919) 226 N. Y. 302, 123 N. E. 382. See The Howell, (S. D. N. Y. 1919) 257 Fed. 578.

Retroactive effect of amendment.—It was held prior to the decision above, holding the amendment unconstitutional, that a state workmen's compensation law may not be applied to an injury sustained prior to the above amendment by a longshoreman while he was unloading a vessel lying in navigable waters. Peters v. Veasey, (1919) 251 U. S. 121, 40 S. Ct. 65, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, reversing (1918) 142 La. 1012, 77 So. 948. See to the same effect White v. John W. Cowper Co., (W. D. N. x. 1919) 260 Fed. 350.

Election of remedies by person injured.—Prior to the decision above, that the amendment was unconstitutional, it was held that a person injured, in a case of tort cognizable in admiralty, might elect whether to proceed in admiralty, at common law or under the provisions of the Workmen's Compensation Law, where it exists. In such case, if a settlement was made under the Workmen's Compensation Law in such a manner as to exclude any further recovery, that fact might be set up in defense, as courts of admiralty administer the broadest equity, and would not permit two recoveries for the same tort. Hogan v. Buja, (E. D. La. 1920) 262 Fed. 224. See further to the same effect Rohde v. Grant, Smith-Porter Ship Co., (D. C. Ore. 1920) 263 Fed. 204; Lund v. Griffiths, etc., Stevedoring Co., (1919) 109 Wash. 220, 183 Pac. 123.

1918 Supp., p. 411, sec. 2. [Writs of error, etc.]

II. Writ of error.

III. Certiorari.

II. WRIT OF ERROR (p. 412)

Validity of state statute or authority.—Writ of error, not certiorari, is the proper mode of reviewing, in the federal Supreme Court, a judgment of the highest court of a state upholding a state statute challenged as repugnant to the Federal Constitution. Kenney v. Supreme Lodge, etc., (1920) 252 U. S. 411, 40 S. Ct. 371, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, reversing (1918) 285 Ill. 188, 120 N. E. 631, 4 A. L. R. 964.

The mere objection to an exercise of authority under a state statute whose validity is not attacked cannot be made the basis of a writ of error from the federal Supreme Court to a state court since the amendment of September 6, 1916, to the Judicial Code, § 237. There must be a substantial challenge of the validity of the statute or authority upon the claim that it is repugnant to the Federal Constitution, treaties, or laws, so as to require the state court to decide the question of validity in disposing of the contention. Jett Bros. Distilling Co. v. Carrollton, (1920) 252 U. S. 1, 40 S. Ct. 255, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, dismissing writ of error to review (1917) 178 Ky. 561, 199 S. W. 37, wherein the court said: "Drawing in question the validity of a statute or authority as the basis of appellate review has long been a subject of regulation in statutes of the United States, as we had occasion to point out in United States ex rel. Champion Lumber Co. v. Fisher, 227 U. S. 445, 450, 451, 57 L. ed. 591, 593, 594, 33

Sup. Ct. Rep. 329. What is meant by the validity of a statute or authority was discussed by this court in Baltimore & P. R. Co. v. Hopkins, 130 U. S. 210, 32 L. ed. 908, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 503, in which this court, speaking by Mr. Chief Justice Fuller, said: 'Whenever the power to enact a statute as it is by its terms, or is made to read by construction, is fairly open to denial and denied, the validity of such statute is drawn in question, but not otherwise.' And the chief justice added, upon the authority of Millingar v. Hartupée, 6 Wall. 258, 261, 262, 18 L. ed. 829, 830, that the word 'authority' stands upon the same footing.

"In order to give this court jurisdiction by writ of error under amended § 237, Judicial Code, it is the validity of the statute or authority which must be drawn in question. The mere objection to an exercise of authority under a statute whose validity is not attacked cannot be made the basis of a writ of error from this court. There must be a substantial challenge of the validity of the statute or authority, upon a claim that it is repugnant to the Federal Constitution, treaties, or laws, so as to require the state court to decide the question of validity in disposing of the contention. Champion Lumber Co. v. Fisher, supra, and cases cited."

Overruling petition for rehearing as basis for writ.—The overruling by the highest court of a state without opinion of a petition for rehearing cannot be made the basis of a writ of error from the federal Supreme Court. Jett Bros. Distilling Co. v. Carrollton, (1920) 252 U. S. 1, 40 S. Ct. 255, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, dismissing writ of error to review, (1917) 178 Ky. 561, 199 S. W. 37.

Federal question set up in petition for rehearing.—To give the federal Supreme Court jurisdiction to review the judgment of a state court upon writ of error, the essential federal question must have been specially set up there at the proper time and in the proper manner, and if first presented in a petition for rehearing to the state court of last resort, it comes too late, unless the court actually entertains the petition and passes upon the point. Godchaux Co. v. Estopinal, (1919) 251 U. S. 179, 40 S. Ct. 116, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) — (dismissing writ of error to review) (1918) 142 La. 812, 77 So. 640, wherein the court said: "The record fails to disclose that plaintiff in error at any time or in any way challenged the validity of the state constitutional amendment because of conflict with the Federal Constitution until it applied for a rehearing in the supreme court. That application was refused without more. Here the sole error assigned is predicated upon such supposed conflict; and, unless that point was properly raised below, a writ of error cannot bring the cause before us."

See to the same effect Mergenthaler Linotype Co. v. Davis, (1920) 251 U. S. 256, 40

S. Ct. 133, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, dismissing writ of error to review State v. Robertson, (1917) 271 Mo. 475, 196 S. W. 1132.

The assertion of a title, right, privilege, or immunity under the Federal Constitution may afford the basis for a writ of certiorari from the federal Supreme Court to a state court, but it constitutes no ground for a writ of error. Mergenthaler Linotype Co. v. Davis, (1920) 251 U. S. 256, 40 S. Ct. 133, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, dismissing writ of error to review State v. Robertson, (1917) 271 Mo. 475, 196 S. W. 1132.

Constitutionality of amendment saving remedies under state Workmen's Compensation Law.—This amendment so far as it provides that "rights and remedies under the Workmen's Compensation Law of any Defect in pleading.—An indictment under the Act of Feb. 13, 1913, ch. 50 (4 Fed. Stat. Ann. (2d ed.) 573), which charged the defendant with the receipt and possession of goods knowing that they had been stolen from a certain freight car, and that they were part of an interstate shipment contained in such car, was held sufficient in view of this statutory amendment and R. S. sec. 1025 (2 Fed. Stat. Ann. (2d ed.) 681), a criticism that it failed to charge that the goods were in fact so stolen being regarded as technical and unsubstantial. Grandi v. U. S., (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1920) 262 Fed. 123.

Error in instruction.—An error in the court's charge, which does not cause substantial injury to the defendant, is not sufficient ground for reversal of the judgment under this amendment. Doremus v. U. S., (C. C. A. 5th Cir. 1920) 262 Fed. 849.

Consideration of ruling not excepted to is not authorized. Storgard v. France, etc., Steamship Corp., (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1920) 263 Fed. 545. The court said: "We do not construe the section as authorizing appellate courts to decide on the whole record whether exceptions have been taken or not. The mischief it was intended to correct is just the opposite of overlooking defects due to negligence, ignorance, or inadvertence, viz., the reversal of judgments because of errors, defects, or exceptions which, though raised with technical accuracy, do not affect substantial right."

Ordering judgment for the party entitled thereto on reversal is not authorized by this section. New York L. Ins. Co. v. Anderson, (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1920) 263 Fed. 527.

LABOR

Assignment of claim to government.—Neither the taking over and the operation of the railroads by the government nor the order of the Director General of Railroads requiring that an action to recover damages against a government controlled railroad be brought directly against the said Director General of Railroads deprived the United States Employees' Compensation Commission of the power to require a beneficiary to assign his right of action to the United States or prosecute said action as a condition to settlement. 31 Op. Atty-Gen. 365.

1918 Supp., p. 437, sec. 32.

Decision of questions arising under act.—Under this section the United States Employees' Compensation Commission has power, when the question is properly presented, to decide whether employees of the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation, or other persons, are entitled to the benefits of the provisions of said Act. (1918) 31 Op. Atty.-Gen. 252, wherein it was said: "The commission was likewise empowered to 'decide all questions arising under this Act.' Terms so familiar need no definition, and it is quite obvious that they are to be taken in their ordinary and colloquial meaning. To decide is to render judgment, or, as the Supreme Judicial Court of Massachusetts in Commonwealth v. Anthes, 5 Gray 185, 253, put it, 'to decide' includes the power and right to deliberate, to weigh the reasons for and against, to see which preponderate, and to be governed by that preponderance'; while all questions which springing from the act involve its construction or application necessarily arise under it.

"It is the commission, therefore, which must determine whether the claimant has or has not been injured while in the performance of his duty or as a result of his own willful misconduct or intoxication; whether his disability is total or partial in character; whether upon review the amount awarded shall be increased or diminished; how it shall be apportioned among the beneficiaries; and when it may be commuted for cash, etc. But before any of these questions can come on for disposal it must first of all appear that the claimant is an employee of the United States, and this basic fact the commission must decide at the very threshold.

"I have no hesitation, therefore, in concluding that the commission has power when the question is properly presented to decide whether employees of the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation, or other persons, are entitled to the benefits of the provisions of the act.

"To this general conclusion, however, certain qualifying considerations may properly be added. Section 36 of the act provides with somewhat more detail than elsewhere appears for the manner in which the conclusions of the commission shall be delivered. This section is as follows:

"The commission, upon consideration of the claim presented by the beneficiary, and the report furnished by the immediate superior and the completion of such investigation as it may deem necessary, shall determine and make a finding of facts thereon and make an award for or against payment of the compensation provided for in this Act. Compensation when awarded shall be paid from the employees' compensation fund." (39 Stat. 749.)

"The propriety, therefore, of any expression by the commission or its individual members as to the rights of any persons or class of persons in advance of the presentation of a specific claim may well be doubted. Such an expression would certainly be informal in character, could give rise to no substantive rights in any individual, and could have no binding future force upon the commission or its members. In view of the diversities which constantly appear among cases which upon first impression seem of the same general character the unwisdom of dealing with them in the mass would seem to be apparent."

1918 Supp., p. 438, sec. 40.

Assistant United States district attorney as "employee."—An assistant United States district attorney is not an employee of the United States. (1918) 31 Op. Atty.-Gen. 201, wherein it was said:

"The chief functions of a district attorney are to conduct proceedings in the grand jury room and prosecutions in the court. When they become too heavy for one man, the Attorney General is authorized to appoint an assistant district attorney. He is not appointed merely to assist the district attorney in the discharge of his duties. He is appointed an assistant district attorney and takes upon himself the discharge of some of the duties that would otherwise be discharged by the district attorneys. When he appears in the grand jury room or in court he appears with precisely the same authority the district attorney would have if present. Clearly, Congress has created an office to be filled by the Attorney General when required by the public needs, and the incumbent is an officer in the strictest sense."

Surgeon in Public Health Service as "civil employee."—Dr. von Ezdorf, a surgeon in the Public Health Service, having been appointed by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, was an officer of the United States, and therefore not within the operation of the federal Employees' Compensation Act of September 7, 1916 (39 Stat. 742), which provides "compensation for employees of the United States suffering injuries while in the performance of their duties." (1917) 31 Op. Atty.-Gen. 184, wherein it was said:

"The act, in section 1, provides broadly that the United States shall pay compensation 'for the disability or death of an employee' as specified in that and following sections. And in section 40 it is provided that 'the term "employee" includes all civil employees of the United States and of the Panama Railroad Co.' Clearly, the word 'civil' was intended to exclude those employed in the military and naval service. And the question is what civilians in the service of the United States are described by the word 'employee.' In its broadest sense, an employee is anyone who is engaged in the service of or is employed by another. In this sense, all who serve the Government, from the highest official to a laborer employed by the day, are employees. But usually it is applied only to clerks, workmen, laborers, etc., and but rarely to the higher officers of a corporation or government. In the usual acceptance of the term, it is understood to apply to those, other than officers, in the service of the Government. No one would think of calling a Cabinet officer, a Senator, or a Justice of the Supreme Court an employee of the Government. They are all civilians in the service of the Government. They can be distinguished from employees only upon the ground that they are officials or officers and, therefore, not employees as that word is commonly understood. In other words, 'there are two classes of public servants, officers, or those whose functions appertain to the administration of Government, and employees, or those whose employment is merely contractual.' Moll v. Sbisá, 25 South. 141. Ordinarily, without doubt, the term in question is understood as including only the latter class. The most that can be claimed is that it is possible to use that term in a broader sense, and that, therefore, the intent of Congress must be determined from the context and by applying the accepted rules of construction. In the present case, the actual context gives but little, if any, help, for no qualifying words are used. The most that can be said is that the act, as a whole, shows that the chief concern of Congress was those whose compensation was small. No one is excluded because receiving compensation in excess of $100. But the monthly benefits received are in no case to exceed two-thirds of a salary of $100 a month.

"It is always permissible to consider the sense in which Congress has been accustomed to use a given word. I am not aware that it has ever been held that the term 'employee' of the Government in an act of Congress includes officers. And Congress has evidently understood that, if it intended to include officers, it must name them. Thus, the expression 'officers, clerks, and employees' or 'officers and employees' occurs in numerous statutes."

Application to wages of Panama Canal employee.—This provision did not apply to the wages of employees of the Panama canal paid under authority of sec. 4 of the Panama Canal Act of Aug. 24, 1912 (see vol. IX, p. 111). (1918) 31 Op. Atty-Gen. 328.

LIMITATION OF VESSEL OWNERS' LIABILITY

Vol. VI, p. 336, sec. 4283. [First ed., vol. IV, p. 839.]

VI. MEASURE OF LIABILITY

1. Value of Vessel (p. 348)

"Vessel" as including float and disabled tug lashed to tug causing collision.—The value of a car float and a disabled tug lashed to either side of another tug which was actually responsible for a collision cannot, although they were all owned by the same person, be included, when limiting liability, conformably to this section, which provides that the liability of the owner of any vessel for any injury by collision shall in no case exceed the value of the interest of such vessel. Liverpool, etc., Steam Nav. Co. v. Brooklyn Eastern Dist. Terminal, (1919) 251 U. S. 48, 40 S. Ct. 66, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) — (affirming (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1917) 250 Fed. 1021, 162 C. C. A. 664) wherein the court said: "This is a libel in admiralty brought by the petitioner against the respondent for a collision with the petitioner's steamship Vauban while it was moored at a pier in Brooklyn. The respondent does not deny liability but claims the right to limit it under Rev. Stats. §§ 4283, 4284 and 4285, to the value of the vessel that caused the damage. The moving cause was the respondent's steam tug In- trepid which was proceeding up the East River, with a car float loaded with railroad cars lashed to its port side and on its starboard side a disabled tug, both belonging to the respondent. By a stipulation dated August 3, 1917, it was agreed that the damage sustained was $28,036.98 with $5,539.84 interest. The value of the tug Intrepid was found to be $5,750, and the liability of the respondent was limited by the District Court to that sum with interest. The Circuit Court of Appeals affirmed the decree without an opinion. 250 Fed. 1021, 162 C. C. A. 664. The case is brought here on the question whether the value of the whole flotilla should not have been included in the decree.

"The car float was the vessel that came into contact with the Vauban, but as it was a passive instrument in the hands of the Intrepid that fact does not affect the question of responsibility. The James Gray v. The John Fraser, 21 How. 184, 16 L. Ed. 106; The J. P. Donaldson, 167 U. S. 599, 603, 604, 17 Sup. Ct. 951, 42 L. Ed. 292; The Eugene F. Moran, 212 U. S. 466, 474, 475, 29 Sup. Ct. 339, 53 L. Ed. 600; Union Steamship Co. v. Owners of the Aracan, L. R. 6 P. C. 127. The rule is not changed by the ownership of the vessels. The John G. Stevens, 170 U. S. 113, 123, 18 Sup. Ct. 544, 42 L. Ed. 969; The W. G. Mason, 142 Fed. 913, 917, 74 C. C. A.

83: The Eugene F. Moran, 212 U. S. 466, 475, 29 Sup. Ct. 339, 53 L. Ed. 600; L. R. 6 P. C. 127, 133. These cases show that for the purposes of liability the passive instrument of the harm does not become one with the actively responsible vessel by being attached to it. If this were a proceeding in rem it may be assumed that the car float and disabled tug would escape, and none the less that they were lashed to the Intrepid and so were more helplessly under its control than in the ordinary case of a tow.

"It is said, however, that when you come to limiting liability the foregoing authorities are not controlling—that the object of the statute is 'to limit the liability of vessel owners to their interest in the adventure.' (The Main v. Williams, 152 U. S. 122, 131, 14 Sup. Ct. 486, 488, 38 L. Ed. 381), and that the same reason that requires the surrender of boats and apparel requires the surrender of the other instrumentalities by means of which the tug was rendering the services for which it was paid. It can make no difference, it is argued, whether the cargo is carried in the hold of the tug or is towed in another vessel. But that is the question, and it is not answered by putting it. The respondent answers the argument with the suggestion that if sound it applies a different rule in actions in personam from that which, as we have said, governs suits in rem. Without dwelling upon that, we are of opinion that the statute does not warrant the distinction for which the appellant contends."

Determination of value of vessel—Tug and tow used together.—Where both a ship and a tug have been held in fault for a collision between the former and a car float in tow of the latter, the owner of the tug and float may limit its liability to the value of the tug. The Begona II, (D. C. Md. 1919) 259 Fed. 919, wherein it was said: "The facts of the collision out of which this case arises were told in an opinion handed down some time since. (D. C.) 241 Fed. 285. Both the ship and the tug were held in fault for the collision between the former and a car float in tow of the latter. Both tug and float belonged to the Atlantic Transport Company. It seeks to limit its liability to the value of the tug. The owners of the damaged cargo on the ship say that it must surrender the float as well.

"In the Sixth and Ninth circuits their contention would prevail. The Columbia, 73 Fed. 226, 19 C. C. A. 436; Shipowners' & Merchants' Tugboat v. Hammond Lumber Co., 218 Fed. 161, 134 C. C. A. 575; Thompson Towing & Wrecking Ass'n v. McGregor, 207 Fed. 209, 124 C. C. A. 479. In the Second circuit it would not. The Transfer No. 21, 248 Fed. 469, 160 C. C. A. 469. None of the other six Circuit Courts of Appeals appear to have passed upon it. In The Erie Lighter, 250 Fed. 490, District (now Circuit) Judge Haight, of the New Jersey district, followed the rule prevailing in the Second circuit.

"Counsel for the owners of the tug and float claim that the principles laid down by the Circuit Court of Appeals for the First Circuit in The Coastwise, 233 Fed. 1, 147 C. C. A. 71, would logically require a like ruling there; but that is not absolutely certain, in view of the delicacy of the line which is sometimes drawn on this question even by the same court, as, for example, by the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit between The W. G. Mason, 142 Fed. 913, 74 C. C. A. 83, and The Transfer No. 21, supra, on the one side, and The Anthracite, 168 Fed. 693, 94 C. C. A. 179, on the other.

"The fact, of course, is that the question is an extremely close one. In the Second circuit, the owner of two vessels, jointly engaged for profit in the doing of a single piece of work, may limit his responsibility for the damage done by them to the value of that one which was in fault. The liability is said to be strictly in rem, and yet the result may be, as it was in The Transfer No. 21, supra, and in the instant case, that the thing which physically did the damage is not called upon to answer, either in itself or through its owner, while the other vessel, which itself was not in collision at all, is held solely liable, because, in the person of its navigator, it was adjudged blameworthy.

"Moreover, if The Anthracite is properly decided, it is not always necessary that the navigator shall be himself either technically master of the ship which is responsible for his acts, or even be on that ship at the time the fault was committed. It suffices if he is actually directing its movements, when he makes the mistake, and it does the damage. But is not the captain of a tug, which has a tow lashed to it, or, as in the case at bar, is towing a craft which has neither power nor rudder of its own, the only person which has any control over its movements? However that may be, what the Supreme Court said and held in The Eugene F. Moran, 212 U. S. 466, 29 Sup. Ct. 339, 53 L. Ed. 600, seems more in harmony with the practice in the Second circuit than with that prevailing in the Sixth and Ninth circuits.

"It follows that the owner of tug and float may limit its liability to the value of the former."

Vol. VI, p. 368, sec. 18. [First ed., vol. IV, p. 852.]

Collision with tow through negligence.—A tug owner, who has agreed to tow a vessel, may limit his responsibility under this section, when in the performance of the contract the tug negligently collides with and sinks the tow. The Soerstad, (S. D. N. Y. 1919) 257 Fed. 130, wherein the court said:

"The bald question raised by this case is whether a tug owner, who has agreed to tow a vessel, may limit his responsibility under section 18 of the Act of June 26, 1884, c. 121, when in performance of that contract the tug negligently collides with and sinks the tow. The libellant's position depends upon what it supposes to be the effect of Pendleton v. Benner Line, 246 U. S. 363, 38 Sup. Ct. 330, 62 L. Ed. 770, and Luckenbach v. McCahan Sugar Co., 248 U. S. 139, 39 Sup. Ct. 53, 63 L. Ed. —. In each of these cases the owner was held liable without limitation for breach of a covenant of seaworthiness in a charter which he personally signed. Hence it is reasoned the breach of any stipulation in a contract made by the owner personally must result in unlimited liability, whether or not the act which causes the damage be done with the privity of the owner.

"A warranty is a promise that a proposition of fact is true. Theoretically it is extremely difficult to interpret it otherwise than as a promise to make whole the warrantee, if the warranty turns out to be false, since a promise is normally a stipulation for some future conduct by the promisor. If it is so regarded, then clearly the breach of warranty is with the warrantor's privity, for by hypothesis he has deliberately refused to make whole the warrantee. However, it must be conceded that the law regards the breach as arising at once if the warranty be false, and the warrantee's loss as damages, not as a condition for the warrantor's performance. So viewed, the warrantor has misled the warrantee by falsely assuring him of the truth through the warranty, and the wrong consists of the assurance, the warrantee's reliance upon it, and his loss; just as in cases of deceit, except that no scienter is necessary. And so the action on warranty was originally 'a pure action of tort' (Ames, History of Assumpsit, 2 Harv. L. R. 1, 8), and arose a century before action on the case for assumpsit. The action sounded indeed in deceit (Y. B. 11 Ed. IV, 6, plac. 11), and it was not till 1778, in Stuart v. Wilkins, 3 Doug. 118, that assumpsit appears to have been used on a seller's warranty.

"Regarded in this way, which is probably the correct way historically, it follows inevitably that a breach of warranty should be held to be with the warrantor's privity, because all the elements of the cause of action are 'done, occasioned, or incurred' by him personally; that is to say, he personally gives the false assurance, he intends the warrantee to rely upon it, and the loss arises from the mistaken reliance, as he knows it will. Thus he personally occasions the loss. It is impossible to see how the Supreme Court could have held that knowledge of the falsity of the warranty was an element in the cause of action to which the warrantor must be privy. To have done so would have been in effect to treat the action as limited to one in fraud, not an action in warranty at all. The decisions, therefore, give no color to the libellant's position.

"Where, however, the promise, as a promise to tow a boat, involves the future conduct of the promisor, the loss is 'done, occasioned, or incurred,' not by the promisee and the promisee's reliance upon it, but by the failure to perform the act stipulated; and if that failure results without the knowledge or privity of the promisor, he is entitled to the immunity of the statute. It will so result when he delegates that performance, provided he selects such delegates as the contract permits, and the miscarriage results from their failure. Now the contract here obviously permitted the respondent to select for the towage any master whom he had good reason to suppose capable, and the breach occurred because that master did not do what the respondent promised to do. This breach was not 'done, occasioned, or incurred' with the respondent's privity, and its liability is limited.

"Perhaps all this analysis is unnecessary, for the opinion in Richardson v. Harmon, 222 U. S. 96, 32 Sup. Ct. 27, 56 L. Ed. 110, presupposes throughout that the act of 1884 includes contracts, and the logical consequence of the libellant's position is that no promisor can limit his liability. I have thought it, nevertheless, better to show just where the distinction lay, for the Supreme Court in Pendleton v. Benner Line, supra, certainly had no such far-reaching purpose as the libellant supposes, and there is not the faintest reason in principle to confuse that case, which follows necessarily upon an analysis of warranty, with the case at bar, which does not."

I. IN GENERAL (p. 378)

General average — Jettisoned cargo.—This section does not apply to a case where a portion of a vessel's cargo is jettisoned in order to lighten the vessel and save it from being a total loss. Under such circumstances the vessel owner is not exonerated by this section from liability for general average contribution in respect of the cargo jettisoned. The Ernestina, (C. C. A. 1st Cir. 1919) 259 Fed. 772, 170 C. C. A. 572, wherein it was said: "Clearly, the chief purposes of the Harter Act were to authorize or effect substantial changes in the relations between vessel owners as common carriers and cargo owners as shippers. But we are unable to believe that this act was intended to work a radical change in the relations of coadventurers arising out of a voluntary sacrifice in the common interest in order to save the ship and remaining cargo from a peril of the sea or from an act of God. The general principles underlying general average seem to us to put such a case as the one at bar, where no negligence, actual or imputable, is involved, outside the scope of the Harter Act. Ralli v. Troop, 157 U. S. 386, 15 Sup. Ct. 657, 39 L. Ed. 742. We find it impossible to believe that Congress intended to make it possible for the captain of the ship to sacrifice all or a large part of the cargo in order to save his ship, without any obligation on the part of the saved ship to contribute to the loss of the cargo owner. Only plain and unmistakable language would warrant a court in inferring a legislative purpose so inconsistent with the fundamental principles both of general average and of common carrier duty."

Seizure under legal process of the vessel exempts it from liability to carry freight received but not yet loaded. The Brunswick, (E. D. La. 1920) 263 Fed. 907.

II. PROPERLY MANNED AND EQUIPPED (p. 382)

Competency of pilot.—Where an accident to a tug and tow is due to the drunken condition of the pilot of the tug, the owners of the tug are not chargeable with any lack of care and diligence in employing him so as to prevent from limiting their liability, where it appears that he was a licensed pilot, that the owners made inquiries regarding him of his former employers, who recommended him, and that for more than a month prior to the accident his conduct was entirely satisfactory. The Ice King, (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1919) 261 Fed. 897.

IV. SEAWORTHY VESSEL (p. 384)

Defective boiler.—In an action to recover for injuries caused by an explosion of a ship's boiler, it appeared that the boiler was old and defective, and that it had not been properly repaired and inspected. It was held that the boiler was not in such safe and suitable condition as to warrant its use in the business in which the ship was engaged, but was unseaworthy prior to and at the time of the action, and that the owners of the vessel were not entitled to limit their liability. The Annie, (E. D. Va. 1919) 261 Fed. 797.

V. NAVIGATION OR MANAGEMENT OF SHIP (p. 389)

Knowledge of impending storm.—For the master of a small vessel to put to sea with knowledge of an approaching hurricane is negligence which will be attributed to the owners and preclude limitation. Texas, etc., Steamship Co. v. Parker, (C. C. A. 5th Cir. 1920) 263 Fed. 864. The court said: "The remaining question is whether the negligence of the master is to be attributed to the owners of the Pilot Boy, so as to prevent a limitation of liability or an exemption from liability under the Harter Act. Guyton testified that the Pilot Boy was owned by appellant, that he was manager of appellant, and that he had the management of the Pilot Boy, the loading of her cargo, and her movements. The evidence tended to show that he was in Galveston the day the Pilot Boy departed. He said he was present when the master telephoned the Weather Bureau. The evidence also tended to show that he told the master that the boat was loaded and to go ahead. Conceding that Guyton gave no order to the master to sail, and that the master had the responsibility of deciding, still the evidence tended to show that Guyton knew of the master's decision before the departure of the Pilot Boy, and, if it was a negligent one, knew of the master's negligence. Guyton's knowledge was that of his principal, the appellant, and established privity on the part of the owners, with the negligence of the master, and prevents their limiting their liability for the loss. The Benjamin Noble, 244 Fed. 98, 156 C. C. A. 523.

"The Pilot Boy may have been seaworthy for ordinary weather. She was not, because of her size and strength, a boat adapted to live out a hurricane. If she left her home port, when her master and manager knew, or should have known, that a tropical hurricane was approaching her path, dangerous for any kind of vessels to approach, and especially one of her limited size and resistance, then the owners would be responsible for her departure from her home port in an unseaworthy condition, in view of the weather she was likely to encounter, and could not claim the protection of the Harter Act."

Leaving hatches open is not an act connected with the management of the vessel. Andean Trading Co. v. Pacific Nav. Co., (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1920) 263 Fed. 559. The court said:

"The District Judge found that the damage must have been caused by sea water coming through the open hatches, but that leaving them open was an act of management of the vessel, within section 3 of the Harter Act, and because the Railroad Company had exercised due diligence to make the vessel seaworthy it was not liable. Accordingly he dismissed the libel. Section 3 of the Harter Act must be read in connection with section 1, which prohibits any provision in the bill of lading from relieving owners of liability for damage arising from any fault or failure in proper loading, stowage, custody, care, and proper delivery of cargo. For such negligence a common carrier cannot escape liability. The duty of proper care and custody continues after stowage of the cargo until delivery at destination. Acts of the master on the voyage, resulting in damage to cargo, may be either acts in the navigation and management of the vessel, under section 3, or in the care and custody of the cargo during the voyage, under section 1. For the first the owners are not liable, but for the latter they are.

"The ventilators had all been removed, and the only way to ventilate the cargo was to leave the hatches open in fine weather. When near New York the steamer ran into an easterly gale, and had to be hove to for several hours. The act of opening and closing the hatches related, not to the ship, nor to the ship and cargo, though primarily to the ship. It related primarily, and indeed exclusively, to the cargo. Therefore it was not an act of management of the vessel. The Germanic, 124 Fed. 1, 59 C. C. A. 521; Id., 196 U. S. 589, 25 Sup. Ct. 317, 49 L. Ed. 610. It was not an act, to use the language of the court in Knott v. Botany Mills, 179 U. S. 69, 74, 21 Sup. Ct. 30, 32 (45 L. Ed. 90), 'primarily connected with the navigation or the management of the vessel, and not with the cargo.' The District Judge disapproved the decision in The Jean Bart (D. C.) 197 Fed. 1002, which we think correctly construes the Harter Act."

MINERAL LANDS, MINES AND MINING

Vol. VI, p. 508, sec. 2318. [First ed., vol. V, p. 4.]

Generally.—"Public lands containing valuable mineral deposits are opened to exploration, occupation, and acquisition for mining purposes; and as an inducement to effective exploration the discoverer is given the right to locate a substantial area embracing his discovery, to hold the same and extract the mineral without payment of rent or royalty, so long as he puts one hundred dollars' worth of labor or improvements—called assessment work—upon the claim each year, and to demand and receive a patent at a small sum per acre after he has put five hundred dollars' worth of labor or improvements upon the claim.

"In advance of discovery an explorer in actual occupation and diligently searching for mineral is treated as a licensee or tenant at will, and no right can be initiated or acquired through a forcible, fraudulent, or clandestine intrusion upon his possession. But if his occupancy be relaxed, or be merely incidental to something other than a diligent search for mineral, and another enters peaceably, and not fraudulently or clandestinely, and makes a mineral discovery and location, the location so made is valid and must be respected accordingly. Belk v. Meagher, 104 U. S. 279, 287, 26 L. ed. 735, 738, 1 Mor. Min. Rep. 510; Union Oil Co. v. Smith, 249 U. S. 337, 346-348, 63 L. ed. 635, 640, 641, 39 Sup. Ct. Rep. 308, and cases cited.

"A location based upon discovery gives exclusive right of possession and enjoyment, is property in the fullest extent, is subject to sale and other forms of disposal, and, so long as it is kept alive by performance of the required annual assessment work, prevents any adverse location of the land. Gwillim v. Donnellan, 115 U. S. 45, 49, 29 L. ed. 348, 349, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1110, 15 Mor. Min. Rep. 482; Swanson v. Sears, 224 U. S. 180, 56 L. ed. 721, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 455.

"While the two kinds of location—lode and placer—differ in some respects, a discovery within the limits of the claim is equally essential to both. But to sustain a lode location the discovery must be of a vein or lode of rock in place, bearing valuable mineral (sec. 2320), and to sustain a placer location it must be of some other form of valuable mineral deposit (sec. 2329), one such being scattered particles of gold found in the softer covering of the earth. A placer discovery will not sustain a lode location, nor a lode discovery a placer location. As is said by Mr. Lindley, § 323: 'Gold occurs in veins of rock in place, and when so found the land containing it must be appropriated under the laws applicable to lodes. It is also found in placers, and when so found the land containing it must be appropriated under the laws applicable to placers;' and again, § 419: 'It is the mode of occurrence, whether in place or not in place [meaning in rock in place], which determines the manner in which it should be located.'

"Location is the act or series of acts whereby the boundaries of the claim are marked, etc., but it confers no right in the absence of discovery, both being essential to a valid claim. Nor does assessment work take the place of discovery, for the requirement relating to such work is in the nature of a condition subsequent to a perfected and valid claim and has 'nothing to do with locating or holding a claim before discovery.' Union Oil Co. v. Smith, supra, p. 350. In practice, discovery usually precedes location, and the statute treats it as the initial act. But, in the absence of an intervening right, it is no objection that the usual and statutory order is reversed. In such a case the location becomes effective from the date of discovery; but in the presence of an intervening right it must remain of no effect. Creede & C. Creek Min. & Mill Co. v. Uinta Tunnel Min. & Transp. Co., 196 U. S. 337, 348-351, 49 L. ed. 501, 508, 509, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 266, and cases cited; Union Oil Co. v. Smith, supra, p. 347.

"When an application for a patent to mineral land is presented at the local land office and an adverse claim is filed in response to the notice required by the statute (§ 2325), further proceedings upon the application must be suspended to await the determination by a court of competent jurisdiction of the question whether either party, and, if so, which, has the exclusive right to the possession arising from a valid and subsisting location. A suit appropriate to the occasion must be brought by the adverse claimant, and in that suit each party is deemed an actor and must show his own title, for the suit is 'in aid of the Land Department.' If neither establishes the requisite title the judgment must so declare. Rev. Stat. § 2326, Act March 3, 1881, chap. 140, 21 Stat. at L. 505, [6 Fed. Stat. Annot. 2d ed. p. 599]; Jackson v. Roby, 109 U. S. 440, 27 L. ed. 990, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep. 301; Perego v. Dodge, 163 U. S. 160, 167, 41 L. ed. 113, 118, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 971, 18 Mor. Min. Rep. 364; Brown v. Gurney, 201 U. S. 184, 190, 50 L. ed. 717, 720, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 509; Healey v. Rupp, 37 Colo. 25, 28, 80 Pac. 1015; Tonopah Fraction Min. Co. v. Douglass, 123 Fed. 936, 941. If final judgment be given in favor of either party,—whether the applicant for patent or the adverse claimant,—he may file in the land office a certified copy of the judgment, and then will be entitled, as respects the area awarded to him, to go forward with the patent proceedings and to have the judgment recognized and respected as a binding adjudication of his exclusive right to the possession. Rev. Stat. § 2336." Cole v. Ralph, (1920) 252 U. S. 286, 40 S. Ct. 321, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, reversing (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1918) 249 Fed. 81, 161 C. C. A. 133.

Vol. VI, p. 509, sec. 2319. [First ed., vol. V, p. 4.]

State statute as local custom.—"The laws of the United States with reference to the location of mining claims expressly recognize the validity of local mining regulations and customs governing locations, and state statutes are construed to have the same force and effect as such regulations." Stock v. Plunkett, (Cal. 1919) 183 Pac. 657.

Department rules not controlling.—General land department regulations are not controlling as to mining locations.

"These rules clearly refer only to contests arising out of entries of land initiated in a local land office and in which the contest also originated in that office. These rules have no application to mining claims, for the reason that mining locations are not initiated in any local land office of the government, but take their origin under authority of the United States statutes 'under regulations prescribed by law, and according to the local customs or rules of miners, in the several mining districts so far as the same are applicable and not inconsistent with the laws of the United States.'" Double Eagle

Min. Co. v. Hubbard, (Cal. App. 1919) 183 Pac. 282.

Number of claims.—There is no federal law or regulation made in pursuance thereof limiting the number of placer mining claims an individual or association of individuals may make. Fraud or wrongdoing, therefore, is not to be inferred or imputed solely because of the number of locations made in any particular case. U. S. v. California Midway Oil Co., (S. D. Cal. 1919) 259 Fed. 343.

Vol. VI, p. 512, sec. 2320. [First ed., vol. V, p. 8.]

III. DISCOVERY OF VEIN OR LODE (p. 517)

"Discovery of the vein or lode."—In U. S. v. Safe Invest. Gold Min. Co., (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1919) 258 Fed. 872, 169 C. C. A. 592, the court said regarding the expression "discovery of the vein or lode:"

"We do not think an extended discussion of the authorities cited is necessary. They clearly indicate that the expression 'discovery of the vein or lode' has no rigidly fixed meaning; and this, of necessity, owing to widely varying conditions to which the expression must be applied.

"In Erhardt v. Boaro, 113 U. S. 527, 5 Sup. Ct. 560, 28 L. Ed. 1113, the court, in speaking of the requisites of a valid location, said:

"There must be something beyond a mere guess on the part of the miner to authorize him to make a location which will exclude others from the ground, such as the discovery of the presence of the precious metals in it, or in such proximity to it as to justify a reasonable belief in their existence."

"In King v. Mining Co., 152 U. S. 222, 227, 14 Sup. Ct. 510, 511 (38 L. Ed. 419), the court, in speaking of section 2320, R. S., said it was 'in effect a declaration that locations resting simply upon a conjectural or imaginary existence of a vein or lode within their limits shall not be permitted. A location can only rest upon an actual discovery of the vein or lode.'

"In Chrisman v. Miller, 197 U. S. 313, 25 Sup. Ct. 468, 49 L. Ed. 770, the court said:

"When the controversy is between two mineral claimants the rule respecting the sufficiency of a discovery of mineral is more liberal than when it is between a mineral claimant and one seeking to make an agricultural entry, for the reason that where land is sought to be taken out of the category of agricultural lands the evidence of its mineral character should be reasonably clear, while in respect to mineral lands, in a controversy between claimants, the question is simply which is entitled to priority. . . . But even in such a case . . . there must be such a discovery of minerals as gives reasonable evidence of the fact either that there is a vein or lode carrying the precious mineral, or if it be claimed as placer ground that it is valuable for such mining."

"Lindley on Mines, § 336, cites approvingly the definition of Judge Hawley contained in Book v. Justice Mining Co., (C. C.) 58 Fed. 106, 120:

"When the locator finds rock in place, containing mineral, he has made a discovery, within the meaning of the statute, whether the rock or earth is rich or poor, whether it assays high or low. It is the finding of the mineral in the rock in place, as distinguished from float rock, that constitutes the discovery, and warrants the prospector in making a location of a mining claim."

Vol. VI, p. 523, sec. 2322. [First ed., vol. V, p. 13.]

III. EXTRALATERAL RIGHTS (p. 527)

Extent of right.—In Maine the proprietor of lands owns all of the soil, rock, ore, and other natural products lying directly beneath the surface. His boundaries are planes produced by projecting his boundary lines vertically downward and upward. But a different rule prevails in the case of mining claims derived from the public domain. The boundaries of such claims are governed by the so-called "apex law." Arizona Commercial Min. Co. v. Iron Cap Copper Co., (Me. 1920), 110 Atl. 429.

Vol. VI, p. 532, sec. 2323. [First ed., vol. V, p. 18.]

Tunnel site is a "mining property" within a state statute providing certain remedies against interference with such property. Primeau v. Acton, (Colo. 1919) 185 Pac. 255.

Vol. VI, p. 533, sec. 2324. [First ed., vol. V, p. 19.]

I. In general.
IV. Notice of location.

I. IN GENERAL (p. 535)

Necessity of compliance with statute.—The statutes, federal and state, provide the method by which the rights of the locator may be acquired, preserved and protected. If he has complied with these requirements, or substantially complied with them, his claim is protected from intrusion by others. But he does not withdraw his alleged claim from the public domain, nor deprive another of a right to locate upon the same ground, unless he has complied with the mining statutes or is in actual possession of the land." Blake v. Cavins, (1919) 25 N. M. 574, 185 Pac. 374, holding relocation notice to be invalid under state law.

IV. NOTICE OF LOCATION (p. 541)

Failure to comply with state law.—A notice of location which complies with the federal law and gives actual notice of the prior location is good though it is not dated as required by a state statute. Stock v. Plunkett, (Cal. 1919) 183 Pac. 657.

Vol. VI, p. 563, sec. 2326. [First ed., vol. V, p. 35.]

VII. Parties.

VIII. Pleadings.

IX. Evidence and proof.

VII. PARTIES (p. 568)

Citizenship of adverse claimant.—In Ginaca v. Peterson, (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1920) 262 Fed. 904, it was contended that an adverse claimant to unpatented mining claims must be a citizen of the United States or must have declared his intention to become a citizen. Answering this contention, the court said:

"That is the rule, doubtless, where the adverse claimant endeavors to prosecute an adverse suit against one who applies for a patent under the mining laws of the United States, and herein such adverse claimant seeks to obtain title to the mining claim for himself or herself. On the other hand, an alien is not prevented from owning unpatented mining claims, and an alien so owning may protect his property rights in the mining claims in adverse proceedings before the Land Department of the United States or in the courts, although he may not acquire title from the United States through such proceedings. Altoona Q. M. Co. v. Integral Q. M. Co., 114 Cal. 100, 45 Pac. 1047.

"It is urged that, where the defendants apply for patent, the plaintiff in a suit pending prior to such application should, by supplemental proceedings, base the existing suit upon the rights granted by section 2326 of the Revised Statutes, and have the controversy determined accordingly. This may be accepted as correct where the adverse claimant is lawfully qualified to receive a patent from the United States, and, as already indicated, where she seeks such patent in the adverse suit. But the proposition is not pertinent to the case before us, for here the adverse claimant is not qualified to receive patent from the United States, and has not sought such patent in these suits, but only endeavors to protect her property from being unlawfully taken from her, and from having a cloud put upon the title by the unlawful acts of the appellants."

Husband as proper party plaintiff after conveyance of interest in placer claim to wife.—The conveyance by a husband to his wife of his interest in a placer mining claim under such circumstances that by the local law such interest became community property which he could lease or convey without the wife's concurrence, and could sue in respect of it in his own name alone, did not make him an inadmissible party plaintiff in a suit in support of such claim adverse to a conflicting lode location. Cole v. Ralph (1920) 252 U. S. 286. 40 S. Ct.

321, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, reversing C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1918) 249 Fed. 81, 161 C. C. A. 133.

Party to unrecorded contract executed by locators of placer mining claim.—The interest of a party to an unrecorded contract executed by the locators of a placer mining claim which gave him a right to a specified share in the output or proceeds of the claim, and possibly a right to have it worked and thereby made productive, though not such as to make him an essential party to a suit in support of such claim adverse to a conflicting lode location, is such as to make him an admissible party plaintiff. Cole v. Ralph, (1920) 252 U. S. 286, 40 S. Ct. 321, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, reversing (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1918) 249 Fed. 81, 161 C. C. A. 133.

Effect of attachment proceedings against party plaintiff prior to beginning of adverse suit.—Attachment proceedings against a placer claimant, begun before he filed a claim adverse to a conflicting lode location, but not resulting in a transfer of his title until after an adverse suit was begun, did not make him an inadmissible party plaintiff in the latter suit. Cole v. Ralph, (1920) 252 U. S. 286, 40 S. Ct. 321, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, 252 U. S. 286, 40 S. Ct. 321, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) 81, 161 C. C. A. 133.

VIII. PLEADINGS (p. 570)

Mistake in name of party.—A mistake in the given name of a party to adverse proceedings in the land office is properly disregarded by the court in a suit in support of the adverse claims, where this was a mere inadvertence and did not mislead or prejudice anyone. Cole v. Ralph, (1920) 252 U. S. 286, 40 S. Ct. 321, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, reversing (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1918) 249 Fed. 81, 161 C. C. A. 133.

IX. EVIDENCE AND PROOF (p. 571)

Discovery.—Recitals of discovery in the recorded notices of location of lode mining claims are mere ex parte self-serving declarations on the part of the locators, and are not evidence of discovery. Cole v. Ralph, (1920) 252 U. S. 286, 40 S. Ct. 321, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, reversing (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1918) 249 Fed. 81, 161 C. C. A. 133.

Admissions.—Placer claimants, by mistakenly posting a notice stating that they had relocated the ground as a lode claim, did not thereby admit the validity of a prior conflicting lode location, where the mistake was promptly corrected the next day by the substitution of another notice stating that the ground was located as a placer claim, and no one was misled by the mistake. Cole v. Ralph, 252 U. S. 286, 40 S. Ct. 321, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, reversing (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1918) 249 Fed. 81, 161 C. C. A. 133.

Contents of assay reports as admissible evidence.—Defendant in a suit by placer mining claimants against a conflicting lode claimant has no right to complain that he was not permitted, on cross-examination of a witness for the plaintiffs, to show the contents of certain assay reports, where, though some of these reports were at first excluded, they were all produced under a new ruling of the court except two, which covered samples taken from openings made after the placer claims were located, and defendant did not call for them when the witness was recalled, or reserve any exceptions to the new ruling, and it is more than inferable from the record that he acquiesced in it. Cole v. Ralph, (1920) 252 U. S. 286, 40 S. Ct. 321, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, reversing (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1918) 249 Fed. 81, 161 C. C. A. 133.

Vol. VI, p. 577, sec. 2330. [First ed., vol. V, p. 42.]

Extent of claim.—Under this section and R. S. sec. 2331 (6 Fed. Stat. Ann. (2d ed.) 579) no mining claim shall exceed 20 acres for an individual or 160 acres for an association of eight persons. Any device, therefore, by which a person or an association may acquire more than the prescribed amount is a violation of law and a fraud upon the government. U. S. v. California Midway Oil Co., (S. D. Cal. 1919) 259 Fed. 343.

Vol. VI, p. 579, sec. 2331. [First ed., vol. V, p. 43.]

Policy and purpose of statute.—"It is the policy of the government to have mining locations in compact form. No shoestring claim will receive the government's sanction. Locations upon unsurveyed lands, as well as those upon surveyed lands, are within the purview of the statute. If the lands have been surveyed by the government, the location, in its exterior limits, must conform to the public survey, if reasonably practicable; if the land be unsurveyed, the location, as reasonably as practicable, must be rectangular in form, with east and west and north and south boundary lines, and otherwise approximating conformity to the public survey system within the limits of practicability." Dripps v. Allison's Mines Co., (Cal. App. 1919) 187 Pac. 448.

Conformity not practicable.—Conformity with the United States public survey system would not be reasonably practicable in the location of public land surrounded by prior claims; and whether the claim be on surveyed or unsurveyed lands, if it be surrounded by such prior claims, its boundaries may conform thereto regardless of the irregularity of the form thus produced. Dripps v. Allison's Mines Co., (Cal. App. 1919) 187 Pac. 448.

Plat and survey not essential to location.—"The plat and survey referred to by the section . . . are the plat and survey to be made and filed when the application for a patent is made, and are not an essential to the perfecting of a valid location." Dripps v. Allison's Mines Co., (Cal. App. 1919) 187 Pac. 448.

Vol. VI, p. 580, sec. 2332. [First ed., vol. V, p. 44.]

Necessity of discovery as dispensed with by virtue of this section.—The necessity of a discovery to sustain a lode mining location is not dispensed with nor may its absence be cured by virtue of the provisions of this section, that evidence of holding and working a mining claim for a period equal to the time prescribed by the statute of limitations for mining claims of the state or territory where the same may be situated shall be sufficient to establish a right to a patent thereto in the absence of any adverse claim. Code v. Ralph, (1920) 252 U. S. 286, 40 S. Ct. 321, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, reversing (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1918) 249 Fed. 81, 161 C. C. A. 133.

Vol. VI, p. 581, sec. 2333. [First ed., vol. V, p. 45.]

Knowledge of lode or vein—Vein known to exist at time of application.—To same effect as original annotation, see South Butte Min. Co. v. Thomas, (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1919) 260 Fed. 814, 171 C. C. A. 540, wherein the court said concerning this section:

"Long before the present case arose this court had occasion to construe that section, in the case of Migeon et al. v. Montana Cent. Ry. Co., 77 Fed. 249, 23 C. C. A. 156, where we said of it:

"This section of the statute was primarily intended for the benefit and protection of the locators of placer claims. If a lode is known to exist within the boundaries of a placer claim, the applicant for a patent must state that fact, and then, by paying $5 an acre for that portion of the ground, and $2.50 an acre for the balance, a patent will issue to him, covering both the lode and placer ground; but if the lode is known to exist, and is not included in the application for a patent, then it will be construed as a conclusive declaration that the owner of the placer claim has no right of possession, by virtue of his patent for the placer ground, to the vein or lode. It matters not whether there is a lode or vein actually within the limits, which subsequent developments may prove, if it is not known to exist at the time of the application, the patent for the placer claims will include such lode or vein. In such cases the Supreme Court has repeatedly declared that it is not enough that there may have been some indications, by outcropping on the surface, of the existence of lodes or veins of rock in place bearing gold or silver or other precious metals to justify their designation as "known veins or lodes"; that, in order to meet that designation, the lodes or veins must be clearly ascertained, and be of such extent as to render the land more valuable on that account, and justify their exploitation. *Mining Co. v. This construction as to the meaning of section 2333 is, in our opinion, founded in reason, and is in harmony with the construction given by the courts to the other sections of the statute relative to the rights of locators of mining claims upon the public lands of the United States. But, in any event, the rule, as above stated, is now too well settled to be departed from.

"The decisions of the Supreme Court upon controversies arising between mineral claimants on one side and parties holding town-site patents on the other are applicable to this class of cases. The doctrines therein announced are directly in line with the cases we have referred to. In such character of cases the court has repeatedly declared that, under the acts of Congress which govern such cases, in order to except mines or mineral lands from the operation of a town-site patent, it is not sufficient that the lands do in fact contain minerals, or even valuable minerals, when the town-site patent takes effect; but they must at that time be "known" to contain mineral of such extent and value as to justify expenditures for the purpose of extracting them and, if the lands are not known at that time to be so valuable for mining purposes, the fact that they have once been valuable, or are afterwards discovered to be still valuable, for such purposes, does not defeat or impair the title of persons claiming under the town-site patent. Deffebach v. Hawke, 115 U. S. 393, 404, 6 Sup. Ct. 95, 101 [29 L. Ed. 423]; Davis' Adm'r v. Weibbold, 130 U. S. 507, 525, 11 Sup. Ct. 628, 635 [35 L. Ed. 238]; Dower v. Richards, 151 U. S. 658, 663, 14 Sup. Public lands reserved as national forests are affected by this act authorizing exploration for and disposition of potassium. (1919) 31 Op. Atty.-Gen. 433, wherein it was said:

"The legislative history of the Potassium Act confirms the view that it was intended to apply to public lands reserved for national forest purposes. It was Senate bill 2156, and as introduced it applied to 'public lands belonging to the United States.' The committee in its report recommended the substitution of the words 'lands of the United States not known to contain valuable deposits of the kinds above described.' (S. Rept. 100, 65th Cong., 1st sess.) Objection to this amendment was made on the ground that the Act would thus be made to apply to national parks and lands purchased for watershed protection in the Appalachian region under the Act of March 1, 1911 (36 Stat. 961). It was therefore amended by substituting for the words of the committee amendment the words of the Act 'public lands of the United States.' No specific reference was made to the effect of the Act on the public lands reserved for national forests, and the effect of the words adopted, as stated by Senator Nelson and accepted by the senator in charge of the bill, was that 'The term "public land" has a well-defined meaning in the land laws of the United States. It means land that is open to public entry of some kind.' (55 Cong. Rec. 5936.) This definition would include lands in national forests that were open to entry under the general mining law, but would not include lands in national parks or the Appalachian reserves, which were not subject to entry under any general law."

III. DIRECTORS, PRESIDENT, AND OTHER OFFICERS

3. President (p. 657)

Powers.—Where a foreign creditor of a decedent's estate is an incorporated bank, its president has authority as an incident of his office, to submit the bank's claim to a court in the state in which the bankrupt resided and bind the bank by such action. Old Dominion Trust Co. v. Oxford First Nat. Bank, (C. C. A. 4th Cir. 1919) 260 Fed. 22, 171 C. C. A. 58.

4. Vice-President (p. 658)

The vice-president of a bank, though acting as its principal executive officer, has no authority to bind the bank by pledging its credit in order to borrow money for his own personal use. This is especially true where he forges resolutions of the board of directors purporting to authorize him to obtain the loan and the transaction is so out of the usual course of banking business as to put the lender on inquiry. Drovers', etc., Nat. Bank v. Sutton First Nat. Bank, (C. C. A. 4th Cir. 1919) 260 Fed. 9, 171 C. C. A. 45.

5. Cashier (p. 659)

Acting as loan agent for depositor.—The cashier of a national bank has no power as such to enter into an agreement to loan out the money of a depositor, and his acts in so doing do not bind the bank. Holmes v. Uvalde Nat. Bank, (Tex. Civ. App.) 1920) 222 S. W. 640.

Borrower representing bank.—When a national bank, desiring to borrow money, puts forward a third person as borrower, the proceeds of the loan being received and used by the bank, it has power to guarantee the repayment of the loan by the ostensible borrower. Ellis v. Citizens' Nat. Bank, (1919) 25 N. M. 319, 183 Pac. 34, 6 A. L. R. 166.

5. "Discounting and Negotiating Evidences of Debt"

b. Purchase of Notes, etc. (p. 669)

Purchase of drafts with bills of lading attached.—Under this section of the Revised Statutes, a national bank is allowed to discount and negotiate drafts, bills of exchange, and other evidence of indebtedness. It is thereby authorized to purchase drafts with bills of lading attached. When, as a consequence of such purchase, it becomes the owner of personal property, this is but an incident to the purchase of the draft and is not prohibited. Citizens' Bank, etc., Co. v. Harpeth Nat. Bank, (1919) 120 Miss. 505, 82 So. 329.

6. "Receiving Deposits"

b. Special Deposits (p. 670)

Special deposit defined.—"A special deposit implies the custody of property without authority in the custodian to use it, and the right of the owner to receive back the identical thing deposited.

"In the case of a special deposit, the bank assumes merely the charge or custody of property, without authority to use it, and the depositor is entitled to receive back the identical money or thing deposited. In such case, the right of property remains in the depositor, and if the deposit is of money, the bank may not mingle it with its own funds. The relation created is that of bailor and bailee, and not that of debtor and creditor." 3 R. C. L. 522." Tuckerman v. Mearns, (App. Cas. D. C. 1919) 262 Fed. 607.

8. Collecting Agents (p. 673)

To same effect as original annotation, see Taylor, etc., Co. v. National Bank, (N. D. Ohio 1919) 262 Fed. 166, holding, however, that such an action may be maintained only against the receiving bank. The court said:

"Upon this proposition there can be no doubt. See Hoover v. Wise, 91 U. S. 308, 23 L. Ed. 392; Exchange National Bank v. Third National Bank, 112 U. S. 276, 5 Sup. Ct. 141, 28 L. Ed. 722. Neither of these cases has ever been overruled, criticised, or distinguished, and while I do not find that the question involved has ever again been under consideration by the Supreme Court, I do find that these cases have ever since been uniformly followed by all inferior federal courts. The law, as established by these cases, is that a bank receiving commercial paper in one state for collection in another state from a maker or drawer residing there is liable for any neglect of duty occurring in its collection, whether arising from the default of its own officers or employes, or from that of its correspondent or its agents in another state. This obligation, it is true, may be modified by contract; but a modification of the bank's obligation will not be inferred from knowledge that the receiving bank must, or intends, in due course of business, to forward the same to another bank for collection. The sound reasoning and policy upon which this rule rests is sufficiently stated in Exchange National Bank v. Third National Bank, supra, and in Reeves v. State Bank, 8 Ohio St. 465.

"The contrary doctrine is that a bank receiving commercial paper and performing these duties is merely obliged to exercise due care in the selection of competent agents and in the transmission of such paper with proper instructions. The result of this doctrine is that the receiving bank is impliedly authorized to select subagents, who thereby become agents of the owner of the paper, and is not liable for the neglect or default of its subagents. On the other hand, under the correct doctrine as established by the decisions above cited, the receiving bank contracts to make collection, and is, in effect, an independent contractor, which may avail itself of such agencies as are necessary or proper in the performance of its contract, but remains itself liable to the owner for due performance by its agents or representatives thus employed, and they do not become subagents of the owner; nor is the receiving bank exonerated from liability to the owner, no matter what degree of care or diligence it exercises in selecting its agents.

"The case of Bank of Washington v. Triplett, 1 Pet. 25, 7 L. Ed. 37, sometimes cited as holding the contrary, is distinguished, on the ground that the bank, upon the facts, was held to have contracted directly with the holder of the bill to collect it, and that the forwarding bank was the holder's agent merely to transmit the bill for collection. This is also the doctrine in Ohio. See Reeves v. State Bank, 8 Ohio St. 466. This case has been followed once, and the law therein stated has been approved twice in later cases. There is nothing to the contrary in Hilsinger v. Trickett, 86 Ohio St. 286, 99 N. E. 305, Ann. Cas. 1913D 421, as contended on behalf of plaintiff. In this case, Judge Spear, delivering the opinion, says that it is unnecessary to consider the proposition stated in Reeves v. State Bank, supra, because neither the bank taking the paper for collection nor the bank to which it was forwarded was shown to be guilty of any neglect of duty, and, further, no loss to the owner had resulted from the alleged negligence.

"Thus far there is no difficulty. The question, however, remains to be considered whether or not the real owner may maintain an action against the bank or agent to which the paper was forwarded by the bank first taking it for collection, as well as against the receiving bank. It is undisputed that the owner may maintain an action against the receiving bank. The apparent difficulty in plaintiff's situation has impelled me to give the most careful consideration to this question. As a result, I am of the opinion that plaintiff may maintain an action only against the bank with which it made its contract for collection, and not against any other bank to which the receiving bank forwarded it, based on the latter's negligence or breach of duty, as a result of which collection was not made. This conclusion is amply supported by the following authorities: Hoover v. Wise, 91 U. S. 308, 23 L. Ed. 392; Hyde v. First National Bank, 7 Biss. 156, 12 Fed. Cas. 1110, No. 6970; *Balcomb v. Vol. VI, p. 687, sec. 5138. [First ed., vol. V, p. 95.]

"City" as including "city and county of Honolulu."—In (1917) 31 Op. Atty-Gen. 120, an opinion was rendered that a national bank could be chartered at Schofield Barracks, Territory of Hawaii, with a capital of $100,000. The material part of the opinion was as follows:

"Schofield Barracks is a place within the boundaries of a municipal corporation known as 'the city and county of Honolulu,' which consists of the island of Oahu, containing some 600 square miles, and many outlying islands, some of them separated from the island of Oahu by 1,100 miles of water. The city of Honolulu proper is the seat of this municipal corporation. Schofield Barracks is 21 miles from the city of Honolulu proper and is not a part of it except in the sense that both places fall within the boundaries of the municipal corporation known as 'the city and county of Honolulu.' The intervening territory is either devoted to agriculture or is uncultivated, practically devoid of improvements, and is very thinly populated.

"While the population of the entire 'city and county of Honolulu' according to the census of 1910 is 82,028, the population of Schofield Barracks is approximately only 8,000.

"Unless, therefore, 'the city and county of Honolulu,' which embraces Schofield Barracks, is a city within the meaning of the last sentence of section 5138, there is nothing to prevent the organization of a national bank at Schofield Barracks with a capital of $100,000.

"I am of the opinion that it would be a reductio ad absurdum to say that a political subdivision of the character of 'the city and county of Honolulu' is a 'city' within the meaning of this provision of law. The name itself, 'the city and county of Honolulu,' indicates that the lawmaker had in mind an entity differing from a city in the common acceptance of the term. But even had the law called this political subdivision a city, the name given to it would not necessarily make it such within the meaning of the Revised Statutes.

"It follows that a national bank can be chartered at Schofield Barracks with a capital of $100,000.

"This opinion is not to be taken as overruling the opinion of Attorney General McReynolds of June 6, 1913, 30 Op. 173. In the first place, there are differences between the two cases. In the second place, that opinion expressly recognizes that there might be 'anomalous cases' to which its reasoning would not apply, and if there be an 'anomalous case' it would seem to be the present one."

College Point, N. Y., is a part of New York city and therefore, though being a detached community of about 15,000 inhabitants, there cannot be organized there a national bank with a capital of $100,000 consistently with the provisions of this section. 31 Op. Atty-Gen. 384, wherein it was said: "My predecessor held (30 Op. 173) that a 'place,' within the meaning of this section, is a city, town, or village with a corporate or quasi-corporate organization for the purpose of self-government within a definite territory. While it was recognized both in that opinion and in my opinion of June 5, 1917 (31 Op. 120), that exceptional circumstances may warrant some extension of this definition, there is here a further difficulty. In the latter opinion I pointed out that what was called 'the city and county of Honolulu' was not, for reasons which I gave, a city within the meaning of the last sentence of section 5138. Here the case is otherwise.

"The city of Greater New York is undoubtedly such a city. Despite its isolation, College Point is a part thereof. It has no powers of self-government."

IV. Interest at rate allowed by state law.
VIII. Payment in advance.

IV. INTEREST AT RATE ALLOWED BY STATE LAW (p. 745)

In general.—The National Bank Act establishes a system of general regulations, adopting the usury laws of the states only in so far as they severally fix the rate of interest. Evans v. National Bank, (1919) 251 U. S. 108, 40 S. Ct. 58, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (1917) 21 Ga. App. 356, 94 S. E. 611.

VIII. PAYMENT IN ADVANCE (p. 747)

A national bank, having the power to make discounts at the interest rate allowed by the state law, does not incur the penalty prescribed by R. S. sec. 5198 for taking usury merely because, in discounting short-term notes in the ordinary course of business, it reserves interest in advance at the maximum interest rate allowed by the state law, although, under such law, interest charges reserved on a loan in advance by a state bank at the highest permitted rate constitute usury. Evans v. National Bank, (1919) 251 U. S. 108, 40 S. Ct. 58, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (1917) 21 Ga. App. 356, 94 S. E. 611) wherein the court said:

"Petitioner maintains the loans in question would have been usurious if made in Georgia by an individual or a state bank, and that the same rule applies notwithstanding the lender happened to be a national bank. Respondent insists that the federal act permits it to discount short-time notes, reserving interest in advance at the maximum interest rate allowed by the state law,—in this instance, 8 per cent.

"In Fleckner v. Bank of United States, 8 Wheat. 338, 349, 354, 5 L. ed. 631, 633, 635, the charter of the Bank of the United States inhibited it from taking interest 'more than at the rate of 6 per centum,' and plaintiff claimed that by deducting interest at the rate of 6 per centum from the amount of a discounted note, the bank received usury. Replying to that point, this court, through Mr. Justice Story, said: 'If a transaction of this sort is to be deemed usurious, the same principle must apply with equal force to bank discounts generally, for the practice is believed to be universal; and probably few, if any, charters contain an express provision, authorizing, in terms, the deduction of the interest in advance upon making loans or discounts. It has always been supposed that an authority to discount, or make discounts, did, from the very force of the terms, necessarily include an authority to take the interest in advance. And this is not only the settled opinion among professional and commercial men, but stands approved by the soundest principles of legal construction. Indeed, we do not know in what other sense the word 'discount' is to be interpreted. Even in England, where no statute authorizes bankers to make discounts, it has been solemnly adjudged that the taking of interest in advance by bankers, upon loans, in the ordinary course of business, is not usurious.' See also McCarthy v. First Nat. Bank, 223 U. S. 493, 499, 56 L. ed. 523, 525, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 240. This view has been generally adopted. . . .

"Associations organized under the National Bank Act are plainly empowered to discount promissory notes in the ordinary course of business. To discount, ex vi termini, implies reservation of interest in advance; and, under the ancient and commonly accepted doctrine, when dealing with short-time paper such a reservation at the highest interest rate allowed by law is not usurious. Recognizing prevailing practice in business and the above-stated doctrine concerning usury, we think Congress intended to endow national banks with the power, which banks generally exercise, of discounting notes reserving charges at the highest rate permitted for interest. To carry out this purpose, the National Bank Act provides that associations organized under it may reserve on any discount interest at the rate allowed by the state; and only when there is reservation at a rate greater than the one specified does the transaction become usurious.

"The maximum interest rate allowed by the Georgia statute is 8 per centum. That marks the limit which a national bank there located may charge upon discounts; but its right to retain so much arises from federal law. The latter also completely defines what constitutes the taking of usury by a national bank, referring to the state law only to determine the maximum permitted rate."

Liability as surety or indorser.—The limitation upon the total liabilities to a national bank of any single borrower, will not be construed as including his liability as surety or indorser for money borrowed by another, in view of the long-continued practice and administrative rulings of the Comptroller of the Currency not to include such liabilities in the computation. *Corsicana Nat. Loan to two persons as one loan.—An allegation in the amended petition in an action against a director of a national bank for knowingly participating, contrary to this section and R. S. sec. 5239, in an excessive loan, that the transaction set forth was a loan of that character, whether regarded as one loan to two persons designated as a "firm" as the plaintiff alleges the fact to be, or regarded as two loans as contended for by the defendant in his pleadings theretofore filed, is sufficient if the proof tends to show a single and excessive loan made to such persons jointly in any capacity, or made in form one half to each, but in substance as a single loan. Corsicana Nat. Bank v. Johnson, (1919) 251 U. S. 68, 40 S. Ct. 82, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, which further held that the denial by a director of a national bank, in an action against him for knowingly participating, contrary to this section and R. S. sec. 5239, in an excessive loan, that such loan was a single one, or that he knew it to be such, is not conclusive where there is substantial evidence inconsistent with such denial, tending to show facts and circumstances attendant upon the transaction of which he had knowledge, and subsequent conduct in the nature of admissions by him, also inconsistent with such denial.

I. GENERAL CONSIDERATIONS

6. Intent as Ingredient of Offenses Specified (p. 772)

Intent as to false entries and misapplication distinguished.—"The criminal intent with which these acts must have been done, in order to warrant a verdict of guilty, differs as to the false entry counts from the misapplication counts. As to the former, the intent required to be proved is that the false entries were made with intent to deceive any officer of the association, or any agent appointed to examine its affairs, while, as to the misapplication counts, the intent, to be criminal, must have been to injure or defraud the bank." Galbreath v. U. S., (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1918) 257 Fed. 648, 168 C. C. A. 598.

IV. MISAPPLICATION OF FUNDS, ETC.

1. Definition and Scope (p. 776)

The issuance of certificates of deposit gratuitously is a crime distinct from that of misapplying moneys, and the question of the intent of the person issuing them is for the jury. Matters v. U. S., (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1919) 261 Fed. 826.

2. Elements of Offense

a. In General (p. 776)

Intent.—In Galbreath v. U. S., (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1918) 257 Fed. 648, 168 C. C. A. 598, regarding the intent necessary to establish the offense of misapplication of funds, the court said:

"An intent to injure or defraud, as contemplated by the statute, is not inconsistent with a desire for the ultimate success and welfare of the bank. It may, within the meaning of the law, result from an unlawful act voluntarily done, the natural tendency of which may have been to injure the bank. A wrongful misapplication of funds, even if made in the hope or belief that the bank's welfare would ultimately be promoted, is none the less a violation of the statute, if the necessary effect is or may be to injure or defraud the bank. Such is the well-settled law."

10. Evidence (p. 781)

In Showalter v. U. S., (C. C. A. 4th Cir. 1918) 260 Fed. 719, 171 C. C. A. 457, it was held that the evidence was sufficient to sustain a conviction for misapplication of the funds of a national bank by one of its officers.

12. Instructions (p. 781)

In a prosecution for misapplication of the funds of a national bank by one of its officers, the court, in explaining to the jury the distinction between misapplication of funds and embezzlement, said:

"If a man takes funds of the bank from the bank's cash account, for example, and puts them to his own or some one else's use, that is misapplication of the funds at the bank, although he may not intend to embezzle, if he does it with intent. Abstraction implies not only a willful misapplication, but the actual taking of the funds from the bank, and the conversion of them to his own use and benefit, or to the benefit of another, with intent to defraud the bank. Now I think you will see, if you will just bear in mind the words misapplication and abstraction, abstraction means taking out; misapplication, while it stays inside the bank."

It was held that such instruction was not misleading, that the word "intent" was used as meaning intent to injure or defraud. Showalter v. U. S., (C. C. A. 4th Cir. 1918) 260 Fed. 719, 171 C. C. A. 457.

12. Indictment (p. 786)

Duplicity.—An indictment under this section is not duplicitious by reason of the allegations that a false entry in a report by a bank president was made with the intent to injure and defraud the bank and to deceive the Comptroller of Currency, or any agent appointed to examine the affairs of the bank. Boone v. U. S., (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1919) 257 Fed. 693, 169 C. C. A. 113. In distinguishing this case from that of U. S. v. Norton, (E. D. Okla. 1911) 188 Fed. 256, in the original annotation, the court said:

"Is this count of the indictment duplicitious by reason of the allegations that the false entry in the report was made with the intent to injure and defraud the bank and to deceive the Comptroller of the Currency, or any agent appointed to examine the affairs of the bank?"

"Counsel rely on what they presume was decided by Judge Adams, speaking for this court, in Billingsley v. United States, 178 Fed. 653, 101 C. C. A. 465, and United States v. Norton (D. C.) 188 Fed. 256, decided by Judge Campbell, who was of the opinion that the Billingsley Case sustained the contention now made.

"A careful reading of Judge Adams' opinion does not warrant this construction. The issue in that case was whether the indictment charging a false entry in the books of the bank, with the intent to deceive any agent appointed to examine the affairs of the bank, without charging that the false entry was made with the intent to defraud the association, or any other bank or person, was sufficient to charge an offense. The court held the indictment sufficient, saying:

"There are apparently two separate intents contemplated by this section, either of which, when accompanying a forbidden act, constitutes an offense."

"It was not held that the making of a false entry to defraud and to deceive constituted separate offenses. The intents were separate, but they might both concur in the making of a single false entry and thereby constitute a single crime. That allegations in an indictment charging both intents in one count are not duplicitious has been decided in McKnight v. United States, 97 Fed. 208, 215, 38 C. C. A. 115, 123, in which the opinion was delivered by Judge (now Mr. Justice) Day, and was concurred in by Judge (later Mr. Justice) Lurton and Circuit Judge Taft. In United States v. Britton, 107 U. S. 655, 665, 2 Sup. Ct. 512, 27 L. Ed. 520, a count charging the acts of the defendant to have been with the intent to injure and defraud the said association and certain persons to the grand jurors unknown was held good and not duplicitious. The same conclusion was reached in Morse v. United States, 174 Fed. 539, 548, 98 C. C. A. 321, in Richardson v. United States, 181 Fed. 1, 8, 104 C. C. A. 69, and in effect in United States v. Corbett, 215 U. S. 233, 30 Sup. Ct. 81, 54 L. Ed. 173.

"In Crain v. United States, 162 U. S. 625, 636, 16 Sup. Ct. 952, 40 L. Ed. 1097, a similar question was before the court. A count in the indictment charged three acts, made separate offenses by section 5421, Rev. St., and it was held that a motion in arrest of judgment on that count, on the ground of duplicity, was properly denied. The court said:

"We perceive no sound reason why the doing of the prohibited thing, in each and all of the prohibited modes, may not be charged in one count, so that there may be a verdict of guilty upon proof that the accused had done any one of the things constituting a substantive crime under the statute."

"The general rule is that in a criminal pleading, when the statute makes either of two or more distinct acts connected with a more general offense, and subject to the same measure and kind of punishment, indictable separately and as distinct crimes when committed by different persons or at different times, they may, when committed by the same person at the same time be coupled in one count as constituting one offense. Lehman v. United States, 127 Fed. 41, 45, 61 C. C. A. 577; May v. United States, 199 Fed. 53, 117 C. C. A. 431; Clark v. United States, 211 Fed. 916, 918, 128 C. C. A. 294, 296; Glass v. United States, 222 Fed. 773, 138 C. C. A. 321."

13. Evidence

a. Admissibility (p. 787)

Evidence of false entries at other times.—To same effect as original annotation, see Galbreath v. U. S., (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1918) 257 Fed. 648, 168 C. C. A. 598.

Statements of defendant subsequent to entries.—In a prosecution under this section wherein the defendant, a bank president, was charged with having aided and abetted the cashier of the bank in making false entries in reports by the cashier to the Comptroller of the Currency concerning the condition of the bank, it was held that statements made by the defendant at a later date than any of the reports and regarding large loans to and overdrafts by the defendant, and corporations and firms in which he was interested, were admissible as showing knowledge by the defendant of the falsity of the reports. Boone v. U. S., (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1919) 257 Fed. 963, 169 C. C. A. 113. Regarding the admissibility of this evidence, the court said: "The court in overruling the objections to this testimony, said: 'I think this particular testimony is within the boundaries of that rule. It tends to show the knowledge which Mr. Boone had at that time; the knowledge that he had, and at least forms a starting point to go backwards over the period covered by this indictment. I believe it is within the field of collateral facts that may be properly introduced.'

"It must not be overlooked that the defendant is not charged with having made these reports, but to have aided, abetted, incited, and counseled P. A. Ball, the cashier of the bank, of which the defendant was president, to make these false reports. It was therefore essential to prove his knowledge of the falsity of the reports, and his intent to deceive the Comptroller. Besides, the defendant was tried on all nine counts of the indictment, some of which charged the falsity of the reports to consist in the failure to report defendant's overdrafts. There was no error in admitting this testimony. In Allis v. United States, 155 U. S. 117, 119, 15 Sup. Ct. 36, 37 (39 L. Ed. 91), a similar question was before the court, and it was held: 'There are two sufficient answers to these objections: (1) While the defendant was found guilty only on one, he was being tried on 25 counts, which counts charged false entries at different times running from February to December, and therefore testimony was competent as to the condition of his account stretching through the entire time. (2) The gravamen of this offense is the false entry with intent to injure, defraud, or deceive, and it was competent to show the state of the defendant's account, not merely at the very day the false entry was made, but also before and after that date, for the purpose of throwing light on the intent with which it was made.'

"The authorities that such evidence is admissible for the purpose of proving the intent of the defendant, where intent is an essential ingredient of the charge, are practically uniform. Alexander v. United States, 138 U. S. 363, 11 Sup. Ct. 350, 34 L. Ed. 954; Clune v. United States, 159 U. S. 593, 16 Sup. Ct. 125, 40 L. Ed. 269; Spurr v. United States, 87 Fed. 701, 710, 31 C. C. A. 202. In Moffatt v. United States, 232 Fed. 522, 533, 146 C. C. A. 480, 491, this court, after saying that 'the intent with which an accused does a subsequent act cannot be imputed to him as of the prior date of the crime charged,' proceeds by holding:

"These rules, however, do not conflict with or impair the long-established doctrine that in cases involving fraud, or the intent with which an accused does an act, collateral facts and circumstances, and his other acts of a kindred character, both prior and subsequent, not too remote in time, are admissible in evidence."

VIII. AIDERS AND ABETTERS

1. In General (p. 788)

Aider and abettor as principal.—One who aids and abets another in violating this section is a principal under section 332 of the Penal Laws (7 Fed. Stat. Ann. (2d ed.) 984). Matters v. U. S., (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1919) 261 Fed. 826.

2. Who May Be (p. 788)

An indictment under this section which charges the defendant, a bank president, with being an accessory to the making of a false report by the cashier of the bank to the Comptroller of the Currency, is not defective because it fails to charge the defendant as a principal, for since the defendant did not make the report, he could only be held responsible if he aided and abetted the person who made it. Boone v. U. S., (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1919) 257 Fed. 963, 169 C. C. A. 113.

Vol. VI, p. 796, sec. 5219. [First ed., vol. V, p. 157.]

VI. EXEMPTIONS AND DEDUCTIONS

1. Nontaxable Property Belonging to Bank (p. 805)

To same effect as original annotation, see Cincinnati First Nat. Bank v. Beaman, (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1918) 257 Fed. 729, 169 C. C. A. 17, wherein it was held that the stockholders of a national bank were not entitled for purposes of tax assessment to any deduction from the value of their stockholdings on account of the bank's holding of federal reserve bank stock. The court said: "Plaintiff in error brought suit to restrain the collection of state, county, and municipal taxes assessed by the taxing authorities of Hamilton county, Ohio, under sections 5407 and following of the General Code of Ohio, against the stockholders of plaintiff bank upon the shares of the capital stock of that bank held by such stockholders, respectively, upon the contention that the assessments were unlawful, in that in valuing the shareholdings there had not been excluded from the assets of the bank the stock held by it in the Federal Reserve Bank, under the provisions of Federal Reserve Act Dec. 23, 1913, c. 6, 38 Stat. 251.

"The crucial question presented is whether such exclusion is required by section 7 of the Federal Reserve Act, which in terms exempts Federal Reserve banks, including the capital stock and surplus therein, and the income derived therefrom, from federal, state, and local taxation, except taxes upon real estate, and section 26 of that act, which repeals all provisions of law inconsistent with or superseded by any of the provisions of that act, to the extent of such inconsistency or superseding, or whether, on the other hand, the power of taxation is governed by section 5219 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, which, as construed by the Supreme Court, expressly authorizes taxation by the states of the value of shares of national bank stock held by stockholders therein, without deduction on account of the fact that the bank's assets include securities of the United States which are declared by the statute authorizing them to be exempt from taxation by or under state authority. Act Feb. 25, 1862, 12 Stat. c. 33, pp. 345, 346; Rev. Stat. § 3701. Judge Sater, who presided in the District Court, in the course of a well-reasoned opinion (First Nat. Bank of Cincinnati v. Dorr, 246 Fed. 163) reached the conclusion that section 5219 of the Revised Statutes governed, and thus that the bank's stockholders were not entitled for purposes of tax assessment, to any deduction from the value of their stockholdings on account of the bank's holding of Federal Reserve Bank stock. The bill was accordingly dismissed.

"We are satisfied, not only with the correctness of this conclusion, but with the reasoning of the opinion on which the conclusion is based, and are content to affirm the judgment upon that opinion. We think it clear that Congress intended to place a national bank's holdings of Federal Reserve Bank stock upon precisely the same basis as its holdings of government bonds, so far as exemption from taxation is concerned, and thus not to extend such exemption to the taxation of shares of national bank stock held by stockholders therein."

Vol. VI, p. 825, sec. 7. [First ed., 1914 Supp., p. 267.]

Assessment of national bank stock—Exemptions.—In Cincinnati First Nat. Bank v. Beaman, (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1918) 257 Fed. 729, 169 C. C. A. 17, it was held that R. S. sec. 5219 (6 Fed. Stat. Ann. (2d ed.) 796) rather than this section governed in determining whether the stockholders of a national bank were entitled, for purposes of tax assessment, to any deduction from the value of their stockholdings on account of the bank's holding of Federal Reserve Bank stock.

Vol. VI, p. 826, sec. 10. [First ed., 1914 Supp., p. 269.]

Comptroller holding over as de jure officer.—A Comptroller of the Currency whose nomination for reappointment was not acted on by the Senate prior to its adjournment but who continued nevertheless to exercise the duties of the office of comptroller remained Comptroller of the Currency de jure and consequently was a legally qualified member of the Federal Reserve Board and entitled to receive the salary prescribed by this section to be paid to the Comptroller of the Currency as ex officio member of the Federal Reserve Board. (1919) 31 Op. Atty.-Gen. 401, wherein it was said:

"It appears that Mr. Williams was appointed Comptroller of the Currency, by and with the consent of the Senate, under a commission dated January 29, 1914. His appointment was made under section 325 of the Revised Statutes, in which it is provided that the Comptroller of the Currency, so appointed, 'shall hold office for the term of five years unless sooner removed by the President.' Upon the expiration of the five years so provided as the ordinary term of office of the comptroller, on January 19, 1919, the President determined to appoint Mr. Williams to succeed himself and thereupon sent his name to the Senate for confirmation. The Senate adjourned, however, without taking any action in the premises. Since January 19, 1919, Mr. Williams has continued to exercise the duties of the office of Comptroller of the Currency and has received the salary thereof by virtue of the provisions of the Act of March 2, 1895 (28 Stat. 844), which are as follows:

"That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to all officers under the Treasury Department whose terms of office have expired or shall expire before the appointment and qualification of their successors, and who have been performing or shall perform the duties of their respective offices after the date of such expiration, the salary, compensation, fees, or emoluments authorized or provided by law in each case for the respective incumbents of the offices: Provided, That no such payment shall be made for any services rendered by any such officer wrongfully holding after the appointment and qualification of his successor."

"This statute was construed by Mr. Attorney General Moody in an opinion rendered June 27, 1906 (25 Op. 636). In his view the statute provided for the 'continuance in office' of officers under the Treasury Department. I have no reason to question this conclusion which is reinforced by the consideration that under such circumstances the officer continues obviously to act under and by virtue of his original appointment or commission. In other words, the language must be taken to be equivalent to the phraseology of many state statutes which provide that a term of office shall continue for a specified time and thereafter until the officeholder's successor shall have been appointed and qualified. If this view is sound, and I think it is, the case which you put falls within numerous decisions that under such circumstances the officer holding over holds de jure and not merely de facto."

Vol. VI, p. 843, sec. 5220. [First ed., vol. V, p. 166.]

When corporate existence terminates.—During the progress of liquidation the bank maintains its corporate existence. Fagan v. Texas Co., (Tex. Civ. App. 1920) 220 S. W. 346.

Vol. VI, p. 850, sec. 5234. [First ed., vol. V, p. 170.]

Amendment of section.—This section was amended by the Act of May 15, 1916, ch. 121, see 1918 Supp. Fed. Stat. Ann. 485.

V. ENFORCEMENT OF INDIVIDUAL LIABILITY OF STOCKHOLDERS

2. Limitations (p. 860)

A bill in equity in a federal court by the receiver of a national bank against former directors of the bank charging them with responsibility for mismanagement is governed by the statute of limitations of the state in which such federal court is sitting. Curtis v. Metcalf, (D. C. R. I. 1919) 259 Fed. 961.

Vol. VI, p. 865, sec. 5236. [First ed., vol. V, p. 176.]

I. CLAIMS

2. Priority of Claims

f. Claims of Depositors (p. 867)

Action for deposit—Necessity of demand.—"When the bank failed and went into the hands of the comptroller, its business was at an end; and when the comptroller . . . directed the receiver to publish a notice for three consecutive months, calling on all persons who might have claims against the bank to present the same and make legal proof thereof, this amounted to a waiver of the necessity for a demand by the depositor before he became entitled to sue for or claim his money. By closing its doors and ceasing to do business the bank said in effect that it would not pay the depositors, and the law does not require a vain or fruitless thing to be done." England v. Hughes, (Ark. 1920) 217 S. W. 13.

Vol. VI, p. 873, sec. 5239. [First ed., vol. V, p. 180.]

III. Statutory liability of directors and enforcement thereof.

1. Duties as to management, in general.
 - d. Delegation of duties.
2. Violation of banking laws, in general.
3. "Knowingly violate or knowingly permit, etc."
7. Excessive loans.

III. STATUTORY LIABILITY OF DIRECTORS AND ENFORCEMENT THEREOF

1. Duties as to Management, in General

d. Delegation of Duties (p. 879)

Thefts by teller and bookkeeper.—The directors of a national bank did not necessarily so neglect their duty as to be answerable for thefts by a teller and bookkeeper, concealed by overcharging a depositor, or by a false addition in the column of drafts or deposits in the depositors' ledger, merely because they accepted the cashier's statement of liabilities and did not inspect the depositors' ledger, even after an apparent shrinkage in deposits, where the cashier's statements of assets always were correct, the semiannual examination by the government examiners had disclosed nothing pointing to malfeasance, and they were encouraged in their belief that all was well by the president, whose responsibility as executive officer, interest as large stockholder and depositor, and knowledge from long daily presence in the bank were greater than theirs. Bates v. Dresser, (1920) 251 U. S. 524, 40 S. Ct. 247, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, modifying and affirming (C. C. A. 1st Cir. 1918) 250 Fed. 525, 162 C. C. A. 541. This case held however that the failure of the president and executive officer of a national bank to heed hints and warnings, including an apparent shrinkage in deposits, which, however little they may have pointed to the specific facts of theft by a teller and bookkeeper, would, if accepted, have led to an examination of the depositors' ledger, thereby disclosing past and preventing future thefts, may be treated by the courts as such negligence as renders him liable for thefts by such employee after he had the warnings which should have led to steps that would have made fraud impossible, even though the precise form that the fraud would take hardly could have been foreseen. It was further held that the reduced amount which a circuit court of appeals, modifying a decree of a district court, finds to be due the receiver of a national bank from its president on account of the latter's failure to guard against thefts by a teller and bookkeeper should bear interest from the date of the decree of the district court until the receiver interposed a delay by appealing to the Supreme Court from the decree of the circuit court of appeals.

2 Violation of Banking Laws, in General (p. 879)

Measure of director's legal liability.—In Fairbanks First Nat. Bank v. Noyes, (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1919) 257 Fed. 593, 168 C. C. A. 543, a director was sued for damages for the declaration of an illegal dividend and for making loans in excess of the amount permitted by the National Banking Law. In holding that he was not liable, the court said: "We are led to the inquiry, What is the measure of the appellee's legal liability to the bank of which he was director in causes of action such as are here brought before us? The appellee contends that the only rule of liability is that which is defined in Yates v. Jones National Bank, 206 U. S. 158, 27 Sup. Ct. 638, 51 L. Ed. 1002, where the court held that the National Banking Act itself affords the exclusive rule by which to measure the right to recover damages from directors based upon loss resulting solely from their violation of the duty expressly imposed upon them by a provision of the act, and that under that act proof of something more than negligence is required, and that there must be proof that the violation was in effect intentional. In that case the charge against the directors was that they had made false reports of the condition of the bank, and the decision was controlled by the consideration that in making and publishing the official reports of the condition of the bank the directors were acting in obedience to the National Banking Act, and that, where a statute creates a duty and prescribes a penalty for nonperformance, the rule prescribed in the statute is the exclusive test of liability. That decision was followed and its doctrine was applied in Williams v. Spensley, 251 Fed. 58, 163 C. C. A. 308, where the suit was against directors on their liability for declaring dividends voted out of the capital stock, and where the court said:

"Appellant contends that the liability of a national bank director for voting and declaring dividends out of the capital is an absolute liability, and no question of good faith, diligence, or knowledge on the part of a director that such dividends may impair the bank's capital is involved. This contention must be rejected, both on principle and authority. See Yates v. Jones National Bank, 206 U. S. 158, 27 Sup. Ct. 638, 51 L. Ed. 1002."

"The appellant in its brief admits that this is not an action founded upon the common-law liability of the appellee, but observes that under the facts developed at the trial the appellee was liable for willful neglect of his duty as director, within the doctrine of the decision of this court in McCormick v. King, 241 Fed. 737, 154 C. C. A. 439, where we held that the statutory liability of directors of a national bank, as prescribed in section 5239, Rev. St. is the measure of the right of recovery against them for loss resulting solely from their violation of the express provisions of the statute, but that that does not exclude their common-law liability for negligence in the management of business of the bank in violation of their oath of office which results in loss to its creditors and stockholders.

"In the present case, in the first, third, fourth, and fifth causes of action, the appellant expressly counts upon violations of that provision of the National Banking Act which prohibits loans in excess of the amount permitted by the act. As to those causes of action we think it clear that the rule of liability is that which is defined in Yates v. Jones National Bank, 206 U. S. 158, 27 Sup. Ct. 638, 51 L. Ed. 1002. But if we were to apply to all of these causes of action the common-law rule of liability recognized by this court in McCormick v. King, there is still nothing in the evidence to show that the appellee has been guilty of negligence in the management of the bank which has resulted in loss to its creditors or stockholders. In Briggs v. Spaulding, 141 U. S. 132, 11 Sup. Ct. 924, 35 L. Ed. 662, the court announced the rule of liability of directors, saying that directors of a national bank must exercise ordinary care and prudence in the administration of the affairs of the bank, but that they shall not be permitted to be shielded from liability because of want of knowledge of wrongdoing, if that ignorance is the result of gross inattention, and that they cannot be held responsible for losses resulting from the wrongful acts of other directors, unless the loss is the consequence of their own neglect of duty. In the McCormick Case this court said:

"No one would contend that a director must look into details of management, or keep closely in touch with routine matters, or know intimately to whom credits are given."

"The appellee became a director of the bank in consequence of the insistence of the other directors. He was not a banking man. He knew nothing of the banking business, and when he discovered evidences of irregularity in the management of the bank's business he resigned his office. At times he protested against the method in which the business was done. He urged that the branch agencies be closed. In declaring the dividend which gives rise to the second cause of action, the directors acted under the advice of McGinn, the regularly retained attorney for the bank, who is now a director and one of the principal stockholders of the corporation which brings this suit."

3. Knowingly Violate or Knowingly Permit, etc. (p. 880)

Participating in or assenting to excessive loans.—Directors of a national bank cannot be held liable, under R. S. sec. 5200 and this section, for knowingly participating in or assenting to an excessive loan unless such participation or assent was not through mere negligence, but was knowing and in effect intentional. If, however, a director deliberately refrains from investigating that which it is his duty to investigate, any violation of the statute must be regarded as in effect intentional. Corsicana Nat. Bank v. Johnson, (1919) 251 U. S. 68, 40 S. Ct. 82, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, wherein the court said: "Under the rule settled by familiar decisions of this court, in order for the bank to prevail in this action it must appear, not only that the liabilities of a person, company, firm, etc., to the bank for money borrowed were permitted to exceed the prescribed limit, but that defendant, while a director, participated in or assented to the excessive loan or loans, not through mere negligence, but knowingly and in effect intentionally, Yates v. Jones Nat. Bank, 206 U. S. 158, 180; with this qualification, that if he deliberately refrained from investigating that which it was his duty to investigate, any resulting violation of the statute must be regarded as 'in effect intentional.' Thomas v. Taylor, 224 U. S. 73, 82; Jones Nat. Bank v. Yates, 240 U. S. 541, 555."

7. Excessive Loans (p. 881)

Personal or financial responsibility of borrower as material in action against director.—The question whether a director of a national bank knowingly participated in or assented to, contrary to this section, the making of a loan in excess of the limit prescribed by R. S. sec. 5200, is not to be confused by any consideration of the supposed personal or financial standing of the borrower. Corsicana Nat. Bank v. Johnson, (1919) 251 U. S. 68, 40 S. Ct. 82, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —.

Accrual of cause of action against a director.—A cause of action against a national bank director for knowingly participating in an excessive loan accrues when the bank, through his act, parts with the money loaned, receiving in return negotiable paper that it cannot lawfully accept because the transaction is prohibited. The damage, as well as the injury, is complete at that time, and the bank is not obliged to await the maturity of the paper before suing. Corsicana Nat. Bank v. Johnson, (1919) 251 U. S. 68, 40 S. Ct. 82, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —.

Suit against one of several offending directors.—Every director of a national bank knowingly participating in or assenting to a loan in excess of the limit prescribed by R. S. sec. 5200, is made liable by this section in his personal and individual capacity, without regard to the question whether other directors likewise are liable; and he may alone be sued. Corsicana Nat. Bank v. Johnson, (1919) 251 U. S. 68, 40 S. Ct. 82, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —.

Absence of improper motive as defense in action against director.—The absence of any improper motive or desire for personal profit on defendant's part is no defense to an action against a director of a national bank for violating this section and R. S. sec. 5239, by knowingly participating in or assenting to an excessive loan. Corsicana Nat. Bank v. Johnson, (1919) 251 U. S. 68, 40 S. Ct. 82, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —.

Damages in action by bank against director.—The entire sum loaned, plus interest and less salvage, should be treated as the damages sustained by a national bank through a director's knowing participation in or assent to an excessive loan, and not merely the excess above what lawfully might have been loaned, where the entire excess loan formed but a single transaction. Corsicana Nat. Bank v. Johnson, (1919) 251 U. S. 68, 40 S. Ct. 82, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —.

The question whether a loan company having the same directors and managers as a national bank and identity of stock interest, upon rescinding for fraud a sale to it by the bank of the notes and indebtedness of a borrower for their full face value, received full restitution from the bank, is not material as bearing either upon the bank's right to sue a director for having knowingly participated in, or assented to, an excessive loan to such borrower, or upon the question of damages. Corsicana Nat. Bank v. Johnson, (1919) 251 U. S. 68, 40 S. Ct. 82, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —.

The damages sustained by a national bank by reason of a director's knowing participation in or assent to an excessive loan, are satisfied by a transfer of the borrower's notes and indebtedness to another corporation for their full face value if, and only if, the transfer is good and valid as against such corporation and its stockholders, or is duly ratified by them. Corsicana Nat. Bank v. Johnson, (1919) 251 U. S. 68, 40 S. Ct. 82, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, which held, however, that a national bank director cannot escape liability for knowingly participating in or assenting to an excessive loan because of a sale of the borrower's notes and indebtedness for their full face value to a loan company having the same directors and managers as the bank, and identity of stock ownership, if the transfer was made under circumstances rendering it voidable as against the loan company and as against the stockholders of both corporations, and the stockholders of the loan company exercised their right to rescind without unreasonable delay and gave notice to the bank, and the bank, recognizing the justness of the claim, restored to the loan company what was accepted as the equivalent in value of that which the bank had received for the transfer, the director not having changed his position and not being prejudiced by such delay as there was in exercising the right to rescind.

A national bank may recover from a director the damages sustained by reason of his knowing participation in or assent to an excessive loan, contrary to R. S. sec. 5200 and this section, although it remained solvent or even prosperous, and irrespective of any changes in stockholding interest or control occurring between the time the cause of action arose and the time of the commencement of the suit or of the trial, and even if the new stockholders acquired their interests with knowledge of the fact that a loss had been sustained, and that such director was responsible for it. Corsicana Nat. Bank v. Johnson, (1919) 251 U. S. 68, 40 S. Ct. 82, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —.

Vol. VI, p. 915, sec. 1. [First ed., vol. V, p. 183.]

The power of the comptroller to appoint a receiver.—To the same effect as the original annotation see (1917) 31 Op. Atty.-Gen. 157, wherein acting Attorney General John W. Davis said:

"Individual liability for the debts of a national bank was imposed upon its shareholders by section 12 of the national bank act of 1864 (R. S. sec. 5151). Provision was also made in a number of cases for the appointment by the comptroller of a receiver to wind up the affairs of a bank and to enforce where necessary the individual liability of shareholders. . . . Prior to 1876, however, the comptroller possessed no authority to appoint a receiver of a national bank on the ground of its insolvency. To remedy this and other defects in the then existing law, the act of June 30, 1876, was passed, upon the request of the Comptroller of the Currency made in a letter of March 6, 1876, explaining the bill as prepared by him. (See Cong. Rec., 44th Cong., 1st sess., p. 2227.) In this letter the provision of section 1 quoted above was explained as—'intended to authorize the Comptroller to appoint receivers of national banks in all cases of insolvency of such institutions, and experience has shown that such a provision is necessary.'

"The purpose of section 2 was explained as follows:

"'In several cases of banks in voluntary liquidation a small amount of indebtedness remains unpaid. Under existing laws the comptroller has no power to appoint receivers in such cases; but it is necessary under the decision of the Supreme Court [Kennedy v. Gibson, 8 Wall. 505-6] for him to appoint a receiver in order that the personal liability may be enforced. If the creditors could bring a suit in their own name against the shareholders, it is probable that the amount of indebtedness in every such instance could be collected without the necessity of the expense of a receivership. If the bill under consideration should become a law, any creditor, in his own behalf, or in behalf of himself and other creditors, might enforce individual liability against shareholders of national banks.'

"It seems clear from this explanation, which was apparently accepted by Congress, that the remedy given to creditors by section 2 was understood to be merely cumulative and not designed to impair or restrict the authority conferred upon the comptroller by section 1.

"It was accordingly held in Washington National Bank v. Eckels (1893; 57 Fed. 870) that the comptroller may appoint a receiver, when satisfied that a bank is insolvent, to close up its affairs and enforce the liability of its stockholders, even though the bank has previously gone into voluntary liquidation.

"Doubt is said to be thrown upon this construction of the act by the opinion in the case of Williamson v. American National Bank (C. C. A., 4th Cir., 1902; 115 Fed. 793). In that case the assignee of a bank at Asheville, N. C., which was in voluntary liquidation, and a creditor of the bank filed a bill in equity in South Carolina against a single shareholder to enforce his individual liability. The bill was demurred to on the grounds that the Circuit Court of North Carolina alone had jurisdiction of such a bill, that the other shareholders of the bank were necessary parties, and that there was a misjoinder of plaintiffs.

"In sustaining the demurrer it was stated in the opinion by Judge Keller, among other reasons, that the remedy provided by section 2 for enforcing the liability of shareholders of a bank in process of voluntary liquidation 'is exclusive in such cases and must be strictly pursued'; citing Pollard v. Bailey (20 Wall. 527) and Bank v. Franclyn (120 U. S. 747), which hold that where the same act creates a right and provides a remedy for its enforcement such remedy is exclusive.

"This view of section 2 is expressly disapproved in the more recent case of King v. Pomeroy (C. C. A., 8th Cir., 1903; 121 Fed. 287), in which it is clearly shown by the opinion of Judge Sanborn that the act of June 30, 1876, does not create a right against shareholders in favor of creditors and prescribe an exclusive remedy for the enforcement of the right, but that on the contrary the right against shareholders was created by the act of 1864 (R. S. sec. 5151), that from the time of the creation of this right ample remedy has existed for its enforcement through the general powers of the equity courts and that section 2 did not abrogate or limit that remedy but merely added another—'under the familiar rule that where a statute simply gives a new remedy in a case in which the right and an appropriate remedy existed before its enactment, it is cumulative and not exclusive' (p. 292). The opinion of Judge Sanborn, which seems to be supported by Richmond v. Irons (121 U. S. 27), is believed to express the proper view of the statute, and his reasoning is thought to apply with equal force to show that the remedy given in section 2 to the shareholders is likewise cumulative and not exclusive in its relation to the remedy provided in section 1 to be pursued by the comptroller. In my opinion, therefore, the comptroller has authority to appoint a receiver for a bank on the ground of its insolvency after as well as before it has gone into voluntary liquidation and for the same purposes."

1918 Supp., p. 478, sec. 4.

Limitations relating to charges for collection and payment of checks as applicable to state banks.—The limitations contained in section 13 of the Federal Reserve Act, as amended, relating to charges for the collection and payment of checks, do not apply to state banks not connected with the Federal Reserve system as members or depositors. Checks on banks making such charges cannot, however, be cleared or collected through Federal Reserve banks. (1918) 31 Op. Atty-Gen. 245, wherein it was said: "The limitations as to charges referred to in the question submitted are contained in the second proviso quoted above. This proviso, apparently recognizing an existing right of member and nonmember banks to make reasonable charges for the collection or payment of checks and drafts and remission therefor by exchange or otherwise, provides (1) that these charges are 'to be determined and regulated by the Federal Reserve Board, but in no case to exceed 10 cents per $100,' but (2) that 'no charges shall be made against the Federal Reserve banks.' Clearly these limitations apply to national banks, which are compelled to be member banks, to such state banks as become member banks by voluntarily accepting the terms and provisions of the Federal Reserve Act, and to such other state banks as do not become member banks but by becoming depositors in Federal Reserve banks upon the conditions specified avail themselves directly of the facilities of the Federal Reserve clearing system.

"The specific question to be determined is whether these limitations apply to nonmember state banks which do not become depositors but checks upon which may pass through Federal Reserve banks in process of clearing or collection.

"The theory and scheme of the Federal Reserve legislation seems inconsistent with the purpose on the part of Congress to subject state banks against their will to federal control or regulation. State banks are not compelled to become members of the Federal Reserve system or depositors therein. Those possessing the necessary qualifications are, however, invited to become members. They are not only free to accept or decline, but if they accept remain at liberty to withdraw from the system. (Sec. 9.) By section 13, as amended, state banks not desiring to become members or too small to be eligible for membership are likewise invited to share in the clearing and collection facilities of the system by becoming depositors in Federal Reserve banks. But they may accept or reject the invitation, and if they become depositors may close their accounts at their pleasure.

"It would accordingly seem that the limitations referred to ought not to be regarded as intended to be imposed upon state banks not connected with the Federal Reserve system as members or depositors against the will of such banks, unless that intention clearly appears.

"The term 'nonmember bank,' as used in the proviso, may reasonably be construed as referring to a nonmember bank that has become a depositor as authorized in the preceding provisions of the paragraph. If this term is so construed, obviously the provision requiring charges 'to be determined and regulated by the Federal Reserve Board, but in no case to exceed 10 cents per $100,' will have no application to nonmember state banks which are not depositors in a Federal Reserve bank. The broad language of the concluding clause, 'no such charges shall be made against the Federal Reserve banks,' may be construed not as directed against state banks which are not depositors but merely as specifying a condition upon which checks may clear through the Federal Reserve banks—in effect a prohibition against the payment of such charges by the Federal Reserve banks."

NATURALIZATION

"Free white persons"—Hindu.—A Hindu is a "free white person" within the meaning of this section and entitled to naturalization. In re Mohan Singh, (S. D. Cal. 1919) 257 Fed. 209, wherein it was said: "Modern ethnologists use the terms 'white' and 'Caucasian' synonymously and interchangeably. Seemingly the preponderance of respectable opinion includes the Hindus of India as members of the Aryan branch or stock of the so-called Caucasian or white race. See Report of the Immigration Commission, Senate Document No. 662, 61st Congress, Third Session. I have been cited to no anthropological authorities which include the Hindus in any of the other races of mankind. They belong to the Aryan stock, and therefore to the Caucasian or white race, because of certain physical and other peculiarities possessed by them and which indubitably mark their descent. 'Caucasians' are 'white,' whether they live under the tropic sun, and therefore have a very dark skin, or abide in northern climes, and possess a light one. The possession of a 'common racial stamp' is the basis of classification.

"My conclusion is that, in the absence of any more definite expression by Congress, which is the body possessing the power to determine who may lawfully apply for naturalization, any members of the white or Caucasian race, possessing the proper qualifications in every other respect, are entitled to admission under the general wording of the statute respecting 'all free white persons.' In the absence of an authoritative declaration or requirement to that effect, it would seem a travesty on justice that a refined and enlightened high caste Hindu should be denied admission on the ground that his skin is dark, and therefore he is not a 'white person,' and at the same time a Hottentot should be admitted merely because he is 'of African nativity.' The same observation might apply with respect to equally enlightened members of other races who are now denied admission on the ground that they fall without the designation white or Caucasian."

This section was not repealed by the Act of June 29, 1906, ch. 3592 (6 Fed. Stat. Ann. (2d. ed.) 952). Grahl v. U. S., (C. C. A. 7th Cir. 1919) 261 Fed. 487.

Vol. VI, p. 958, sec. 4, par. first. [First ed., 1909 Supp., p. 366.]

The requirement as to declaration of date of arrival is jurisdictional, In re Elliott,

(S. D. Tex. 1920) 263 Fed. 143, holding a declaration necessary where the alien passed through the United States before the act, resided for years in Mexico and returned to the United States after the passage of the act. The court said: "The act of 1906 is not concerned with arrivals in the United States which are merely incidental to the passage of persons into and through the country. It is only concerned with those arrivals which are made the basis of the claim to citizenship."

Amendment of declaration of intention by nunc pro tunc order.—A court has no power to admit an alien to citizenship by granting an order nunc pro tunc permitting him to amend his declaration of intention and petition for naturalization by striking out an erroneous renunciation of allegiance to a particular foreign sovereignty and substituting another therefor. U. S. v. Vogel, (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1919) 262 Fed. 262. Regarding the power of the court to allow such an amendment, it was said:

"When the Act of June 29, 1906 (34 Stat. 596), was enacted 'as a uniform rule of naturalization,' Congress dictated in particularity as to what the declaration of intention should consist of, and required the applicant to particularize as to the sovereignty from whence he came and which he was renouncing. The system is statutory, and the only province of the courts is to ascertain the will of Congress and execute it accordingly. Citizenship can only be obtained by complying with the terms as prescribed by Congress. The act itself provides the terms to an explicit degree when 'an alien may be admitted to become a citizen in the manner and not otherwise.' Citizenship may not be obtained by an alien in any other manner. Every material obligation, as imposed by statute, constitutes a part of the manner as contemplated by Congress in the act. The act provides that an alien shall renounce 'particularly by name to the prince, potentate, state, or sovereignty of which he was before a citizen or subject' at the appropriate time in each instrument. It is not within the power of courts, in our opinion, to vary this rule and permit the applicant at a later time to recognize his mistake and ask to change it, for to do so would be permitting the applicant to declare his intention of renunciation at a time other than when making his application.

"When making his declaration and signing his petition and filing the same is the time he must announce his renunciation as a citizen or subject of the particular government. It was the intent of Congress to have such renunciation of the particular foreign sovereignty made contemporaneously with the execution and filing of each of the necessary instruments, and the court is without power later to permit a change to date back by granting an order nunc pro tunc.

"For the court to do so, we think, is reading into the statute a permission which is tantamount to a trespass upon the executive domain, nor can the court say which steps must be complied with and which may be omitted in compliance, and which may be corrected if error creep in. To permit such power in the court would frustrate the whole act; it would place the power of the court above the terms of the act. To permit of a substantive amendment would, in but a step further, permit naturalization to become effective without amending an insufficient declaration. This the courts cannot and should not do. We think the court below was without the power to grant the order nunc pro tunc, and erred in admitting the appellee to citizenship."

II. "CONTINUOUSLY RESIDED" (p. 968)

Absence abroad.—An alien is not entitled to naturalization upon an application, where it appears that he has been absent for four years and seven months of the five-year period required by this paragraph for residence in the United States, and for seven months of the one-year period required for residence in a particular state. U. S. v. Bragg, (E. D. Pa. 1919) 257 Fed. 588.

Vol. VI, p. 975, sec. 6. [First ed., 1909 Supp., p. 370.]

Petition filed on verge of war.—The fact that this section provides that, in lieu of the hearing of the alien's request in open court made at the time of the hearing, no hearing shall be had until after a formal petition by the alien has been on file and notice given for ninety days, does not give an alien the right, if he sees that the United States is on the verge of war with the country of his nativity, to file his petition before war is declared, and to acquire thereby a vested right to a hearing during war and to a certificate, if the court find him otherwise qualified, as fully as could an alien from a friendly country. Grahl v. U. S., (C. C. A. 7th Cir. 1919) 261 Fed. 487.

III. Grounds for cancellation.

2. Fraud.

IV. Courts having jurisdiction to cancel.

III. GROUNDS FOR CANCELLATION

2. Fraud (p. 991)

False statement as to surrender of foreign allegiance.—To same effect as 1919 Supplement annotation, see U. S. v. Kramer, (C. C.

A. 5th Cir. 1919) 262 Fed. 395, wherein it was said:

"The statute, under the provisions of which defendant was admitted to citizenship, provides that if a naturalized citizen returns to the country of his nativity, or goes to any other foreign country, and takes permanent residence therein, within five years after his certificate of citizenship is issued to him, it shall be prima facie evidence of lack of intention to become a permanent citizen at the time of filing his application for citizenship, in the absence of countervailing evidence. Section 15, Act June 29, 1906; Luria v. U. S., 231 U. S. 9, 34 Sup. Ct. 10, 58 L. Ed. 101. Congress thereby clearly indicated that subsequent acts of a naturalized citizen would be sufficient evidence of his fraudulent intention at the time of his admission. If mere removal is sufficient evidence of fraud, why not subsequent acts of disloyalty, or statements indicating his want of allegiance? In the nature of things it is impossible for the government to make more than a cursory examination into the loyalty or the general character of the applicant for citizenship before admission, and the court must of necessity rely upon the good faith and truthfulness of the applicant when appearing before it and taking the oath of allegiance. In a criminal case, a man's intention may be judged by his acts. A conspiracy to defraud is usually proven by showing what the defendants did after the date upon which the conspiracy is alleged to have been formed, and the jury may consider such evidence in opposition to the testimony of defendant on the question of intention, and render a verdict of guilty upon it. Why not the same rule in a suit to cancel a certificate of naturalization?"

"American citizenship is a priceless possession, and one who seeks it by naturalization must do so in entire good faith, without any mental reservation whatever, and with the complete intention of yielding his absolute loyalty and allegiance to the country of his adoption. If he does not, he is guilty of fraud in obtaining his certificate of citizenship.

"There can be no doubt that, had the defendant in this case been guilty of the utterances with which he is charged before his naturalization, and that fact had been known to the court, he would not have been admitted. The proof makes out a prima facie case of the disloyalty of the defendant, and shows his continuing allegiance to the German emperor. We think the court might well have rested a judgment of cancellation upon it, and it was error to dismiss the bill. U. S. v. Ellis, (C. C.) 185 Fed. 546; U. S. v. Olson (D. C.) 196 Fed. 562; U. S. v. Wursterbarth (D. C.) 249 Fed. 908; U. S. v. Swelgin (D. C.) 254 Fed. 884."

Belief in anarchistic principles.—The certificate of naturalization of an alien will be canceled where it appears that he was a philosophical anarchist at the time his application for citizenship was granted but did not divulge such fact to the naturalization officials. U. S. v. Stuppiello, (W. D. N. Y. 1919) 260 Fed. 483. Regarding the scope of the word "anarchists," the court said: "In using the word 'anarchists' without qualification Congress intended to include all aliens who had in mind a theory of anarchy, or the absence of all direct government, in opposition to that of organized government. The former is diametrically opposed to the latter, and the philosophical anarchist who exploits and expounds his views is none the less dangerous to the welfare of the country than the anarchist who believes in overthrowing or destroying the government by force or violence. The means of accomplishing the end, though different, are both destructive; one consisting of insidious propaganda to arouse sentiment in opposition to the government, and the other to incite violence and disorder. Both are designed to discredit constituted authority."

IV. COURTS HAVING JURISDICTION TO CANCEL (p. 994)

In general.—To same effect as original annotation, see Grahl v. U. S., (C. C. A. 7th Cir. 1919) 261 Fed. 487, wherein it was said:

"A court that has jurisdiction of a stated subject-matter and has the necessary parties before it is empowered to act honestly upon a mistaken view of the law as fully as upon a correct view; and its judgment, though based on errors of law, is impervious to collateral attack in other courts or in the same court, but not to direct attack. Direct attacks, through motions for rehearing, bills of review, and appeals, are usual and of old-time familiarity. Procedure under section 15 is new and unusual. But none the less it is plainly a direct attack.

"Picturing our dual form of government, state sovereignty over exclusively state matters, national sovereignty over exclusively national matters, zones of concurrent jurisdiction, and the necessity that each sovereign should respect the dignity, rights, functions, and offices of the other, appellant contends (and some of his citations support his urge) that Congress could not have meant to set up the federal courts as reviewing tribunals over state courts.

"So far as Congress had the power, it placed the two kinds of courts on an equality. By the terms of section 15 (in connection with other provisions of the act of 1906) one federal trial court may review the grant of a citizenship certificate of another federal trial court or of a state trial court, and one state trial court may review the grant of another state trial court or of a federal trial court. No discrimination was made.

"But naturalization of aliens, like exclusion or deportation, is exclusively a federal function. So what Congress really did was to tender to the state court a power of attorney to exercise national authority, and the state court accepted and acted. But we do not know of any grant of power to Congress to force a state to use its treasury, court-houses, judges, and clerks in the administration of a purely national law, and undoubtedly a state could compel its officers to decline to act. So the state court's issuance of appellant's certificate was not a judgment of a state court, protected by the agis of its sovereign, and the present proceeding is merely an inquiry by the United States government into the action of its own agent under a power of attorney.

"If the suggestion should be made and accepted that the issuance of a naturalization certificate is an ex parte matter, of essentially an administrative nature, and not properly committed to the judiciary, manifestly appellant would not be aided in holding on to his certificate. Nor would that hypothesis affect the jurisdiction of the District Court under section 15, for Congress may properly commit to the federal court the judicial inquiry whether an administrative act has been legally performed, as is shown in deportation and like cases."

1918 Supp., p. 491, sec. 1, par. eleventh.

As the law stood prior to the enactment of this paragraph, an alien enemy, who had filed his petition subsequent to the declaration of war against the country of which he was a subject, could not be naturalized during the war. In re Pollock, (S. D. N. Y. 1918) 257 Fed. 350.

1918 Supp., p. 495, sec. 3.

Declarations of intention dismissed for lack of prosecution.—A dismissal of a declaration of intention for lack of prosecution does not require the filing of a new declaration, since such a dismissal does not go to the fitness of the petitioner nor destroy the declaration. Hence, where a declaration of intention, made in 1899, is dismissed for lack of prosecution, such declaration may be considered under this paragraph on the declarant's petition for naturalization, although it was made more than seven years prior to the existence of a state of war between the United States and the alien's native country, and therefore comes within the prohibition of paragraph 11 of section 1. In such case the declarant should be allowed to amend his petition for naturalization so as to base it on his original declaration rather than on one made at a later date. In re Pollock, (S. D. N. Y. 1918) 257 Fed. 350.

1919 Supp., p. 274, sec. 1.

Qualifications of applicant.—An applicant, in order to be entitled to naturalization under this section, must not only bring himself within its provision, but must also show that he has the qualifications set forth in section 4 of the Act of June 29, 1906, ch. 3592 (6 Fed. Stat. Ann. (2d ed.) 956). Accordingly, the application of an alien for naturalization under this section will be denied, where it appears that he was subject to registration under the Selective Service Act (9 Fed. Stat. Ann. (2d ed.) 1136), that he surrendered to his consul a previously made declaration of intention to become a citizen of the United States, and filed an affidavit of willingness to return to his native country, that he attempted to claim exemption from military service on the ground of being an alien, and that after being inducted into military service he declined to become a citizen, although requested to do so. In re Loen, (W. D. Wash. 1919) 262 Fed. 166. In denying the application, the court said:

"The applicant claims that he was honorably discharged, and that this application is timely, and that he should be admitted. The application is within a year, and he bears an honorable discharge.

"Is the examination of the court as to the applicant's qualification for citizenship limited to the timeliness of the application, and to the discharge, or is the duty still imposed upon the court to determine whether the applicant comes within the other requirements of the law? The exceptions in favor of an honorably discharged soldier appear to be definitely and clearly pointed out, and limited to proof of residence and declaration of intention, as far as the present inquiry is concerned. All of the requisites except residence and declaration of intention must therefore be met by the applicant, as the only limitation placed upon the court, as far as concerns us here, is with relation to declaration of intention and residence. The applicant never left the training camp. So far as appears, no further disposition was made of his claim for exemption by the departments at Washington.

"In the instant case, the applicant had declared his intention to become a citizen, and under oath declared his willingness to renounce all allegiance to foreign sovereignty. By that oath he solemnly swore it to be his bona fide intention to transfer his citizenship and allegiance. This implied willingness and intention to defend the flag, to support the Constitution and laws of the United States; and, when invitation was extended, he declined to do so, thereby repudiating his declared intention, and asserted under oath preference for his native country. He failed to meet the test. Nothing appears to indicate a change of sentiment or feeling of regret.

"Citizenship and allegiance to this country are made of sterner stuff. He is not fitted to take the oath of allegiance. Interpretation of the oath of allegiance is more than a mere formula of words. It is the translation of the alien applicant for citizenship from foreign language, foreign history, foreign ideals, and foreign loyalty, into a living character of our language, of our history, of our life, of our ideals, and loyalty to our flag. It is that intellectual, spiritual, patriotic development of love for the United States, his adopted country, and its Constitution and laws, which moves him in sincerity to dedicate his life to its service, and conscientiously agree to defend it against all enemies and the implanting in his soul of a sincere determination that in the hour of danger or attack upon the Constitution or the flag, to devote to their defense and support unlimited loyal service to the extent of his life, if required. Any person unwilling to pledge his hands, his heart, his life, to the service and preservation of the government of the United States, first and always, is unworthy to be admitted to citizenship.

"The proof does not show the applicant's loyalty to our flag and his willingness to defend it. This applicant, when the flag was assaulted by a foreign foe, was unceasing in his efforts to evade military service in a conflict forced upon this country, and did nothing which would indicate that he was attached to the principles of the Constitution of the United States, carrying forward liberty, equality, justice, and humanity. It was not until all danger was past, when the armistice was signed, that he made up his mind to again knock at the door of his country, and ask to be admitted to citizenship.

"The application is denied with prejudice, and before he can be admitted to citizenship he will have to serve a probationary period which will justify a court to conclude that he is in truth and in fact attached to the principles of the Constitution and the laws of this country."

NAVY

Effect of pardon.—A person "who has deserted in time of war from the naval or military service of the United States," and who has been pardoned for the offense, is ineligible for re-enlistment in the naval service. (1918) 31 Op. Atty.-Gen. 225, wherein it was said:

"In an opinion by Attorney General Bonaparte dated June 16, 1908 (26 Op. 617) it was held that a full and unconditional pardon of a deserter from the Navy so far removes all the disabilities incident to his offense that it is in legal contemplation obliterated, so that he can no longer be regarded as a deserter or denied re-enlistment under Revised Statutes, section 1420. For the reasons heretofore stated in answer to your first question, supra, I am unable to concur in this view.

"In an earlier opinion (22 Op. 36) Attorney General Griggs, construing a statutory requirement that 'no soldier shall be again enlisted in the Army whose service during his last preceding term of enlistment has not been honest and faithful' (28 Stat. 216), held that a candidate for enlistment whose previous service had not been honest and faithful could be rejected notwithstanding the President's pardon of the offense.

"The reasoning there was that 'whilst the President's pardon restores the criminal to his legal rights and fully relieves him of the disabilities legally attaching to his conviction, it does not destroy an existing fact, viz, that this service was not honest and faithful' (p. 39).

"Neither does a pardon destroy the fact of desertion. This reasoning finds support in the opinion of the Supreme Court in Carlesi v. New York, [233 U. S. 51].

"These two opinions of my predecessors are apparently irreconcilable in principle. A later opinion by Attorney General Bonaparte (27 Op. 178, 182-183), holding that a pardon could not convert a dismissal under sentence of court-martial into an honorable discharge, which was a prerequisite to the grant of a pension, seems to return to the reasoning of the earlier opinion of Attorney General Griggs.

"For the reasons stated I am of opinion that a pardon does not remove the disqualification attached to the fact of desertion."

said position of Chief of Bureau or Judge Advocate General. (1919) 31 Op. Atty.-Gen. 505.

Vol. VI, p. 1130. [Officers who have served as bureau chiefs.] [First ed., 1909 Supp., p. 390.]

Retirement after relinquishment of office.—This provision was enacted for the benefit of bureau chiefs who are placed on the retired list while so serving, and does not apply to an officer who having served as such is retired after relinquishing said office. Stokes v. U. S., (1919) 54 Ct. Cl. 70.

Vol. VI, p. 1131. [Rank and pay of retired officers.] [First ed., 1909 Supp., p. 397.]

Rank on retirement.—This section does not authorize a retirement with a higher rank than the officer would have had if he had successfully passed his examination; and the rank with which the officer is to be retired is not determined by the date of the action of the retiring board. Tappan v. U. S., (1919) 54 Ct. Cl. 76, wherein it was held that the fact that plaintiff was borne on the Navy Register as a rear admiral "subject to examination and confirmation" did not make him such, but indicated simply that he was eligible to become a rear admiral.

1918 Supp., p. 514. [Commissioned personnel, etc.]

Promotion of staff officers by President.—Advancement of staff officers in the Medical, Pay, and Construction Corps, and Corps of Civil Engineers, from captain to rear admiral, may be made upon selection by the President. So promotion of all staff officers of the navy to higher offices may be made upon selection by the President. (1916) 31 Op. Atty.-Gen. 80.

Transmission of record of line officers up for promotion.—The Secretary of the Navy is required to transmit to the board of recommendation for selection for promotion of certain line officers of the navy the entire record of such officers since their appointment to the navy. (1917) 31 Op. Atty.-Gen. 87.

1918 Supp., p. 526, sec. 6.

Promotion of captains, commanders, and lieutenant commanders.—Under this section, the promotion board may consider for promotion captains, commanders, and lieutenant commanders who shall have served four years in their present grades on November 30 of the year of the convening of the board, notwithstanding that at the time of such consideration they have not served four years in their present grades. (1917) 31 Op. Atty-Gen. 142.

1918 Supp., p. 549. [Provisional grade, etc.]

Examination as prerequisite to higher provisional rank.—When an enrolled member in the Naval Reserve Force has been given a provisional rank, he may thereafter, either with or without being confirmed in such provisional rank, be given a higher provisional rank without examination by the statutory board of three naval officers of or above the rank of lieutenant commander and the statutory board of naval surgeons. (1917) 31 Op. Atty-Gen. 173.

OFFICERS OF MERCHANT VESSELS

Vol. VI, p. 1256, sec. 4442. [First ed., vol. V, p. 400.]

Suspension of license.—A pilot's license may not be suspended under the provisions of this section on a general charge of inattention to duties, the character of the charges not being specifically set forth. Where, however, he is also specifically charged with violating article 16 of section 1 of the Act of June 7, 1897, ch. 4 (2 Fed. Stat. Ann. (2d ed.) 421) and found guilty, he may be fined fifty dollars under section 3 of that Act (2 Fed. Stat. Ann. (2d ed.) 447). In such case, a federal court may enjoin the local inspectors from suspending his license. Bulger v. Benson, (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1920) 262 Fed. 929, affirming (W. D. Wash. 1918) 251 Fed. 757, in the 1919 Supplement annotation. The court said:

"Article 16, already quoted, of the Pilot Rules, is part of section 1, chapter 4, of the Act of June 7, 1897, 30 Stat. 99. Section 3 of the same chapter and same act (30 Stat. 102) provides that every pilot who neglects or refuses to observe the provisions of the act referred to shall be liable to a penalty of $50. Under section 4405 of the Revised Statutes, as amended by Act Feb. 8, 1907, 34 Stat. 881, the supervising inspector and the supervising inspector general, as a board, shall establish, with the approval of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, all necessary regulations with respect to the steamboat inspection service and such regulations shall have the force of law. Under a prescribed form (801a) of the General Rules and Regulations of the Board of Supervising Inspectors, edition of November 21, 1916, page 144, it is provided that—

"Upon the revocation or suspension of the license of any such officer, master, or pilot, said license shall be surrendered to the local inspectors ordering such suspension or revocation."

"Under the rules of practice for the government of supervising and local inspectors of steam vessels, in trials of such officers, the inspector shall furnish the 'accused' with a copy of the charges, 'setting forth specifically their character and the section of the statutes or the rules of the board that have been violated,' and an appeal is provided for to the supervising inspector, who, in turn, is required to proceed to investigate the case under the same rules prescribed for the trial of the accused by the local board.

"The contention of the appellants is that the local inspectors had jurisdiction to make the order of suspension, unless the provisions of the statutes already referred to with respect to such suspension are to be construed as penal rather than remedial. An opinion by the Attorney General (24 Op. Atty-Gen. 136) is cited as holding that, for the crimes and misdemeanors which are defined in the steamboat inspection law, a regular course of procedure through the criminal courts is provided, but that, where a question arises with respect to the revocation of the licenses of pilots and engineers, section 4450, heretofore quoted, is remedial, and not penal, and that the revocation of a license, as provided for in that statute, may be viewed—'not in the light of a punishment for an offense committed, but rather as a remedy placed in the hands of the board of inspectors to insure greater efficiency in the steamboat inspection service, and to guard against obstruction or injury to commerce. . . .'

"We agree with the District Court that the charge of inattention to duties and violation of section 4442 in connection with the navigation of the steamer Tolo does not 'specifically' set forth the character of the charges against the pilot. The statute evidently contemplated some statement of facts upon which the alleged inattention to the duties of his station was predicated, and we think that more than the general language should have been set forth.

"There was a specific charge, however, that the pilot had disregarded the provisions of article 16 of the Pilot Rules as quoted, and the learned judge was correct in ruling that the specific allegation should control, and that the general reference to section 4442 was surplusage. To the specific charge the accused made answer, and after investigation was found guilty. The question whether or not the statute or rule is strictly penal is not of controlling importance, further than to say that it is penal in its nature, and should receive a strict construction.

"The only charge being that the accused violated article 16 of the Pilot Rules, the inspectors were only authorized to impose the penalty provided for by article 31, section 7180, Barnes' Federal Code. Under this rule every pilot who neglects or refuses to observe the provisions of the act shall be liable to a penalty of $50, and for all damages sustained by any passenger to his person or to his baggage by such neglect, provided that nothing in the rule shall relieve any vessel, owner, or corporation from any liability incurred by reason of such neglect or refusal. As no suspension of license is provided for in case of a violation of article 16, the inspectors exceeded their authority in ordering a suspension of the license of the appellee and in directing a surrender of his license."

PASSPORTS

Vol. VI, p. 1266, sec. 4075. [First ed., vol. V, p. 406.]

"Insular possessions of United States."—The governor of Porto Rico may be authorized to issue passports under this section as amended in 1902. (1917) 31 Op. Atty.-Gen. 151, wherein the Attorney General, replying to the Secretary of State, said: "In your letter of April 11, 1917, submitting the question above referred to, it was stated that by the 'rules governing the granting and issuing of passports in the insular possessions of the United States,' signed by the President July 19, 1902, the chief executive of Porto Rico was authorized to issue passports in that island; and it was suggested that in answering the question submitted it seemed 'necessary to determine whether Porto Rico now has the status of one of the 'insular possessions of the United States' or whether it is an organized Territory and a part of the United States proper.'"

"In the opinion of May 8, 1917, it was stated that inasmuch as Porto Rico has the status of an organized Territory it is no longer an 'insular possession of the United States,' and that accordingly the governor of Porto Rico has not, and cannot be granted, authority to issue passports.

"The acting Secretary of State now transmits with his letter of July 25, 1917, a copy of a letter of the Secretary of War and of a memorandum by the Chief of the Bureau of Insular Affairs supporting the view that the present political status of Porto Rico as an organized Territory is not inconsistent with that of an 'insular possession of the United States.'

"I am convinced that this view is correct and that the opinion of May 8, 1917, is erroneous. The words 'insular possessions of the United States' in their natural meaning more aptly refer to geographical location than to a particular form of government. Unless, therefore, those words as used in this statute have some other meaning, a Territory of the United States may at the same time be an insular possession of the United States. There is nothing to indicate that Congress intended to use them here in any other than their natural meaning. On the contrary, the instances cited by the Chief of the Bureau of Insular Affairs show that the practice of Congress has been to use the words in a geographical sense and consequently as including Territories, when separated by water from the continental United States, such as Porto Rico and Hawaii.

"It follows that the governor of Porto Rico may still be authorized to issue passports under section 4075 of the Revised Statutes, as amended. In this aspect of the question it is unnecessary for me to express any view as to the present status of Porto Rico as an organized or unorganized Territory, and I accordingly withdraw what was said in my opinion of May 8, 1917, on that point."

PATENTS

- I. In general.
- II. Who may obtain patents.
- III. What may be patented.
- IV. Invention.
- VI. Novelty and anticipation.
- VIII. Abandonment.

I. IN GENERAL (p. 23)

Second application making conflicting claims.—An inventor whose patent application discloses, but does not claim, an invention which conflicts with that of a later unexpired patent, must, in the absence of laches, be deemed to have two years from the date of the conflicting patent in which to file a second application, making conflicting claims, in order to have the question of priority of invention between the two determined in an interference proceeding, in view of this section, as amended by the Act of March 3, 1897, which gives an inventor two years after patent has issued to another for his invention, in which he may file his own application, and the time cannot be cut down to one year on grounds of equity or public policy, or because of the one-year rule prescribed by section 4894, for further prosecution of an application after office action thereon. Chapman v. Wintroath, (1920) 252 U. S. 126, 40 S. Ct. 234, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, reversing (1918) 47 App. Cas. (D. C.) 428.

II. WHO MAY OBTAIN PATENTS (p. 23)

Right to patent—Requirements—Compliance with statutory conditions.—No one has the right to a patent without bringing himself within all the conditions set forth in this section and R. S. sec. 4887 (7 Fed. Stat. Ann. (2d ed.) 138). Jost v. Borden Stove Co., (E. D. Pa. 1920) 262 Fed. 163, wherein it was said:

"Without the patent he has no property right upon which any one could trespass. Having that property right, he has a cause of action against any one who infringes. In other words, his cause of action depends, not upon whether he is within the provisions of the patent laws, and, in consequence, possessed of the right to a patent, but whether a patent has in fact been granted to him. It is true the right he claims may be open to question, and the validity of his patent to successful attack; yet nevertheless the real condition of things is that without the patent he has nothing, but with it he has all the rights which it grants, until the invalidity of the patent appears. Hence we have the accepted doctrine that evidence of the grant of a patent and of infringement presents a case which, if made out by the evidence, the defendant must overcome, or the plaintiff is entitled to his decree."

Lack of diligence.—To same effect as original annotation, see Derr v. Gleason, (App. Cas. D. C. 1919) 258 Fed. 969.

Employer and employee—Hired inventor.—Where an employee is hired for the express purpose of making drawings and designing certain improvements to a machine, and it is apparent from the circumstances attending his employment, the nature of the work he performed and his subsequent conduct that it was not intended that he should retain any personal interest in the results of his efforts in the improvement of the machine, the employer will be held to be entitled to the patent for the improvement. Ingle v. Landis Tool Co., (M. D. Pa. 1919) 262 Fed. 150.

III. WHAT MAY BE PATENTED (p. 35)

Process and apparatus as single invention.—To same effect as original annotation, see Nestle Patent Holding Co. v. Fredericks, (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1919) 261 Fed. 780.

Differentiation from prior art.—"The sustaining of a patent upon a differentiation from the prior art does not authorize the successful party to gather to himself a monopoly of what was old when he entered the field." T. L. Smith Co. v. Cement Tile Machinery Co., (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1919) 257 Fed. 423, 168 C. C. A. 463.

Improvement of patentable articles.—Infringement of a patented device cannot be avoided by merely improving it. Otto Coking Co. v. Koppers Co., (C. C. A. 3d Cir. 1919) 258 Fed. 122, 169 C. C. A. 208.

Different improvements as separate inventions.—To same effect as original annotation, see Jay v. Sparks-Withington Co., (N. D. Ohio 1918) 258 Fed. 45; Sandusky Foundry, etc., Co. v. De Lavaud, (N. D. Ohio 1919) 258 Fed. 640; Jay v. Weinberg, (C. C. A. 7th Cir. 1919) 262 Fed. 973, wherein it was said: "Where the general art has been developed by the pioneers, there is room for an adapter to have only a specific patent for his particular form of adaptation, and he is not privileged to exclude others from gleaning in the same open field."

Invention cannot be made to depend upon the length of an advancing step in an art. If the step be an advance, and the means by which the advance is made are new and beyond the conception of a mechanic trained in the art, the invention must be recognized. Superior Mach. Tool Co. v. Cincinnati Lathe, etc., Co., (C. C. A. 7th Cir. 1919) 259 Fed. 273, 170 C. C. A. 341.

Product of process.—To same effect as original annotation, see Dunn Wire-Cut Lug Brick Co. v. Toronto F. Clay Co., (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1919) 259 Fed. 258, 170 C. C. A. 326.

IV. INVENTION (p. 44)

Attributes of invention.—In A. Kimball Co. v. Noesting Pin Ticket Co., (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1919) 262 Fed. 148, the court said regarding the attributes of an invention:

"Invention, as we are instructed by the highest court, is not judicially to be defined; i. e., it cannot be determined as to limit of meaning. But many attributes may be marked. Thus patentable invention is a means only; it is the embodiment of the inventive idea (Corrington v. Westinghouse, & Co., 178 Fed. 715, 103 C. C. A. 479); and even the smallest invention, if it merits the title, must meet an existing want, yet that want, invoking invention, may never be apparent until some previous invention, imperfectly satisfying the more universal want, discloses the subordinate and narrower need (1 Rob. Pat. 134).

"It is this thought that justifies, and indeed compels, study of the prior art, as distinguished from anticipatory patents or uses. To know not only what the 'more universal want' was, but how far and by what means it had been supplied, is a process not seldom resulting in the validation of modest inventions, and the destruction of many of great pretense.

"This indicates that 'invention' is not a term of legal art, like 'common carrier' or 'contingent remainder'; nor can applicability be fixed by consulting dictionaries, while reports furnish, not precedent, but only illustrations. What does connect the large word with the perhaps small thing is evidence; and litigations like this become studies of facts, as varying in patent matters as in other human contests."

New application of prior knowledge.—A patent will issue for a new device which is the result of a new application of prior knowledge. A. Kimball Co. v. Noesting Pin Ticket Co., (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1919) 262 Fed. 148.

Omission of element.—An invention is patentable if one of the elements of a similar invention is omitted without the substitution of an equivalent. Russell Grader Mfg. Co. v. F. B. Zeig Mfg. Co., (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1919) 259 Fed. 575, 171 C. C. A. 33.

The doctrine of mechanical equivalents may be invoked in all patents. Searchlight Horn Co. v. Victor Talking Mach. Co., (D. C. N. J. 1919) 261 Fed. 395.

Substitution of equivalents.—To same effect as original annotation, see Chase v. Union, etc., Trust Co., (D. C. Conn. 1919) 258 Fed. 632; Smith Cannery Machines Co. v. Seattle-Astoria Iron Works, (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1919) 261 Fed. 85, holding that the superiority of the equivalent substituted must be due to a difference in function or mode of operation or some essential change in character in order to sustain a patent.

"The patent law does not permit an inventor to variously arrange the parts to cover the entire idea . . . and thus exclude mechanical equivalency and the results accomplished." Adt v. E. Kirstein Sons Co., (W. D. N. Y. 1919) 259 Fed. 277, affirmed (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1919) 259 Fed. 561, 170 C. C. A. 523.

Combination of mechanical equivalents.—The assembling of mechanical equivalents of features old in the art into a single structure does not constitute invention. In re Smith, (App. Cas. D. C. 1920) 262 Fed. 643.

Test of patentable combination.—To same effect as original annotation, see Independent Coal Tar Co. v. Cressy Contracting Co., (C. C. A. 1st Cir. 1919) 260 Fed. 463, 171 C. C. A. 289.

Combination of old elements.—"It is no defense to a claim of infringement that one or more elements of a patented combination, or one or more parts of a patented improvement, may be found in one old patent, and others in another, and still others in a third." Independent Coal Tar Co. v. Cressy Contracting Co., (C. C. A. 1st Cir. 1919) 260 Fed. 463, 171 C. C. A. 289.

A new combination of old elements producing old results but in a new, different, and substantially better and cheaper manner, is patentable. Meurer Steel Barrel Co. v. Draper Mfg. Co., (N. D. Ohio 1919) 260 Fed. 410; Minneapolis, etc., R. Co. v. Barnett, etc., Co., (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1919) 257 Fed. 302, 166 C. C. A. 386.

Combination by union of parts.—To same effect as original annotation, see Smith Cannery Machines Co. v. Seattle-Astoria Iron Works, (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1919) 261 Fed. 85.

Combinations producing result with varying degrees of success.—When the advance toward the desired result in an art is gradual, and several inventors form different combinations, which accomplish the result sought with varying degrees of success, each is entitled to his own combination, as long as it differs from those of his competitors and does not include theirs. Minneapolis, etc., R. Co. v. Barnett, etc., Co., (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1919) 257 Fed. 302, 168 C. C. A. 386.

New and useful result necessary.—To same effect as original annotation, see Crystal Percolator Co. v. Landers, (D. C. Conn. 1919) 258 Fed. 28, wherein it was said:

"Generally speaking, a combination of old elements, in order to be patentable, must produce by their joint action a novel and useful result, or an old result in a more advantageous way. To arrive at the distinctions between combinations and aggregations definite reference must be had to the decisions of this court. The subject was fully discussed in Palmer v. Corning, 156 U. S. 342 [15 Sup. Ct. 381, 39 L. Ed. 445], wherein the previous decisions were reviewed. The rule stated in Hailes v. Van Wormer, 20 Wall. 353, 368 [22 L. Ed. 241], was quoted with approval, wherein the court said: 'It must be conceded that a new combination, if it produces new and useful results, is patentable, though all the constituents of the combination were well known and in common use before the combination was made. But the results must be a product of the combination and not a mere aggregate of several results, each the complete product of one of the combined elements. Combined results are not necessarily a novel result, nor are they an old result obtained in a new and improved manner. Merely bringing old devices into juxtaposition, and there allowing each to work out its own effect without the production of something novel, is not invention. No one by bringing together several old devices without producing a new and useful result, the joint product of the elements of the combination and something more than an aggregate of old results, can acquire a right to prevent others from using the same devices, either singly or in other combinations, or, even if a new and useful result is obtained, can prevent others from using some of the devices, omitting others, in combination.' Hailes v. Van Wormer, 20 Wall. 353, 368 [22 L. Ed. 241]. In Richards v. Chase Elevator Co., 158 U. S. 299, 302 [15 Sup. Ct. 831, 39 L. Ed. 991], the rule was stated as follows: 'Unless the combination accomplishes some new result, the mere multiplicity of elements does not make it patentable. So long as each element performs some old and well-known function, the result is not a patentable combination, but an aggregation of elements.' In Specialty Manufacturing Co. v. Fenton Metallic Manufacturing Co., 174 U. S. 492, 498 [19 Sup. Ct. 641, 43 L. Ed. 1058], the rule was again tersely stated: 'Where a combination of old devices produces a new result such combination is doubtless patentable, but where the combination is not only of old elements, but of old results, and no new function is evolved from such combination, it falls within the rulings of this court in Hailes v. Van Wormer, 20 Wall. 353, 368 [22 L. Ed. 241]; Reckendorfer v. Faber, 92 U. S. 347, 356 [23 L. Ed. 719]; Phillips v. Detroit, 111 U. S. 604 [4 Sup. Ct. 580, 28 L. Ed. 532]; Brinkerhoff v. Aloe, 146 U. S. 515, 517 [13 Sup. Ct. 221, 36 L. Ed. 1066]; Palmer v. Corning, 156 U. S. 342, 345 [15 Sup. Ct. 381, 39 L. Ed. 445]; Richards v. Chase Elevator Co., 158 U. S. 299 [15 Sup. Ct. 831, 39 L. Ed. 991]."

Merely bringing together old devices.—To same effect as original annotation, see In re Smith, (App. Cas. D. C. 1920) 262 Fed. 717; J. H. Day Co. v. Mountain City Mill Co., (E. D. Tenn. 1918) 257 Fed. 561.

Combination producing new result.—While invention may exist, even though every element is old, provided the combination either produces a new result or effects an old result in a new and materially better way, yet all elements of the prior art have a bearing upon the question of invention, and it is unnecessary to a finding of lack of invention that every element be found in one embodiment. Edwards v. Dayton Mfg. Co., (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1918) 257 Fed. 980, 169 C. C. A. 130.

Double use.—To same effect as original annotation, see J. H. Day Co. v. Mountain City Mill Co., (E. D. Tenn. 1918) 257 Fed. 561.

Reduction to practice.—To same effect as original annotation, see Reichel v. Dorset, (App. Cas. D. C. 1920) 262 Fed. 652, holding that the mere obtaining of hog cholera antitoxin without a test of its potency by immunizing a hog, did not amount to a reduction to practice.

The filing of an allowable application constitutes a reduction to practice. Bonine v. Bliss, (App. Cas. D. C. 1919) 259 Fed. 989.

Failure to appreciate the patentability of an invention is no excuse for failing to reduce it to practice.

Commercial success.—To same effect as original annotation, see Smith v. Peck, etc., Co., (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1919) 262 Fed. 415.

"If the question of invention be doubtful, the balance will be turned in favor of patentability by a showing of undoubted commercial success." Meurer Steel Barrel Co. v. Draper Mfg. Co., (N. D. Ohio 1919) 260 Fed. 410.

General and extensive use.—A presumption of inventive novelty arises from general use by the public. Dunn Wire-Cut Lug Brick Co. v. Toronto F. Clay Co., (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1919) 259 Fed. 258, 170 C. C. A. 326.

VI. NOVELTY AND ANTICIPATION (p. 83)

Knowledge of inventor.—To same effect as original annotation, see In re Smith, (App. Cas. D. C. 1920) 262 Fed. 717.

Reduction to practice.—Prior public use.—Proof of the prior public use of a patented article or process sufficient to defeat a patent must be such as to leave no reasonable doubt of the prior public use more than two years before making the application for the patent. Oral testimony of the date of the prior use should find corroboration in evidence of contemporaneous records or memoranda, or physical exhibits, before striking down a patent because of prior public use. General Insulating Mfg. Co. v. Union Fibre Co., (C. C. A. 7th Cir. 1919) 261 Fed. 389.

Unsuccessful device.—To same effect as original annotation, see Consolidated Window Glass Co. v. Window Glass Mach. Co., (C. C. A. 3d Cir. 1919) 261 Fed. 362.

Analogous arts producing same products.—Though two arts, producing the same products from the same source, are concededly related, yet differences in them, if fundamental, may validly prevent inventions in one from operating as anticipations of inventions in the other. Otto Coking Co. v. Koppers Co., (C. C. A. 3d Cir. 1919) 268 Fed. 122, 169 C. C. A. 208.

Adaptability of prior device to performance of function covered by patent in suit.—It is not sufficient to constitute anticipation that the device relied upon might, by modification, be made to accomplish the function performed by the patent in question. It must be designed by the maker and adapted for the performance of such function. Smith v. Peck, etc., Co., (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1919) 262 Fed. 415.

Publication—Device described in foreign printed publications.—Patentable novelty cannot be asserted for a device which has been described in foreign printed publications. Bone v. Marion County, (1919) 251 U. S. 134, 40 S. Ct. 96, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (C. C. A. 7th Cir. 1917) 249 Fed. 211, 161 C. C. A. 247.

Sufficiency of published descriptions.—In Vacuum Cleaner Co. v. Thompson Mfg. Co., (S. D. Ia. 1919) 258 Fed. 239, regarding the sufficiency of published descriptions alleged to be anticipating, the court said: "Any printing, writing, or illustration relied upon as part of the prior art must be such as to make disclosure, not to an inventor, but to the ordinary individual, skilled as a workman in the field involved. The documents relied upon must teach the art; must be such that the world has knowledge of the art; must be such that qualified persons, without the exercise of inventive genius, may produce the device from the disclosures. Of course, it is not necessary that the device involved shall be shown by any one publication; but the inventor, relying upon his patent, is presumed to have had before him all of the prior printed disclosures."

Disclosure of various elements of combination.—Where patents, publications, and actual structures have been proved, some of which disclose one, and others more, of the old elements of the plaintiff's combinations, the fact that one of these disclosed one, and another another or more elements of the patented combination, while none of them discloses all of the elements thereof, does not necessarily establish the fact that any of them anticipates the combinations of the plaintiff. Minneapolis, etc., R. Co. v. Barnett, etc., Co., (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1919) 257 Fed. 302, 168 C. C. A. 386.

Burden of proving priority.—To same effect as second paragraph of original annotation, see Smith v. Peck, etc., Co., (D. C. Conn. 1919) 258 Fed. 40.

Evidence of anticipation required.—To same effect as first paragraph of original annotation, see Minneapolis, etc., R. Co. v. Barnett, etc., Co., (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1919) 257 Fed. 302, 168 C. C. A. 386.

Anticipation should be established, not merely by testimony of witnesses relating to facts many years previous, but by concrete, visible, contemporaneous proofs, which speak for themselves. The proof must establish a clear conviction, and something more than oral testimony, even of the highest character, is required, where there has been considerable lapse of time. Searchlight Horn Co. v. Victor Talking Mach. Co., (D. C. N. J. 1919) 261 Fed. 395.

VIII. ABANDONMENT (p. 127)

Experimental use.—To same effect as original annotation, see Alvey-Ferguson Co. v. John F. Trommer Evergreen Brewery, (E. D. N. Y. 1913) 260 Fed. 572, holding that unsuccessful experimental use at a world's fair was not an abandonment to the public so as to prevent an application for a patent more than two years later.

Disuse of patent.—To same effect as original annotation, see Reed v. Hughes Tool Co., (C. C. A. 5th Cir. 1919) 261 Fed. 192.

Unreasonable delay in application.—In Duncan v. Shelly, (App. Cas. D. C. 1920) 263 Fed. 639, it was held that a two years' delay in making application for a patent, not caused by poverty, worked an abandonment as against a person applying for a patent during that time.

II. SPECIFICATIONS AND DESCRIPTION

1. In General (p. 146)

Description as measuring invention.—The claims measure the invention, and while the inventor must describe the best mode of applying the principle of his invention the description does not necessarily measure the invention. Independent Coal Tar Co. v. Cressy Contracting Co., (C. C. A. 1st Cir. 1919) 260 Fed. 463, 171 C. C. A. 289.

Description of "best mode."—Secrecy may not be maintained as to the "best mode" in view of this section. And this necessitates the giving of trade secrets. Dow Chemical Co. v. American Bromine Co., (Mich. 1920) 177 N. W. 996.

3. Sufficiency (p. 148)

In general.—To same effect as original annotation, see Schaum v. Copley-Plaza Operating Co., (D. C. Mass. 1919) 260 Fed. 197, wherein it was held that the specification was sufficient.

Essential features.—A practical and useful invention is not disclosed by a patent for an improvement in photographing and developing apparatus, where the short reciprocating movement of the film-carrying rack, without which the machine confessedly cannot be successfully operated, is not disclosed in the patent, as it must be under this section, in order to render it valid. Beidler v. U. S., (1920) 253 U. S. 447, 40 S. Ct. 564, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (1918) 53 Ct. Cl. 636.

Construction by those skilled in the art.—To same effect as original annotation, see Searchlight Horn Co. v. Victor Talking Mach. Co., (D. C. N. J. 1919) 261 Fed. 395.

5. Amendments (p. 157)

Nature of amendments allowed.—To same effect as original annotation, see Schaum v. Copley-Plaza Operating Co., (D. C. Mass. 1919) 260 Fed. 197, holding that such an amendment need not be verified.

III. CLAIMS

1. Object (p. 158)

To same effect as original annotation, see United States Light, etc., Corp. v. Safety Car Heating, etc., Co., (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1919) 261 Fed. 915.

2. Construction (p. 158)

In general.—"A patent is the creature of the statute. The terms and conditions upon which the grant is made are fixed by the statute. Section 9432, Compiled Statutes 1918, [this section] requires the inventor to set forth his claims in 'such full, clear, concise, and exact terms as to enable any person skilled in the art . . . to make, construct, compound, and use the same.' What is not claimed distinctly in the invention, the public possesses. A patent is sustained, not for what the inventor may have done in effect, but what is pointed out clearly and distinctly in his open letter. . . .

"While we may give liberal construction to the language used to protect the inventor, we cannot rewrite the claim, or insert an element or modify an element in the combination upon which alone validity depends. Words that describe a result may, of course, be adjective in character, that is, modifying in meaning, yet they must be definite and understandable." Knight Soda Fountain Co. v. Walrus Mfg. Co., (C. C. A. 7th Cir. 1919) 258 Fed. 929, 170 C. C. A. 125.

Construed with specifications and description.—Whether the invention is large or small, primary or trivial, it remains true that, when a claim is clear and distinct, the patentee cannot go beyond the words thereof for the purpose of establishing infringement; the specification may be referred to for the purpose of limiting, but not of expanding, a claim, and the range of equivalents is measured by what is described and claimed. Homer Brooke Glass Co. v. Hartford-Fairmont Co., (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1919) 262 Fed. 427; United States Light, etc., Corp. v. Safety Car Heating, etc., Co., (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1919) 261 Fed. 915; Bisight Co. v. Onepiece Bifocal Lens Co., (C. C. A. 4th Cir. 1919) 259 Fed. 275, 170 C. C. A. 343.

Where the language of a claim includes elements described in general terms, the court in construing it may look to the specifications. I. T. S. Rubber Co. v. Panther Rubber Mfg. Co., (C. C. A. 1st Cir. 1919) 260 Fed. 934, 171 C. C. A. 576.

So where a term in the claims of a patent is susceptible of two meanings, it should be given that which the specifications show it was intended to have, if that meaning is not repugnant to the plain and clear terms used. Petroleum Rectifying Co. v. Reward Oil Co., (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1919) 260 Fed. 177, 171 C. C. A. 213, reversing (N. D. Cal. 1918) 260 Fed. 183.

Construction of claims for improvements.—To same effect as last paragraph of original annotation, see Crystal Percolator Co. v. Landers, (D. C. Conn. 1919) 258 Fed. 28.

The claims of a pioneer invention should receive a fairly liberal construction, one that will uphold rather than destroy. Petroleum Rectifying Co. v. Reward Oil Co., (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1919) 260 Fed. 177, 171 C. C. A. 213, reversing (N. D. Cal. 1919) 260 Fed. 183.

Claim defining element.—"Where the claim defines an element in terms of its form, material, location or function, thereby apparently creating an express limitation, where that limitation pertains to the inventive step rather than to its mere environment, and where it imports a substantial function which the patentee considered of importance to his invention, the court cannot be permitted to say that other forms, which the inventor thus declared not equivalent to what he claimed as his invention, are nevertheless to be treated as equivalent, even though the court may conclude that his actual invention was of a scope which would have permitted the broader equivalency." D'Arcy Spring Co. v. Marshall Ventilated Mattress Co., (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1919) 259 Fed. 236, 170 C. C. A. 304.

Value of contribution to art.—The claims of a patent application will be read not solely with an eye to the labor or inventive merit involved, but also with the value of its contribution to the general good in view. Dayton Engineering Laboratories Co. v. Kent, (E. D. Pa. 1919) 260 Fed. 187.

3. Essentials and Scope (p. 161)

Scope of claims generally.—To same effect as original annotation, see Merrill v. W. Bickford Co., (D. C. Me. 1919) 260 Fed. 207.

Arguments made in the patent office by the applicant to the examiners are not to be taken as a measure of his patent, when not accompanied by any changes in the claims. Crystal Percolator Co. v. Landers, (D. C. Conn. 1919) 258 Fed. 28.

Claims for process patent.—It is not essential that the claims of a patent for a process should set forth the principle on which the process operates. Petroleum Rectifying Co. v. Reward Oil Co., (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1919) 260 Fed. 177, 171 C. C. A. 213, reversing (N. D. Cal. 1918) 260 Fed. 183.

Invention having reversible attributes.—Where there is a capacity of reversibility with the same instrumentality, the courts will not restrict the claim to one attribute to the exclusion of the reversible attribute. Marconi Wireless Tel. Co. v. De Forest Radio, Telephone, etc., Co., (S. D. N. Y. 1919) 261 Fed. 393.

5. Effect of Claim (p. 170)

Rights determined by claim.—To same effect as original annotation, see Crystal Percolator Co. v. Landers, (D. C. Conn. 1919) 258 Fed. 28.

Extent of patentee's rights.—To same effect as original annotation, see Minneapolis, etc., R. Co. v. Barnett, etc., Co., (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1919) 257 Fed. 302, 168 C. C. A. 386.

6. Amendment of Claim (p. 173)

Amendments to meet objections of Patent Office.—Where an application is rejected by the Patent Office and the claims are thereafter amended and allowed, the patent is limited to the features set forth in the amended claims. Schulte v. Colorado Tire, etc., Co., (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1919) 259 Fed. 562, 170 C. C. A. 524.

8. Rejection of Claim (p. 175)

Estoppel by acquiescence in rejection.—To same effect as original annotation, see Ward v. Finley Method Co., (S. D. Tex. 1919) 259 Fed. 869.

Doubt as to patentability.—To same effect as original annotation, see Wilson's Application, (App. Cas. D. C. 1919) 258 Fed. 976.

Vol. VII, p. 193, sec. 4904. [First ed., vol. V, p. 499.]

Presumption of inventorship.—He who files first is presumably the inventor, and that presumption remains with him until it has been overcome by proof. Swinglehurst v. Ballard, (App. Cas. D. C. 1919) 258 Fed. 973.

An amendment of an application so as to show a single inventor instead of two joint inventors relates back to the original filing and does not cut off the rights of the applicant in an interference proceeding. In re Roberts, (App. Cas. D. C. 1920) 263 Fed. 646.

Burden of proof.—To same effect as original annotation, see Engle v. Manchester, (App. Cas. D. C. 1920) 262 Fed. 646; Bader v. Burroughs, (App. Cas. D. C. 1919) 261 Fed. 1016; Swinglehurst v. Ballard, (App. Cas. D. C. 1919) 258 Fed. 973.

Proof of priority beyond reasonable doubt.—To same effect as original annotation, see Braun v. Wiegand, (App. Cas. D. C. 1920) 262 Fed. 647; Leonard v. Young, (App. Cas. D. C. 1919) 258 Fed. 985.

Awarding priority on record.—The Commissioner of Patents has authority in a proper case to award priority on the record to the senior applicant. Lee v. Vreeland, (App. Cas. D. C. 1920) 262 Fed. 654.

Review of decision.—In Shenk v. Clark, (App. Cas. D. C. 1920) 263 Fed. 645, it was said: "We have considered the very carefully prepared brief of appellant's counsel, but have not been convinced that any error was committed by the Patent Office, and therefore, without further discussion of the question involved, affirm the decision."

Vol. VII, p. 202, sec. 4914. [First ed., vol. V, p. 506.]

Decision of question of fact.—To same effect as original annotation, see Greenawalt v. Dwight, (App. Cas. D. C. 1919) 258 Fed. 982. See also Erickson v. Dyson, (App. Cas. D. C. 1919) 258 Fed. 986.

Vol. VII, p. 211, sec. 4916. [First ed., vol. V, p. 511.]

Object of the law.—"The obvious intent of the statute providing for reissues, where, through inadvertence, accident, or mistake, the full scope of the invention has not been claimed, is to secure to the inventor a monopoly of that which he has actually discovered or invented." In re Otto, (App. Cas. D. C. 1919) 259 Fed. 985.

Laches.—To same effect as original annotation, see In re Otto, (App. Cas. D. C. 1919) 259 Fed. 985.

Effect of delay—Supposition of abandonment.—To same effect as original annotation, see Schneider's Application, (App. Cas. D. C. 1920) 262 Fed. 718, holding that a reissuance of a patent with broader claims would not be allowed after a delay of nearly three years, the patentee's sole excuse being that he had failed to examine his patent and discover the defect until shortly before making his application for a reissuance.

the manufacture and sale of a certain machine, includes improvements to the machine and drawings regarding them. Ingle v. Landis Tool Co., (M. D. Pa. 1919) 262 Fed. 150.

IV. LICENSES

Vol. VII, p. 242, sec. 9. [First ed., vol. V, p. 502.]

Jurisdiction of appellate court.—To same effect as original annotation, see In re Smith, (App. Cas. D. C. 1920) 262 Fed. 643.

Decisions appealable—Order dissolving interference proceeding.—An order of the Commissioner of Patents dissolving an interference proceeding is not appealable. Such an order is not final. Cowles v. Rody, (App. Cas. D. C. 1919) 261 Fed. 1015; Parker v. Craft, (App. Cas. D. C. 1919) 258 Fed. 988.

Conclusiveness of decision of patent office.—To same effect as third paragraph of original annotation, see Kennicott v. Cape, (App. Cas. D. C. 1920) 262 Fed. 641; Hopkins v. Riegger, (App. Cas. D. C. 1920) 262 Fed. 642; Bonine v. Bliss, (App. Cas. D. C. 1919) 259 Fed. 989, holding that the question of whether or not an application is allowable and one upon which the issuance of a patent can be predicated, is primarily for the experts of the patent office and would not be inquired into on appeal except for manifest error.

III. ASSIGNMENTS

3. Form and Requisites (p. 259)

Assignment of unpatented invention.—There is no provision of law that prevents the assignment of an unpatented invention, but when a patent therefor is granted this section applies and requires the assignment, conveyance or grant of whatever interest therein, shall be in writing. Ingle v. Landis Tool Co., (M. D. Pa. 1919) 262 Fed. 150.

5. Nature and Effect (p. 264)

Nature of assignee's title.—An assignee of a patentee acquires no better title to the patent than his assignor had at the time of the assignment, and may assert only such rights regarding it as his assignor could have asserted. Ingle v. Landis Tool Co., (M. D. Pa. 1919) 262 Fed. 150.

Assignment of patent as including improvement.—An assignment of all the patents, drawings, patterns, etc., relating to

1. Nature and Requisites (p. 271)

Implied license.—Where the designing or creating of a machine or process involves invention and a patent is taken out, it is well established that the person for whose benefit such creating was done is entitled to an irrevocable license to the use of said patent to such extent as may be necessary to secure to him the beneficial rights intended. McKinnon Chain Co. v. American Chain Co., (M. D. Pa. 1919) 259 Fed. 873.

Contracts with salesmen as license agreements.—Contracts by a company manufacturing a patented machine whereby agents are given the exclusive sale of such machines in a certain territory are not license agreements. This is especially true where the contracts contain no reference to the patent under which the machines are made and no reference to the machines as patented articles. Standard Sewing Mach. Co. v. Jones, (C. C. A. 3d Cir. 1. 9) 260 Fed. 170, 171 C. C. A. 206.

4. Construction (p. 275)

Waiver of delivery of formal licenses.—In Okmulgee Window Glass Co. v. Frink, (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1919) 260 Fed. 159, 171 C. C. A. 195, it was held that under the evidence the parties to a license contract had waived a provision therein requiring the delivery by the licensor of formal licenses to the licensee.

5. Operation and Effect (p. 279)

Estoppel of licensee.—To same effect as original annotation, see Bell, etc., Co. v. Bliss, (C. C. A. 7th Cir. 1919) 262 Fed. 131; Churchward International Steel Co. v. Bethlehem Steel Co., (E. D. Pa. 1919) 260 Fed. 962.

Priority over subsequent assignment.—“The decisions have for so long held that a license from a patentee prevails over a subsequent assignment that I do not feel free to disregard the rule so established. Chambers v. Smith, Fed. Cas. No. 2,582; 5 Fish. Pat. Cas. 14; Farrington v. Gregory, Fed. Cas. No. 4,688, 4 Fish. Pat. Cas. 221; Hamilton v. Kingsbury, Fed. Cas. No. 5,984, 17 Blatch. 264; Jones v. Berger (C. C.) 58 Fed. 1006. I have not found that this rule has been confirmed by any appellate court, and it seems to me open at least to some doubt whether agreements to license, so far as they operate in futuro, are more than executory contracts, which would under ordinary rules yield to the legal title of a bona fide purchaser. Under the statute (R. S. § 4898), an unrecorded earlier assignment is invalid, and a result is surely somewhat anomalous which leaves a licensee who takes no interest in the property, in a stronger position than an assignee who has become the owner in whole or in part. Nevertheless, if the rule is to be changed, it must certainly be by an appellate court, and I accept it for the purposes of this case." Keystone Type Foundry v. Fastpress Co., (S. D. N. Y. 1920) 263 Fed. 99, wherein the rule was applied to a license given while the application was pending.

Scope of section.—This section applies to all patentees, and is not limited to those who make and vend patented articles. Churchward International Steel Co. v. Bethlehem Steel Co., (E. D. Pa. 1919) 262 Fed. 438.

Necessity of accounting for profits.—This section relieves infringers without notice from payment of damages, but not from accounting for profits. Churchward International Steel Co. v. Bethlehem Steel Co., (E. D. Pa. 1919) 262 Fed. 438.

- I. Who may sue for infringement.
- II. Who liable for infringement.
- IV. Pleading.
- V. Recovery.

I. WHO MAY SUE FOR INFRINGEMENT (p. 289)

Assignment amounting to license.—See infra this title, p. 701.

II. WHO LIABLE FOR INFRINGEMENT (p. 296)

Liability of co-owner.—A part owner of a patent has no right to enjoin infringement of the patent by his co-owner, who, by virtue of the joint ownership, has a right to use the patent. Bell, etc., Co. v. Bliss, (C. C. A. 7th Cir. 1919) 262 Fed. 131.

Suits against officers of corporation.—To same effect as original annotation, see Stromberg Motor Devices Co. v. Holley Bros. Co., (E. D. Mich. 1919) 260 Fed. 220; Hitchcock v. American Plate Glass Co., (C. C. A. 3d Cir. 1919) 259 Fed. 948, 171 C. C. A. 24, wherein it was said:

"Where a director or manager of a corporation—who sustains to the corporation the relation of master or principal in the sense of being its dominating force—himself commands the commission of a tort by the corporation, though he does it as an officer and in the name of the corporation, he is individually liable. National Cash Register Co. v. Leland, 94 Fed. 502, 508, 37 C. C. A. 372. This is so, because in an action for infringement of letters patent, an individual, who has inspired a tort and has participated in its commission, is a joint tortfeasor, and must, on general principles of law and by analogy with other torts, yield to the person whose rights he has invaded the profits of which he has gained thereby. When the joint tort is established, the individual joint tortfeasor cannot defend on the plea that the acts complained of were solely the acts of the corporation of which he was an officer, and that whatever was done by him was done only in that capacity. An executive officer of a corporation 'cannot shield himself behind an artificial and sometimes irresponsible creation from the consequences of his own acts, even though performed in the name of an artificial body.' Peters v. Union Biscuit Co. (C. C.) 120 Fed. 679; Saxlehner v. Eisner (C. C.) 140 Fed. 938. He cannot thus escape liability for a tort in which he actually participates. This doctrine has been sanctioned and enforced in Goodyear v. Phelps, 3 Blatchf. 91, Fed. Cas. No. 5,581; Poppenhusen v. Falke, 4 Blatchf. 495, Fed. Cas. No. 11,279; Iowa Barb Steel-Wire Co. v. Barbed Wire Co. (C. C.) 30 Fed. 123; National Cash Register Co. v. Leland, 94 Fed. 502, 37 C. C. A. 372; Smith v. Standard Laundry Machinery Co. (C. C.) 19 Fed. 826. See, also, Belknap v. Schild, 161 U. S. 10, 16 Sup. Ct. 443, 40 L. Ed. 599; Clark Thread Co. v. William Clark Co., 55 N. J. Eq. 658, 37 Atl. 599; Prest-O-Lite Co. v. Acetylene Welding Co., Leonard Lorentowitz, et al., 259 Fed. 940 (D. C. N. J. 1916). It is based on the rule stated in Cahoone Barnet Mfg. Co. v. Rubber & Celluloid Harness Co. (C. C.) 45 Fed. 582, 584:

"Every voluntary perpetrator of a wrongful act of manufacture, use, or sale of a patented article becomes ipso facto an infringer, and is legally responsible; and it therefore regards officers, directors, and agents employing or authorizing or assenting to the use of a patented invention as infringers, and personally responsible to the patentee."

"When a corporation infringes in obedience to the command of an officer with power to cause the corporation to commit or refrain from committing the infringing act, and when that officer participates in and contributes to the infringement, they are in the eye of the law joint tortfeasors and both are liable, in the same or in different measures according to the circumstances, for the injuries they have jointly inflicted upon the one whose rights they have jointly invaded."

Persons aiding in infringement.—An infringement is a tort, and any one who aids in it is answerable for it. Walter S. Newhall Co. v. Baltimore, etc., R. Co., (D. C. Md. 1919) 258 Fed. 650.

IV. PLEADING (p. 300)

Allegations necessary.—In an action for infringement the plaintiff may set out in his complaint merely a prima facie case or he may anticipate a defense which he believes the defendant will set up. Hence, it is no ground for dismissal of such a complaint that the plaintiff has failed to allege therein that the invention has not been abandoned to the public, since abandonment is one of the defenses which R. S. sec. 4920 (7 Fed. Stat. Ann. (2d ed.) 309) permits the defendant to make. Jost v. Borden Stove Co., (E. D. Pa. 1920) 262 Fed. 163.

V. RECOVERY (p. 302)

Defendant's profits as measure of damages.

—The measure of an infringer's liability in a suit in equity for profits, as distinguished from an action at law for damages, is the profits of the infringement which he actually received. Hitchcock v. American Plate Glass Co., (C. C. A. 3d Cir. 1919) 259 Fed. 948, 171 C. C. A. 24.

Losses incurred by defendant.—In computing the damages for an infringement, a loss incurred by the defendant in making the infringing machines is a legitimate credit upon the amount received by it from sales of the machines. T. L. Smith Co. v. Cement Tile Machinery Co., (N. D. Ia. 1919) 258 Fed. 636.

Profits lost as element of damages.—To same effect as original annotation, see Walter S. Newhall Co. v. Baltimore, etc., R. Co., (D. C. Md. 1919) 258 Fed. 650.

Infringement of patent for part of device.—To same effect as original annotation, see Southern Textile Machinery Co. v. Fay Stocking Co., (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1919) 259 Fed. 243, 170 C. C. A. 311; T. L. Smith Co. v. Cement Tile Machinery Co., (N. D. Ia. 1919) 258 Fed. 636.

Exemplary damages.—The question in an infringement suit of whether damages in excess of compensatory damages shall be awarded, as well as the amount thereof, must be determined by the District Court upon the accounting. Pollock v. Martin Gauge Co., (C. C. A. 7th Cir. 1919) 261 Fed. 201.

Increase of damages for deliberate and wanton infringement.—To same effect as original annotation, see T. L. Smith Co. v. Cement Tile Machinery Co., (N. D. Ia. 1919) 258 Fed. 636.

Contempt as increasing damages.—The fact that an infringer has been adjudged guilty of contempt in not obeying an injunction more promptly, does not entitle the plaintiff in an infringement suit to increased damages. Cheatham Electric Switching Device Co. v. Transit Development Co., (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1919) 261 Fed. 792.

Effect of assignment of infringing contract.—The fact that the designer of infringing apparatus assigns the contract for its construction and shares the profits from the infringement with the assignee, does not relieve him from liability to account for all the profits arising from the infringement. Hitchcock v. American Plate Glass Co., (C. C. A. 3d Cir. 1919) 259 Fed. 948, 171 C. C. A. 24.

A bill of discovery in advance of trial will not be granted to allow the plaintiff in an infringement suit to ascertain the amount of profits obtained by the defendant by reason of his alleged infringement. Munger v. Firestone Tire, etc., Co., (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1919) 261 Fed. 921.

Award of damages as binding in subsequent suit.—An award of damages in an infringement suit is not res adjudicata in a later infringement suit between the same parties. Cheatham Electric, etc., Co. v. Transit Development Co., (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1919) 261 Fed. 792, wherein it was said:

"It is now said that this quantum of damage became res adjudicata as between the parties hereto, and that the ruling of this court in 209 Fed. 229, 126 C. C. A. 207, is to that effect. We fail to discover that that decision in any way states such doctrine; indeed, it is beyond the power of any jury, or of any judgment resting on a jury's verdict, to set a standard of damage binding on every later trier of similar facts between the same parties. The jury referred to found that by defendant's use of the eight certain switches in certain places and at a certain time plaintiff suffered a certain damage per switch. But damages (when not punitive) are compensation for plaintiff's losses under a certain set of facts and circumstances; non constat that this plaintiff lost as much by not selling defendants a switch in the month of December as it did by a similar failure in June, and it certainly does not follow that, because plaintiff lost $68.93 by defendant's use of a switch down to the date of lawsuit brought, plaintiff lost another $68.93 by defendant's failure to remove that switch until some time later.

"An assessment of damages is not the fixing of a penalty, to be inflicted every time the same defendant injures the same plaintiff. It is a valuation of injury, which, while often the same in kind, can never be assumed to be the same in degree. The use of the record here by plaintiff does not rest upon reason, while on authority it is opposed to Ecaubert v. Appleton, 67 Fed. 917, 15 C. C. A. 73; approved in Cheatham, etc., v. Brooklyn, etc., Co., 238 Fed. 172, 151 C. C. A. 248, and to the reasoning in Cromwell v. County of Sac, 94 U. S. 351, 24 L. Ed. 195."

- I. Pleading and proof in general.
- II. Statutory defenses.

I. PLEADING AND PROOF IN GENERAL (p. 310)

The contents of the file wrapper of a patent may not be offered in evidence on the question of infringement. The only purpose for which the file wrapper can be examined is to ascertain whether estoppel has arisen through rejected claims. Baltzley v. Spengler Loomis Mfg. Co., (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1919) 262 Fed. 423.

II. STATUTORY DEFENSES (p. 317)

Evidence of the operation of a machine embodying a prior invention is admissible under the fourth clause of this section to show that the persons under whose patent the plaintiff claims, were not the original and first inventors of the thing patented, but that the person, under whose patent the defendant claims, was the original and first inventor. J. H. Day Co. v. Mountain City Mill Co., (E. D. Tenn. 1918) 257 Fed. 561.

IV. Injunctions.

V. Decree and award.

VII. Limitation and laches.

IV. INJUNCTIONS (p. 340)

Patent near expiration.—If at the date of the filing of a bill charging infringement of a patent there is sufficient time, under the rules of practice of the court in which such bill has been filed, to obtain a temporary injunction thereon before the expiration of such patent, the court acquires the necessary jurisdiction to grant whatever equitable relief may be proper, and it may retain such jurisdiction even after the expiration of the patent, notwithstanding the fact that no temporary injunction has been actually issued or separately asked. Stromberg Motor Devices Co. v. Holley Bros. Co., (E. D. Mich. 1919) 260 Fed. 220.

Violation of covenants in license agreement.—When a controversy touching the validity of a patent has been settled by judicial decision, and the defendant therein enters into a license agreement with the plaintiff wherein the validity of the patents in controversy is admitted, he should observe an attitude of good faith and loyalty towards the licensor, and if he fails to do so and violates the license agreement, he may be enjoined. Thomson Spot Welder Co. v. National Electric Welder Co., (N. D. Ohio 1917) 260 Fed. 223.

Threatened or continued infringement.—An infringing device if complete and ready for use in violation of a patent, is the object of injunction, although no damages have resulted from its use for a different purpose. Corrugated Fiber Co. v. Paper Working Machines Co., (E. D. N. Y. 1919) 259 Fed. 283.

Ceasing infringement and promises to abstain.—To same effect as original annotation, see Stromberg Motor Devices Co. v. Holley Bros. Co., (E. D. Mich. 1919) 260 Fed. 220; Walter S. Newhall Co. v. Baltimore, etc., R. Co., (D. C. Md. 1919) 258 Fed. 650, holding that where a structure, as originally planned and constructed, contained a device infringing the plaintiff's patent, which was removed prior to the infringement suit, an injunction would be granted to prohibit its replacement.

Effect of decree in prior litigation.—Where the validity of a patent has been sustained by many prior adjudications, it is proper for the court to grant a preliminary injunction to prevent infringement. Imperial Mach. etc., Corp. v. Blakeslee, (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1919) 262 Fed. 419.

V. DECREE AND AWARD (p. 355)

Patent merely an improvement.—To same effect as original annotation, see Farmers' Handy Wagon Co. v. Beaver Silo, etc., Mfg. Co., (C. C. A. 7th Cir. 1919) 259 Fed. 270, 170 C. C. A. 338.

Sales made by defendant.—The proof of sales by the defendant is not sufficient, if there is no proof that the plaintiff would probably have been able to make these sales but for the defendant's infringements, and that such sales, if made, would have been profitable. Farmers' Handy Wagon Co. v. Beaver Silo, etc., Mfg. Co., (C. C. A. 7th Cir. 1919) 259 Fed. 270, 170 C. C. A. 338.

Binding power of decree on third persons.—A decree in an infringement suit adjudging one of a number of machines to be an infringement of a machine patent, is not binding on the owner of the machine in a subsequent infringement suit against him where he was not a party to the prior suit. Dunkley Co. v. Pasadena Canning Co., (S. D. Cal. 1918) 261 Fed. 203.

VII. LIMITATION AND LACHES (p. 370)

Mere lapse of time alone is not sufficient to establish laches. Searchlight Horn Co. v. Victor Talking Mach. Co., (D. C. N. J. 1919) 261 Fed. 395.

Delay amounting to acquiescence in infringement.—To same effect as original annotation, see Wolf v. United States Slicing Mach. Co., (C. C. A. 7th Cir. 1919) 261 Fed. 195.

Delay during litigation concerning patent's validity.—Delay in prosecuting other infringers while the validity of the patent is in active litigation does not constitute laches. Searchlight Horn Co. v. Victor Talking Mach. Co., (D. C. N. J. 1919) 261 Fed. 395.

Necessity of simultaneous suit on all infringed patents.—There is no rule of law that requires a patentee to sue infringers upon all the patents he owns at the same time, or that deprives him of equitable relief if he delays his suit for a period of four or five years after the defendant places his alleged infringing device on the market. Aeolian Co. v. Schubert Piano Co., (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1919) 261 Fed. 178.

Vol. VII, p. 375. [First ed., 1912 Supp., p. 286.]

"Owner."—The suit against the United States for the infringement of a patent, given to the "owner" of the infringed patent, may only be maintained by one who has at least such an interest in the patent as, without the statute, would support such a suit against a defendant other than the United States. E. W. Bliss Co. v. U. S., (1920) 253 U. S. 187, 40 S. Ct. 455, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (1917) 53 Ct. Cl. 47, 641.

Suit by licensee.—The licensee of a patent who has no such assignment, grant, or conveyance, either of the whole patent or of an undivided part of it, or of an exclusive right under it within and throughout a specified part of the United States as is necessary under R. S. sec. 4919 (see vol. VII, p. 288), in order to enable him to sue in his own name for infringement at law or in equity without joining the owner of the patent, may not maintain a suit against the United States for infringement under this act, which empowers the "owner" of an infringed patent to recover reasonable compensation in the Court of Claims, and reserves to the United States all defenses, general or special, which might be pleaded by a defendant in an action for infringement. E. W. Bliss Co. v. U. S., (1920) 253 U. S. 187, 40 S. Ct. 455, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (1917) 53 Ct. Cl. 47, 641.

Sufficiency of pleading.—A cause of action ex contractu, based on the government use of a patented invention, is not presented by a petition, the allegations of which, taken together, not only do not show a contract of the parties, express or implied, to pay a royalty in any amount, but distinctly and in terms negative the making of any such contract as is necessary to give the Court of Claims jurisdiction. E. W. Bliss Co. v. U. S., (1920) 253 U. S. 187, 40 S. Ct. 455, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (1917) 53 Ct. Cl. 47, 641.

Necessity of invention.—To same effect as original annotation, see Crystal Percolator

Co. v. Landers, (D. C. Conn. 1919) 258 Fed. 28. The court said:

"To entitle a party to the benefit of the act, in either case, there must be originality, and the exercise of the inventive faculty. In the one, there must be novelty and utility; in the other, originality and beauty. Mere mechanical skill is insufficient. There must be something akin to genius—an effort of the brain as well as the hand. The adaptation of old devices or forms to new purposes, however convenient, useful or beautiful they may be in their new rôle, is not invention. . . . The shape produced must be the result of industry, effort, genius, or expense, and new and original as applied to articles of manufacture. Foster v. Crossin [C. C.] 44 Fed. 62. The exercise of the inventive or originative faculty is required and a person cannot be permitted to select an existing form and simply put it to a new use any more than he can be permitted to take a patent for the mere double use of a machine. If, however, the selection and adaptation of an existing form is more than the exercise of the imitative faculty and the result is in effect a new creation, the design may be patentable."

Amount of novelty.—To same effect as third paragraph of original annotation, see Smith v. Peck, etc., Co., (D. C. Conn. 1919) 258 Fed. 40.

Aesthetic value.—"To successfully establish the validity of the design patent, and to entitle the inventor to protection, he must establish a result obtained, which indicates, not only that the design is new, but that it is beautiful and attractive. It must involve something more than mere mechanical skill." Smith v. Peck, etc., Co., (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1919) 262 Fed. 415.

New combinations of old forms in designs.—To same effect as first paragraph of original annotation, see Zidell v. Dexter, (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1920) 262 Fed. 145.

I. IN GENERAL

1. Constitutional Provision

b. Overt Act and Two Witnesses (p. 397)

The crime of treason cannot be committed unless there be an overt act and that overt act must be proved by at least two witnesses. U. S. v. Fricke, (S. D. N. Y. 1919) 259 Fed. 673, wherein it was said: "Where the overt act is single, continuous, and composite, made up of, or proved by, several circumstances, and passing through several stages, it is not necessary, in order to satisfy the provisions of the Constitution requiring two witnesses to an overt act, that there should be two witnesses to each circumstance at each stage, as distinguished from the necessary proof of two witnesses to an act other than continuous and composite.

"That means this: If one of the overt acts, we will say, was as in this case the sending of a telephone message, and you have the testimony of the telephone operator who received the message for transmission, and the testimony of the person to whom the message was transmitted, there are the stages of one transaction proved by two witnesses, as the one witness was at one end of the telephone and the other witness at another."

To same effect, see U. S. v. Robinson, (S. D. N. Y. 1919) 259 Fed. 685, holding that it is necessary to produce two direct witnesses to whole overt act, and that it may not be proved by one witness and circumstantial evidence.

II. "OWING ALLEGIANCE" (p. 400)

Allegiance due from citizens.—Every citizen of the United States, whether by birth or naturalization, as a matter of law, owes allegiance to the United States. Therefore, if a defendant in a prosecution for a violation of this section was a citizen of the United States during the period in which he is charged with committing the offense in the indictment, then by reason of that fact he owed allegiance to the United States. U. S. v. Fricke, (S. D. N. Y. 1919) 259 Fed. 673.

IV. ADHERING TO ENEMY; GIVING AID AND COMFORT (p. 412)

In general.—In defining adherence to the enemies of the United States within the meaning of this section the court said in U. S. v. Fricke, (S. D. N. Y. 1919) 259 Fed. 673: "There must be the adherence, there must be the giving of aid, and there must be the giving of comfort; and in general, when war exists, any act which, by fair construction, is directed in furtherance of the hostile designs of the enemies of the United States, and gives them aid and comfort, or if that is the natural effect of the act, it is treasonable in its character if an American citizen does an act which strengthens, or tends to strengthen, the enemies of the United States in the conduct of a war against the United States; that is, in law, giving aid and comfort to the enemies of the United States."

"If an American citizen commits an act which weakens, or tends to weaken, the power of the United States to resist or to attack the enemies of the United States, that is in law giving aid and comfort to the enemies of the United States."

"Enemies."—In U. S. v. Fricke, (S. D. N. Y. 1919) 259 Fed. 673, the court, in defining who were enemies of the United States within the meaning of this section during the late war with Germany, said: "On the breaking out of the war between the United States and the Imperial German Government, the subjects of the Emperor of Germany were enemies of the United States, and remained such enemies during the continuance of the war; all members of the military and naval forces of the Imperial German Government, and all persons engaged by or working for the Imperial German Government as agents or spies, to assist the Imperial German Government in the prosecution of its war, or to hamper the United States in the prosecution of its war against the Imperial German Government, are enemies of the United States."

Intent.—The intent of the defendant in a prosecution for a violation of this section is a vital ingredient of the crime. If the jury is "not satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant's intention and purpose in acting as he did was evil—that is, if not satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that he intended to aid and comfort the enemies of the United States—and if not satisfied that that was his object, the defendant must be found not guilty." U. S. v. Fricke, (S. D. N. Y. 1919) 259 Fed. 673.

VII. PROCEDURE

2. Order of Proof on Trial (p. 418)

Proof of commission of treason.—In a prosecution under this section the jury must first determine whether on the evidence treason has been committed by the defendant beyond a reasonable doubt, and need not concern themselves with the subject of overt acts until it is shown that the defendant has committed treason. U. S. v. Fricke, (S. D. N. Y. 1919) 259 Fed. 673.

Vol. VII, p. 423, sec. 6. [First ed., 1909 Supp., p. 406.]

Joint resolution as a "law."—A joint resolution of Congress is a "law" within the meaning of this section, and a conspiracy to prevent, hinder and delay its execution violates the provisions of this section. Wells v. U. S., (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1919) 257 Fed. 805, 168 C. C. A. 555, wherein it was said: "Article 1, § 7, of the Constitution, prescribes the requisites to be observed by which a bill introduced in either house of Congress shall become a law. It must pass both houses and be presented to the President. If he approves it, it becomes a law. If he returns it with his veto, it must be to the house in which it originated. The section then proceeds as follows:

"If after such reconsideration two-thirds of that house shall agree to pass the bill, it shall be sent, together with the objections, to the other house, by which it shall likewise be reconsidered, and if approved by two-thirds of that house, it shall become a law. But in all such cases the votes of both houses shall be determined by yeas and nays, and the names of the persons voting for and against the bill shall be entered on the journal of each house respectively. If any bill shall not be returned by the President within ten days (Sundays excepted) after it shall have been presented to him, the same shall be a law, in like manner as if he had signed it, unless the Congress by their adjournment prevent its return, in which case it shall not be a law."

"Every order, resolution, or vote to which the concurrence of the Senate and House of Representatives may be necessary (except on a question of adjournment), shall be presented to the President of the United States; and before the same shall take effect, shall be approved by him, or being disapproved by him, shall be repassed by two-thirds of the Senate and House of Representatives, according to the rules and limitations prescribed in the case of a bill.'

"While not passing upon the question directly, the Supreme Court has considered and treated joint resolutions as having the effect of law. For instance, the court, in considering a joint resolution suspending the operation of an act of Congress, says, in United States ex rel. Levey v. Stockslager, 120 U. S. 470, 475, 9 Sup. Ct. 382, 384 (32 L. Ed. 785):

"It [the joint resolution] had all the characteristics and effects of the act of March 2, 1867 [the act which the resolution suspended], which became a law by the approval of the President. Until Congress should further order, the operation of the act of March 2, 1867, was by the joint resolution effectually suspended.'

"So in Fourteen Diamond Rings v. United States, 183 U. S. 176, 184, 22 Sup. Ct. 59, 62 (46 L. ed. 138), Mr. Justice Brown, in a concurring opinion with the Chief Justice who rendered the opinion of the court, speaking of the function of a joint resolution, says:

"While a joint resolution, when approved by the President, or, being disapproved, is passed by two-thirds of each house, has the effect of a law (Const. art. 1, § 7), no such effect can be given to a resolution of either house acting independently of the other.'

"The eminent Justice cites with approval 6 Op. Atty. Gen. 680, wherein Attorney General Cushing holds that:

"While 'joint resolutions of Congress are not distinguishable from bills, and . . . have all the effect of law, . . . separate resolutions of either house of Congress, except in matters appertaining to their own parliamentary rights, have no legal effect to constrain the action of the President or heads of departments.'

"The purpose of the resolution in question was weighty; it was designed to proclaim that a state of war existed between this government and Germany. It was designed to have, and by the intentment of Congress without question did have, the same effect and potency as if war had been declared by a regular act of Congress; otherwise, that body would, we may reasonably assume, have made the declaration by a regularly adopted act. We think that the resolution having the effect of law must be considered a law, within the meaning of section 6 of the Criminal Code."

Force is an essential element of the offense described in this section. Mere solicitation or entreaty, without a purpose of applying or using force to accomplish the ends sought to be attained, is without the intentment of this section. Wells v. U. S., (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1919) 257 Fed. 605, 168 C. C. A. 555.

Motive of conspirators.—Under this section, the motive of the conspirators does not necessarily determine the character of the conspiracy. Thus, their object may be to prevent the enforcement of a specific law; but if, to attain that object, they conspire to overthrow or destroy the government as a means to that end, the conspiracy is one to destroy or overthrow the government. Bryant v. U. S., (C. C. A. 5th Cir. 1919) 257 Fed. 378, 168 C. C. A. 418.

Necessity of overt act.—An overt act is not an ingredient of an offense under this section. Reeder v. U. S., (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1919) 262 Fed. 36; Orear v. U. S., (C. C. A. 5th Cir. 1919) 261 Fed. 257.

Withdrawal from the conspiracy after its formation does not exculpate from guilt. Orear v. U. S., (C. C. A. 5th Cir. 1919) 261 Fed. 257.

Indictment—Sufficiency in general.—In Reeder v. U. S., (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1919) 262 Fed. 36, in holding an indictment under this section sufficient, the court said:

"The indictment designates the time and the place of the alleged offense definitely. It names the defendants, and alleges that they did then and there knowingly, willfully, unlawfully, and feloniously conspire, etc., with other persons named in the indictment to knowingly, willfully, unlawfully, and feloniously hinder and delay the execution of a certain law of the United States, designating it as the act of Congress approved May 18, 1917, giving the title of the act, and referring also to the proclamations of the President of the United States and regulations in aid of said act. The indictment further alleged that the defendants knowingly, willfully, unlawfully, and feloniously opposed by force the authority of the United States, its agents and officers, in the enforcement of said act, proclamation, and regulations in so far as their provisions applied to persons subject to military duty and service thereunder, and particularly in so far as the same applied to Wright, Ratcliffe, Blackwood, and others named in the indictment. It is further alleged that the defendants did conspire, combine, and agree together with persons named in the indictment by force to procure arms and ammunition, and to arm themselves with the same, and while armed to offer individual and combined resistance to the authority of the United States and to the enforcement and execution of said act of Congress, proclamation, and regulations, to the end that they would thereby hinder, delay and prevent the said persons from being drafted into and inducted into the military forces of the United States; alleging further that such persons and each of them were citizens of the United States within the state of Oklahoma, having registered in said state and not having been exempted from military service as provided in said act, and that they were then and there under the duty to submit to being drafted into the military service of the United States under the provisions of said act, etc.

"It will be noted that this count of the indictment with both clearness and certainty alleges the conspiracy of the defendants, entered into for the purpose of committing the offense therein specified, describing it in the words of the statute which creates it, and to these allegations is added the names of the persons with whom they conspired, and who, with others, were to be influenced by them, together with allegations of intent and purpose, and that they were armed and prepared to carry out the purpose of the conspiracy by force. The conspiracy in this count is the gist of the crime, and every ingredient of the offense is accurately stated, and apprises the accused of the crime with which they stand charged. Clearly the accused were furnished by the allegations of this count of the indictment with such a description of the charge against them as would enable them to make their defense and avail themselves of their conviction or acquittal for protection against a further prosecution for the same cause."

Duplicity.—An indictment under this section which charges in one count that the defendants conspired to overthrow and destroy the government and that they also conspired to levy war against it, is not defective as being duplicitious. Bryant v. U. S., (C. C. A. 5th Cir. 1919) 257 Fed. 378, 168 C. C. A. 418.

In Wells v. U. S., (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1919) 257 Fed. 605, 168 C. C. A. 555, it was held that the objection that an indictment under this section was bad for duplicity, was waived by going to trial, unless previously tested by demurrer, motion to quash, or motion that the prosecution be required to elect between the offenses charged.

Vol. VII, p. 430, sec. 10. [First ed., 1909 Supp., p. 407.]

"Retains."—One may be retained in the sense of this section as effectively by a verbal as by a written promise, by a prospect for payment in the future as by immediate payment of cash. Gayon v. McCarthy, (1920) 252 U. S. 171, 40 S. Ct. 244, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, wherein the court said: "The word 'retain' is used in the statute as an alternative to 'hire,' and means something different from the usual employment with payment in money. One may be retained, in the sense of engaged, to render a service as effectively by a verbal as by a written promise, by a prospect for advancement or payment in the future as by the immediate payment of cash. As stated long ago by a noted Attorney General, in an opinion dealing with this statute:

"A party may be retained by verbal promise or by invitation for a declared or known purpose. If such a statute could be evaded or set at naught by elaborate contrivances to engage without enlisting, to retain without hiring, to invite without recruiting... it would be idle to pass acts of Congress for the punishment of this or any other offense." 7 Op. Atty.-Gen. 367, 378, 379."

VII. INDICTMENT (p. 490)

Overt act.—To same effect as original annotation, see Montoya v. U. S., (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1919) 262 Fed. 759, holding that an indictment following the language of the section was sufficient.

Conspiracy against elective franchise.—The provisions of this section apply only to a definite, personal right, such as that of the individual to vote. Accordingly, an indictment under this section is defective where the conspiracy charged therein is against the right of the candidates and the voters in the state at large. Morris v. U. S., (C. C. A. 7th Cir. 1919) 261 Fed. 175.

Vol. VII, p. 496, sec. 28. [First ed., 1909 Supp., p. 412.]

- I. Elements of offense.
 2. False statement in genuine instrument.
- II. Character of instrument.
 4. Affidavit.

I. ELEMENTS OF OFFENSE

2. False Statement in Genuine Instrument (p. 497)

This section embraces only forged or counterfeited instruments in the technical sense, and does not include instruments which are genuine but which contain statements which are not true in fact. Accordingly, it does not include a genuine affidavit which contains a false statement. U. S. v. Smith, (D. C. Ind. 1920) 262 Fed. 191.

II. CHARACTER OF INSTRUMENT

4. Affidavit (p. 499)

Insufficiency of affidavit as ground for objection to indictment.—The fact that an affidavit regarding the ownership of a newspaper, made pursuant to the Act of August 24, 1912, ch. 389, § 2, is taken before a notary public, who is not an officer authorized to administer an oath regarding the matters contained therein, does not render the indictment defective, as imperfectly describing the affidavit. U. S. v. Smith, (D. C. Ind. 1920) 262 Fed. 191. Regarding this objection, the court said:

"It is earnestly contended that, this being so, the affidavit is not an affidavit as alleged in the indictment, and that this defect appears upon the face of the indictment. If the defendant, as alleged in the indictment, presented these affidavits to the postmaster in Indianapolis as affidavits, he cannot now be heard to say that they are not affidavits.

"In Ingraham v. United States, 155 U. S. 434, 15 Sup. Ct. 148, 39 L. Ed. 213, the Supreme Court had before it this question. Ingraham was indicted for presenting to the Third Auditor of the Treasury an affidavit in support of a fraudulent scheme against the government, and upon his trial the objection was made that the affidavit, which had been sworn to before a justice of the peace, was not admissible in evidence without proof that the justice had been duly commissioned and qualified as a justice of the peace. The Supreme Court said, on page 437 of 155 U. S. (15 Sup. Ct. 149, 39 L. Ed. 213):

"Even if Remington [the justice of the peace] had not been properly commissioned, or had not qualified, so as to entitle him, in law, to discharge the functions of a justice of the peace, the paper presented by the defendant to the Third Auditor of the Treasury for the purpose of obtaining the payment or approval of his claim, being in the form of an affidavit, must, for all the purposes of this prosecution, be taken to be an affidavit. If he knew that the statement in that paper, described in the indictment, was fraudulent or fictitious, he was not the less guilty . . . because of the fact, if such was the fact, that Remington had not been duly commissioned as a justice of the peace, and was not, for that reason, entitled to administer the oath certified by him. . . . He is estopped to deny that the document or writing so used was not what it purports to be, namely, an affidavit."

"The several counts of the indictment are therefore not bad upon this ground."

III. PROSECUTION FOR OFFENSE

3. Indictment (p. 521)

Representations of defendant as to official capacity.—In Brafford v. U. S., (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1919) 259 Fed. 511, 171 C. C. A. 7, it was contended that the mere impersonation of an officer of the United States government was not an offense under this section and that an indictment for a violation of this section was defective in failing to charge that the accused "took upon himself to act" as an officer and "while so acting" obtained the property in question. In overruling a motion to quash the indictment on these grounds, the court said:

"It is not necessary to a violation of the second subdivision that the accused 'take upon himself to act as such' United States officer or employé; it is only necessary that the property be obtained by the accused 'in such pretended character.' United States v. Barnow, [239 U. S. 74]. We think the allegation that the accused did 'falsely and fraudulently obtain' the money and property 'by inducing' the automobile company to part with it, 'by falsely representing himself to be such officer and employé,' sufficiently charges that the money, etc., was fraudulently obtained 'in such pretended character.'"

4. Evidence (p. 522)

Variance.—In a prosecution under this section the fact that a company from whom the defendant is charged with having obtained property in violation of this section, is not alleged in the indictment to have been incorporated, while the proof shows that it is a corporation, does not constitute a variance. The same rule applies to an allegation that the defendant defrauded a company, which is shown to have been merely a trade-name under which a certain person carried on business. Brafford v. U. S., (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1919) 259 Fed. 511, 171 C. C. A. 7.

II. CONSTRUCTION AND APPLICATION, IN GENERAL

10. Claim Originally Valid (p. 526)

To same effect as original annotation, see U. S. v. Downey, (D. C. R. I. 1919) 257 Fed. 366.

V. INDICTMENT

1. For Making and Presenting False Claim

- d. Averments, in General (p. 528)

Making of document or voucher.—In U. S. v. Downey, (D. C. R. I. 1919) 257 Fed. 366, regarding the necessity of allegations describing the making of the document on which the claim is based, the court said:

"It is argued that a necessary requirement of the regulations is the presentation on form 1021 of a certificate, and that without this a fraud could not have been consummated; but the making of the document or voucher is a separate thing from its presentation and it does not appear necessary that the indictment should state the circumstances surrounding its presentation, or the nature of any other document accompanying or supporting it."

Averments regarding dates and description of property.—An indictment under this section for unlawfully purchasing military stores from certain soldiers sufficiently specifies the dates and property where it alleges that the defendants during certain specified months purchased "approximately twenty-one sacks of oats" from certain named soldiers. Eisenberg v. U. S., (C. C. A. 5th Cir. 1919) 261 Fed. 598. Regarding the sufficiency of the indictment, the court said: "It is conceded by the defendant that the offenses of purchasing and applying to his own use might be properly incorporated in one indictment in separate counts under the provisions of R. S. § 1024; but the point is made that the purchasing, etc., of each sack of oats, if done on different days, would constitute a separate offense. It is further contended that neither the dates nor the description of the property is specific enough to put the defendant on notice and to serve as a basis for a defense of former jeopardy in possible future indictments.

"We do not agree with any of these contentions. It is difficult to conceive how property of the character involved here could be better described than was done, and clearly each count of the indictment presents but one offense. It is necessary for the government to lay some date in the indictment, but it is elemental that, having alleged a specific date, the prosecution is not bound by it, and may prove any date prior to the return of the indictment within the statute of limitations, three years. We think the indictment was sufficiently specific, and the overruling of the demurrer and motion to quash was not error."

e. Place of Crime (p. 530)

An indictment under this section is defective where it fails to show that the offense for which the defendants were indicted occurred within the jurisdiction of the court. Accordingly, an indictment which alleges that the defendants, the president and secretary respectively of a corporation having its principal office in a certain district, presented a false voucher to a United States army officer, is defective as failing to allege that the offense occurred in the same district as that in which the corporate offices were located. U. S. v. Christopherson, (E. D. Mo. 1919) 261 Fed. 225.

h. Authority of Officer (p. 531)

To same effect as original annotation, see U. S. v. Christopherson, (E. D. Mo. 1919) 261 Fed. 225.

j. Falsity of Claim (p. 532)

A count in an indictment under this section is defective where it appears that the voucher alleged to have been false, and upon which such count is founded, contains no false statement, and that that upon the face of the voucher, which is set out in the count, and upon the face of the charges of falsity contained in the count, no such falsity exists. U. S. v. Christopherson, (E. D. Mo. 1919) 261 Fed. 225.

VI. TRIAL

2. Evidence and Variance

a. Evidence (p. 532)

Burden of proof.—In a prosecution under this section for presenting a false claim for a reward because of the apprehension of a person alleged to be a deserter under the Detective Service Act (9 Fed. Stat. Ann. (2d ed.) 1136), where the government alleges in the indictment that the person apprehended did not come within the description of a deserter for whose apprehension a reward was payable, it has the burden of proving such allegation. U. S. v. Downey, (D. C. R. I. 1919) 257 Fed. 366.

Vol. VII, p. 533, sec. 36. [First ed., 1909 Supp., p. 415.]

"All other property of the United States."

—The general words "all other property of the United States furnished or to be used for the military or naval service" used in this section includes cloth as being property similar to clothing. Horowitz v. U. S., (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1919) 262 Fed. 48.

Evidence.—In a prosecution under this section evidence by the accused as to statements made to him by a third party at the time the latter delivered to him the property he is charged with having stolen, such statements being explanatory of his possession of the property, is admissible, and its exclusion constitutes reversible error. Grier v. U. S., (C. C. A. 5th Cir. 1919) 262 Fed. 407, wherein it was said: "It is apparent that the ruling of the court was error. The prosecution under the statute is identical to a case of receiving stolen goods. It is a well-known exception to the hearsay rule that a person so charged may repeat what was said to him by the person from whom he claims to have obtained the goods. The rule is clearly stated in Elliott on Evidence, par. 3119:

"It has been held competent for the defense to show by the accused, he being a witness in his own behalf, when, from whom, how, and under what circumstances he received the property, and what was done and said at the time in connection with the receipt of it by himself; such facts being part of the res gesta, to be submitted as evidence and weighed by the jury."

"To the same effect, see Underhill on Criminal Evidence (2d ed.) par. 301. In justification of the possession of the articles, the defendant was entitled to repeat what the person from whom he had obtained them said to him regarding his own lawful possession. If the articles were in fact condemned, and a lieutenant in charge of their disposition had given them to Yank rather than destroy them, that fact was material to the defense."

7. Particular Offenses

i. Violation of Bankruptcy Act (p. 543)

Insolvent debtors may properly be convicted of a conspiracy to conceal their assets, so that their creditors cannot reach the assets through bankruptcy proceedings which the debtors are expecting to be instituted. Meyer v. U. S., (C. C. A. 7th Cir. 1919) 258 Fed. 212, 169 C. C. A. 280.

III. CONSPIRACY TO DEFRAUD

2. "In Any Manner" (p. 546)

Defrauding United States on contracts.—In Borman v. U. S., (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1919) 262 Fed. 26, it appeared that a manufacturer contracted to manufacture leather jerkins for the United States government; under the terms of the contract the United States agreed to furnish leather linings for the jerkins. He obtained a greater amount of linings from the government than it was required to furnish, caused them to be sold by third parties, and converted the proceeds to his own use. In a prosecution of the manufacturer and his co-conspirators under section 36 and this section, they defended on the ground that at the time they appropriated the linings the title to them was not in the United States. It was held that the transaction constituted a bailment rather than sale, and that they were liable for a violation of section 36 and of this section.

5. Impairing Lawful Function of Government Department (p. 547)

Conspiracy to defraud Emergency Fleet Corporation.—Since the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation is an agency of the United States government, a conspiracy to defraud it is one to defraud the United States within the meaning of this section. U. S. v. Carlin, (E. D. Pa. 1917) 259 Fed. 904; U. S. v. Union Timber Products Co., (W. D. Wash. 1919) 259 Fed. 907. In the latter case, the court said:

"The Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation is constituted by law an agency of the United States for the purpose of construction of vessels and entering into contracts for the use of vessels. Pursuant to law, the corporation was created to carry out the purposes of the act, and in furtherance of the plan and scheme, upon authority conferred, the corporation had the power and authority to enter into contracts for the construction of vessels and making expenditures of the funds appropriated by the Congress.

"The Supreme Court in the matter of the petition of the United States of America, owner of the American steamship Lake Monroe for writ of prohibition, June 12, 1919, 250 U. S. 246, 39 Sup. Ct. 460, 63 L. Ed. 962, said:

"But at the time of the emergency provision of June 15, 1917, the Shipping Board had been established as a public commission with broad administrative powers and subject to definite restrictions, and the Fleet Corporation had been created as its agency, financed with public funds."

"The Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation being the agency designated by the President for carrying out the powers conferred upon him in the construction of ships, a conspiracy to defraud such corporation, financed with the funds of the United States, would be a fraud upon the United States."

Right of United States to property appropriated.—In a prosecution under this section for conspiracy to defraud the United States by appropriating the proceeds from a sale of "astray freight" of railroads under federal control, it is no concern of the defendants whether or not the United States had the right to sell the freight, since it was at least a bailee of the freight and as such entitled to the possession of the proceeds of the sale. U. S. v. United States Brokerage, etc., Co., (S. D. N. Y. 1919) 262 Fed. 459, wherein the court said:

"To appropriate those proceeds was either to impede the United States in its duty of discharging its liability to the consignees, if the sale was illegal (Haas v. Henkel, 216 U. S. 462, 479, 480, 30 Sup. Ct. 249, 54 L. Ed. 569, 17 Ann. Cas. 1112; U. S. v. Plyler, 222 U. S. 16, 32 Sup. Ct. 6; 56 L. Ed. 70), or, if the United States had the right to sell the goods, then it was a direct misappropriation of funds of the United States, because upon that hypothesis the proceeds could be truly described as a part of the operating profits of the railway; i. e., as 'railway operating income,' under section 1 of the federal control law."

IV. OVERT ACTS

5. Nature and Quality of Act (p. 552)

To same effect as fifth paragraph of original annotation, see U. S. v. Downey, (D. C. R. I. 1919) 257 Fed. 364.

VII. JURISDICTION AND VENUE (p. 556)

Venue of federal prosecution.—Substantial evidence before the United States commissioner and the court, tending to show that a penal statute of the United States had been violated, and that there was probable cause for believing the accused guilty of conspiracy to compass that violation within the district in which the indictment charging such conspiracy was returned, justifies an order for the removal of the accused to that district. Gayon v. McCarthy, (1920) 252 U. S. 171, 40 S. Ct. 244, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, which further held that the introduction in evidence of the indictment, together with the admission of the accused that he is the person named therein, establishes a prima facie case, in the absence of other evidence, for the removal of the accused to the district in which the indictment was returned.

VIII. INDICTMENT

1. In General

c. Requisites and Sufficiency, in General (p. 559)

Allegation of willfulness.—An indictment need not allege that the conspiracy was willful. Howenstine v. U. S., (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1920) 263 Fed. 1, wherein the court said:

"It is contended that the first count is fatally defective for the reason that the conspiracy and the overt acts set forth are not alleged to have been willful. To this it is sufficient to say that the definition of the offense of conspiracy under which the defendants were indicted does not contain the word 'willful,' or any provision to indicate that it was the intention of Congress to make willfulness an ingredient of the offense. The indictment in the first count does, however, charge that the conspiracy was entered into unlawfully and feloniously, and each of the overt acts is alleged to have been done in pursuance of said unlawful and felonious conspiracy, and it is charged that the conspiracy was to commit the offense of unlawfully, feloniously and willfully causing and attempting to cause insubordination, etc. It is the general rule that it is not necessary to charge that the offense was done willfully, unless the statute defining the same makes willfulness an element thereof; and it is also generally held that words which import an exercise of the will, such as 'feloniously' and 'unlawfully,' will supply the place of the word 'willfully.'"

2. Charging the Conspiracy

a. Sufficiency in General (p. 560)

Identification of offense.—An indictment under this section which alleges that the defendants conspired among themselves "to steal from a certain railroad freight car certain goods then and there moving as and constituting a part of an interstate shipment of freight, with the intent then and there to convert said goods to their own use," is defective as not sufficiently identifying the offense with which the defendants are charged. Anderson v. U. S., (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1919) 260 Fed. 557, 171 C. C. A. 341; Booker v. U. S., (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1919) 260 Fed. 561, 171 C. C. A. 345.

A conspiracy to commit a crime is a different offense from the crime that is the object of the conspiracy, and the distinction in the rules of pleading is well settled. U. S. v. Downey, (D. C. R. I. 1919) 257 Fed. 364.

Description of indecent matter alleged to have been mailed.—An indictment under this section for a conspiracy to violate section 211 of the Penal Laws (7 Fed. Stat. Ann. (2d ed.) 788), by mailing indecent matter, need not set out what letters were referred to, and in what respect they were indecent, but is sufficient if it describes them as being of a character to incite murder and assassination. U. S. v. Wells, (W. D. Wash. 1917) 262 Fed. 833.

b. Relation to Charge of Overt Acts (p. 560)

To same effect as original annotation, see Anderson v. U. S., (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1919) 260 Fed. 557, 171 C. C. A. 341.

Purpose of allegations of overt acts.—"Though the allegations of overt acts may not be used to enlarge the scope of the conspiracy, yet they practically meet many of the objections to the generality of the charge of conspiracy. They inform the defendants in much detail of the particular matters upon which proof will be offered, and thus give specifications of the completed acts done in pursuance of the conspiracy and during its continuance." U. S. v. Downey, (D. C. R. I. 1919) 257 Fed. 364.

c. Specific Means Agreed upon (p. 561)

Conspiracy to evade draft.—An indictment is sufficient which charges a conspiracy to cause an evasion of military duty "through and by means of soliciting persons too numerous to mention, who were subject to and might be subject to service in the military and naval forces of the United States, to go to an oculist and optician and be fitted with eyeglasses that would so impair their vision and physical condition that they would thereby be rejected and discharged from service in said military and naval forces, and by also advising said persons that the President of the United States was an Englishman, and that he and the United States were fighting England's battles." Howenstine v. U. S., (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1920) 263 Fed. 1.

3. Charging Overt Acts (p. 563)

How the overt act would tend to effectuate the purpose of the conspiracy need not be alleged. Howenstine v. U. S., (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1920) 263 Fed. 1.

4. For Conspiracy to Commit Offense

a. Sufficiency in General (p. 566)

Continuance of conspiracy formed before enactment of law.—An indictment under this section charging a conspiracy to violate the Selective Service Law (9 Fed. Stat. Ann. (2d ed.) 1136), is sufficient where it alleges that the conspiracy, although formed prior to the enactment of such law, was continued thereafter and overt acts performed after its passage. U. S. v. Wells, (W. D. Wash. 1917) 262 Fed. 833.

c. Description of Offense Contemplated (p. 567)

To same effect as original annotation, see U. S. v. Downey, (D. C. R. I. 1919) 257 Fed. 364.

1. Violation of Bankruptcy Act (p. 572)

In Meyer v. U. S., (C. C. A. 7th Cir. 1919) 258 Fed. 212, 169 C. C. A. 280, the defendants were convicted of having conspired to conceal assets from their trustee in bankruptcy in violation of sec. 29 b (1) of the Bankruptcy Act (1 Fed. Stat. Ann. (2d ed.) 844). The indictment alleged that in pursuance of such conspiracy the defendants had turned over to a third person a certain check belonging to them. It was contended that the indictment did not show that the overt act was done to effect the object of the conspiracy. Answering this contention, the court said:

"Invoking the rule that interferences are to be taken against the pleader, plaintiffs in error insist that we shall infer that they lawfully turned over the Morton Hill check to May Aserson. But the rule does not extend to imagining inferences that are contrary to the fair common-sense reading of the averments. The conspiracy is fully and clearly stated. It included the purpose to conceal the Morton Hill check, 'which should belong at the time of such concealment to the bankruptcy estate.' In charging the overt act the pleader averred that in furtherance of said conspiracy the plaintiffs in error turned over the Morton Hill check to May Aserson. This averment, taken in connection with the statement of the nature and scope of the conspiracy, makes it impossible to infer that the check was not the property of the bankrupts after it was turned over to May Aserson. And it is obvious that putting one's property in the possession of another may be an effective step towards concealing it from creditors. Many other overt acts are alleged, but the objection to them is precisely the same."

5. For Conspiracy to Defraud

h. Fraud in Public Contracts (p. 589)

An indictment which alleges that the defendants were employees of government contractors, working on a "cost plus" basis, and that they conspired to place the name of one of them on the contractor's payrolls at a higher rate than that to which he was entitled, sufficiently charges a conspiracy to defraud the United States. Belvin v. U. S., (C. C. A. 4th Cir. 1919) 260 Fed. 455, 171 C. C. A. 281. The court said:

"It is insisted by counsel for defendant that the indictment sets out a conspiracy to defraud the Porter Bros., but that it does not set out a conspiracy to defraud the United States; also that the indictment is not full enough, and that the court will have to supply much and infer much in order to sustain it.

"It appears that the defendants Hoffman and Belvin were indicted for conspiracy to defraud the United States, and the overt act alleged is that they padded the pay roll of the Porter Bros. It appears that Porter Bros. had entered into a contract with the government to construct the quartermaster terminal or army base near Norfolk. The contract in question contained the following clause:

"Porter Bros. contract (extracts):

"Article 2. Cost of the Work.—The contractor shall be reimbursed in the manner hereinafter described for such of its actual net expenditures in the performance of said work as may be approved or ratified by the contracting officer and as are included in the following items:

"(a) All labor,' etc.

"Article 3. Determination of Fee.—As full compensation for the services of the contractor, . . . if the cost of the work is under $100,000, a fee of ten per cent. (10%) of such cost. [Then follows a scale of compensation to the contractor, under varying amounts, to and including $3,500,000.]

"The contract is signed:

"Porter Brothers, by R. S. Porter (a member of the copartnership). United States of America, by I. W. Littell, Brigadier-General, Quartermaster Corps, N. A., Contracting Officer."

"Any amounts paid out by Porter Bros. in excess of its 'net expenditures in the performance of said work,' in the absence of any knowledge on the part of the government, would have necessarily resulted in a loss to that extent to the United States. It is not necessary, in order to secure the conviction of one charged with conspiracy, to allege or prove that the object of conspiracy has been fully consummated. It is sufficient if there has been the common meeting of minds to the accomplishment of a certain object, and that some overt act shall have been done in pursuance of such conspiracy.

"The defendants sought by this conspiracy to do that which would necessarily result in defrauding the government. Porter Bros. could not in any view of the case lose a cent by virtue of this transaction. Their payrolls were only used as a means by which the defendants could make a false charge, the burden of which would fall, not upon Porter Bros., but upon the government."

IX. EVIDENCE

3. Knowledge, Motive, or Intent

a. In General (p. 593)

In a prosecution of druggists under this section for a conspiracy to violate section 2 of the Harrison Act (4 Fed. Stat. Ann. (2d ed.) 178), evidence of the quantities of narcotic drugs purchased and sold, and of the quantities of nonnarcotic drugs sold, by other druggists, is admissible to show the true nature and purposes of the defendants' business. Friedman v. U. S., (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1919) 260 Fed. 388, 171 C. C. A. 254.

6. Acts and Declarations of Co-conspirators (p. 596)

To same effect as fourth paragraph of original annotation, see Samara v. U. S., (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1920) 263 Fed. 12, wherein it was further held that proof of a confession by a co-conspirator was admissible, the court saying:

"Then it is said that error was committed in allowing the attorney for Antoon to testify that, after the latter had told the former as to his transactions with the Samaras, the attorney took Antoon to the United States attorney's office, which led to the indictment in this case. We are told that this is a clear violation of the rule that what is said or done by one of the conspirators after the conspiracy is ended, in the absence of the defendants on trial, is totally inadmissible. The rule is admitted, but its application to the facts is denied. On his direct examination Antoon testified that he first went to his attorney and told his story, and that his attorney took him to the District Judge, to whom he confessed his crime. The attorney was permitted to testify that, after Antoon confessed to him, instead of taking Antoon first to the district attorney, he took him direct to the District Judge. This is simply a part of the history of the transaction, and as such the government was entitled to it. The objection at all events seems to us quite unimportant, and we fail to perceive any relation between this occurrence and the rule that the statement of a conspirator in the absence of his co-conspirators, after the conspiracy is ended, is not admissible."

Only those acts and declarations of a co-conspirator are admissible against his fellows "which are done and made while the conspiracy is pending and in furtherance of its object," and when it has come to an end "whether by success or by failure, the admissions of one conspirator by way of narrative of past facts are not admissible in evidence against the others." Feder v. U. S., (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1919) 257 Fed. 694, 168 C. C. A. 644, 5 A. L. R. 370.

8. Overt Acts (p. 599)

Evidence of the quantity of narcotic drugs purchased by druggists is admissible in a prosecution against them under this section for a conspiracy to violate section 2 of the Harrison Act (4 Fed. Stat. Ann. (2d ed.) 178), since even if the purchases proved exceed those so alleged, such excess purchases are provable as additional and similar overt acts, although not specifically set out in the indictment. Friedman v. U. S., (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1919) 260 Fed. 388, 171 C. C. A. 254.

10. Weight and Sufficiency (p. 598)

In Belvin v. U. S., (C. C. A. 4th Cir. 1919) 260 Fed. 455, 171 C. C. A. 281, it was held that the evidence was sufficient to sustain a conviction for a conspiracy to defraud the United States.

In Friedman v. U. S., (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1919) 260 Fed. 388, 171 C. C. A. 254, the evidence was held sufficient to sustain a conviction for conspiracy to violate section 2 of the Harrison Act (4 Fed. Stat. Ann. (2d ed.) 178).

9. New Trial [New]

Where only two persons are indicted for conspiracy and the crime is in every sense indivisible, its essence is the mental confederation not of any two of numerous persons, but of the two particular defendants, and if after conviction of both a new trial is granted to one of them, it must also be granted to the other. Feder v. U. S., (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1919) 257 Fed. 694, 168 C. C. A. 644, 5 A. L. R. 370.

I. CONSTRUCTION AND APPLICATION, IN GENERAL

4. "Official Function" (p. 604)

A baggage porter of a railroad under federal control acts in an "official function." Krichman v. U. S., (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1920) 263 Fed. 538, affirming (S. D. N. Y. 1919) 256 Fed. 974 in 1919 Supplement annotation.

Vol. VII, p. 608, sec. 42. [First ed., 1909 Supp., p. 417.]

"To conceal"—"To harbor."—"To conceal," as used in this section, means to hide, secrete, or keep out of sight. "To harbor," as used herein, means to lodge, to care for, after secreting the deserter. Accordingly, a person may not be convicted of concealing and harboring a deserter in violation of this section where it is not shown that he knew that the person whom he assisted was a deserter. Firpo v. U. S., (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1919) 261 Fed. 850.

Advice by attorney as assistance to deserter.—An attorney is not guilty of violating this section because he advises a client, a sixteen-year-old boy, who is enlisted in the army, to remain away from the military authorities, where it is not shown that he assisted him in any way or knew that he was a deserter, but on the contrary believed that he could secure his release from the army by reason of his age. Firpo v. U. S., (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1919) 261 Fed. 850. The court said:

"That there was sufficient to raise a jury question as to whether or not Shillace was a deserter we may assume, but we are of the opinion that upon this mere occurrence the plaintiff in error cannot be charged with assisting Shillace in continuing his desertion and avoiding apprehension and seizure by the military authorities. Plaintiff in error was lawfully engaged in the practice of his profession and was consulted by a client. It was not only lawful for him to advise with the soldier, but, indeed, it was his duty to give him his best professional advice as to his rights under the circumstances disclosed by the narration of the facts surrounding Shillace's position. For him to have closed the door against a consultation would have been a breach of his professional obligations. Assuming that Shillace was a deserter, it was true that he was subject to arrest and incarceration by the military authorities. But in the consultation with his attorney he disclosed an apparent ground upon which to base a claim that he was entitled to his release from the army. He says he was 16 years of age when he voluntarily enlisted without his father's consent, and was but 16 years old when he left the service. His father first sought the lawyer for advice, and later brought his son to the lawyer's office. There may be a debatable question as to the professional obligations of the plaintiff in error to make known to the military authorities where the soldier was to be found; but can it say that the failure so to do constituted a criminal offense? We think not.

"Was it offensive to the statute above referred to for the plaintiff in error to advise his client to remain away from the authorities? It was the duty of the lawyer to his client to assist him in securing his release from the army. If there appeared to the plaintiff in error reasonable grounds for the expectation of success, it was not criminal for him to advise his client to remain away from the authorities. At least, such would be true in the absence of bad faith or criminal intent on the part of the plaintiff in error. There is testimony that a representation was made to the attorney that the soldier was home on sick leave and could not return to his duties. Indeed, the soldier testified that he only became a deserter from the time he visited the lawyer. Without knowledge of the fact of a desertion, there could not be said to be a criminal intent to assist Shillace.

"To assist, as used in the statute, implies guilty knowledge and felonious intent; knowledge of the wrongful purpose of the deserter. To assist, after such knowledge and intent, is serving the purpose of the deserter. It encourages him and aids him, and thus the offense may be committed. To assist, like to abet, involves some participation in the criminal act. Hicks v. U. S., 150 U. S. 450, 14 Sup. Ct. 144, 37 L. Ed. 1137.

"To advise a client to commit an act which is a crime makes the lawyer an accomplice, and at common law he would be an accessory. We are not satisfied from this record that there was evidence to submit to the jury indicating a knowledge on the part of the plaintiff in error that Shillace was a deserter and was continuing in his desertion from the service of the army of the United States at the time when he was advised to remain away and go to Connecticut, where it was suggested that he had relatives. Indeed, the plaintiff in error's view seems to have been that Shillace was wrongly kept in the army and that he was entitled to discharge by reason of his age. We think the plaintiff in error was giving his best advice and opinion to his client, without any intent of violating the law, and in doing so what he thought was within the realm of his professional obligations to his client."

Vol. VII, p. 612, sec. 47. [First ed., 1909 Supp., p. 418.]

Goods held by United States as bailee.—This section applies to goods in which the United States has a special property as bailee, as well as to such as it owns absolutely. Kambeitz v. U. S., (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1919) 262 Fed. 378.

Embezzlement by employee in mint.—A conviction for a violation of this section should be sustained where it appears that the defendant was a laborer in a mint and that he took certain coins which were in his custody by virtue of his employment. Schell v. U. S., (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1919) 261 Fed. 593.

Sufficiency of indictment charging United States commissioner with embezzlement.—An indictment charging a United States commissioner with having received as commissioner divers sums of money from persons named, to be paid over to the receiver of the land office, and with embezzling the same, must be deemed to charge an offense against the United States in view of the provision of R. S. sec. 2294, as amended by the Act of March 4, 1904, that where applicants for the benefit of the Homestead and other Land Laws make the required affidavits before commissioners of the United States, the proof so made shall have the same effect as if made before the register and receiver "when transmitted to them with the fees and commissions allowed and required by law," and of the directions in circulars issued by the Land Office, containing suggestions to the United States commissioners that the proofs so taken shall be "transmitted to the register and receiver with the necessary fees and commissions," and that in "no case should the transmittal thereof be left to the claimant." Stallings v. Splain, (1920) 253 U. S. 339, 40 S. Ct. 537, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (1919) 49 App. Cas. (D. C.) 38.

Evidence—Admissibility.—In a prosecution under this section for embezzling the contents of certain pay envelopes made out to fictitious government employees, evidence that the payrolls did not contain signatures of such employees by a witness who compared the names on a list taken from the pay envelopes with the payrolls, is admissible. Gurinsky v. U. S., (C. C. A. 5th Cir. 1919) 259 Fed. 378, 170 C. C. A. 354. In overruling the objection that such evidence was secondary and that the payrolls should have been produced, the court said:

"The government had two propositions to establish: (1) the shortage; and (2) that defendant caused it. As to the fact of the shortage, the government did not rely alone upon the fact that the payrolls were not receipted opposite the 56 names in question. Roberts testified that he had no men in his employ corresponding to the 56 names. His book showed no such names, and the absence of pages was accounted for and afforded no rational inference to the contrary. Inquiry failed to develop the presence of such employees in any of the camps within the paymaster's jurisdiction. The officer in charge was required to make good the shortage. The loss itself was established independently of Hopkins' evidence that the payrolls were not receipted. This testimony as to the condition of the payrolls did not reflect upon the question as to who caused the shortage, if there was one. If Hopkins had testified that there were signatures opposite the 56 names in defendant's handwriting, the case would have been presented differently. If the defendant contended that the rolls, if produced, would have shown 56 signatures on the payrolls opposite the 56 names in a handwriting other than his, then it was his duty to require production of the rolls by the government, and, failing to do so, he has no complaint based on their absence.

"It is also to be noted that Hopkins, in this respect, did not testify to what the payrolls contained, and his testimony did not infringe the letter of the rule against the allowance of secondary evidence of the contents of a written instrument. He merely stated that the column for signatures opposite the 56 names was blank. The rule is less stringent where the evidence is negative than where the attempt is to reproduce orally the written language of an instrument, especially one that creates or disposes of rights. The tendency of modern decisions and text-books is to relax the rule, and not to apply it to instruments only collaterally involved in the case. Greenleaf on Evidence (16th ed.) p. 169.

"Hopkins' evidence that the names from No. 575 to No. 635 on the service time book were put in alphabetical order on the payroll and the items were all $60 items, was testified to in effect by the defendant himself. The defendant testified that he and another transferred the names from the service book to the payrolls, and the 60 names were shown to be on the service book. According to the course of business, all names appearing on the service book were transferred from it to the payrolls alphabetically. The important questions were whether the names were written on the service book by the defendant, and whether the pay envelopes had been prepared for them and were missing. Four of the 60 pay envelopes, for which there were no corresponding employees, were still in the basket at the time the loss of the others was discovered. The course of business was such that pay envelopes were prepared for all names that appeared on the service time book, and the 56 names involved did so appear. The evidence clearly shows that the course of business was followed on this occasion. We conclude that there was no reversible error in the District Court's ruling on the assignment based on Hopkins' evidence."

Indictment—Sufficiency.—An indictment for receiving stolen property in violation of this section which fails to allege that the defendant received the property "with intent to convert to his own use or gain," is fatally defective. Cohn v. U. S., (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1919) 258 Fed. 355, 169 C. C. A. 371. Regarding the necessity of such an averment, the court said:

"The trial judge apparently thought that, because there was no comma in the statute between the phrase 'in his possession' and the phrase 'with intent to convert,' the intent clause was intended to modify the verbs 'have' and 'retain' only. That construction of the statute does not conform to the construction which appears to have been placed upon it by the Supreme Court in Kirby v. United States, 174 U. S. 47, 53, 19 Sup. Ct. 574, 43 L. Ed. 890. In that case it was held incumbent upon the government to prove beyond a reasonable doubt: (1) that the property was in fact stolen from the United States; (2) that the defendant received or retained in his possession with intent to convert to his own use or gain; (3) that he received or retained it with knowledge that it had been stolen from the United States. And Mr. Justice Harlan, who wrote the opinion of the court, said that—

"The act of Congress upon which the present indictment rests makes the receiving of stolen property of the United States with the intent by the receiver to convert it to his own use or gain, he knowing it to have been stolen, a distinct, substantive felony."

"The indictment now under consideration charges: (1) that the property was stolen; (2) and that it was the property of the United States; (3) that the defendant unlawfully received it; (4) that defendant knew at the time he received it that it had been stolen. But the allegation that defendant received or retained the property with the intent to convert to his own use or gain is not to be found. And we are obliged to hold upon the authority of Kirby v. United States, supra, that the failure to allege that defendant received it 'with intent to convert to his own use' is a fatal defect."

Evidence.—In Clark v. U. S., (C. C. A. 3d Cir. 1919) 258 Fed. 437, 169 C. C. A. 453, it was held that the evidence in a prosecution for a violation of this section was sufficient to show that the title to the stolen property was in the United States.

VIII. Indictment.

IV. "COMPETENT TRIBUNAL, OFFICER OR PERSON" (p. 672)

Member of legal advisory board.—An affidavit in support of a claim for exemption and discharge from the selective service draft, may be made before an associate member of the legal advisory board of the county, and if false, the affiant may be prosecuted for perjury under this section. Hardwick v. U. S., (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1919) 257 Fed. 505, 168 C. C. A. 509; Whiteside v. U. S., (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1919) 257 Fed. 509, 168 C. C. A. 513.

V. OATH "AUTHORIZED" BY "LAW" (p. 674)

Application for passports.—A person may not be indicted under this section for perjury in making an affidavit relative to an application for passports because he swore falsely that he had known the applicant for a period of four years, where the rules governing the granting and issuing of passports, promulgated by the President, do not require such a statement to be made in any affidavit supporting the application. U. S. v. Robertson, (S. D. Cal. 1919) 257 Fed. 195.

Proceedings under Selective Service Act.—In Hardwick v. U. S., (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1919) 257 Fed. 505, 168 C. C. A. 509, it was held that under section 10 of the Selective Service regulations an associate member of a legal advisory board was authorized to administer oaths to registrants, and that a registrant who made a false affidavit could be prosecuted for perjury under this section. To same effect, see Whiteside v. U. S., (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1919) 257 Fed. 509, 168 C. C. A. 513.

VIII. INDICTMENT (p. 676)

The materiality of a perjured statement may be made to appear in an indictment either by an allegation of its materiality or by pleading facts which of themselves show its materiality. Berry v. U. S., (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1919) 259 Fed. 203, 170 C. C. A. 271.

Action upon false statement.—An indictment under this section for making a false affidavit concerning a desert land entry is not fatally defective because it contains no allegation that the affidavit was accepted and acted upon by the government. Berry v. U. S., (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1919) 259 Fed. 203, 170 C. C. A. 271.

Selective Service Law.—In Hardwick v. U. S., (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1919) 257 Fed. 505, 168 C. C. A. 509, regarding the allegations in an indictment under this section for making a false affidavit claiming exemption under the Selective Service Act (9 Fed. Stat. Ann. (2d ed.) 1136), the court said:

"Defendant urges that the averment that the defendant well knew that the woman named in the indictment 'was not at that time, nor at all, his wife, nor dependent upon his labor for her support,' was fatally defective, because of the omission of an averment that the wife was mainly dependent for support upon the labor of the accused. But as the charge is that defendant willfully falsely stated in the affidavit that he had a wife dependent upon his labor for support, whereas he well knew that the woman named was not then, or at all, his wife, and dependent upon his labor for her support, defendant was sufficiently informed and could not possibly have been misled or prejudiced. The materiality of the false statement and affidavit is too apparent to require comment."

In Whiteside v. U. S., (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1919) 257 Fed. 509, 168 C. C. A. 513, in a similar prosecution under this section, the court said:

"It is said that it does not appear who subscribed to the affidavit taken by the defendant. But it is alleged that the affidavit was subscribed and sworn to, and that the associate member of the legal advisory board administered the oath to the defendant, and that in the affidavit hereinbefore referred to defendant, having taken the oath to testify to matters referred to in the affidavit, falsely and knowingly stated, in effect, that he had a wife who was dependent upon his labor for support. This makes it perfectly clear that the defendant was the person charged with having subscribed and taken the affidavit."

Indictment.—An indictment charging the defendant with a violation of this section in having in his possession certain dies for making counterfeit money, need not allege that he had possession of the dies with intent to defraud, or to use the same in making counterfeit coins. Baender v. U. S., (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1919) 260 Fed. 832, 171 C. C. A. 558. The court said:

"Act Feb. 10, 1891, c. 127, § 1, 26 Stat. 742, which was in force prior to the enactment of the act of 1909, had denounced as unlawful the possession of the prohibited dies, etc., with intent to fraudulently or unlawfully use the same. In amending the law by the later act, the report of the committee on revision shows that the words 'with intent to fraudulently use the same' were 'intentionally dropped from the statute'; the committee believing that a person who has in his possession dies which may be used for counterfeiting any coin shall be required to show that his possession is lawful, and that the government should not be required to prove that he has them in his possession with the intent to use them fraudulently and unlawfully for counterfeiting. Congress evidently intended that the unlawful possession of such dies should be sufficient evidence to warrant a conviction, unless the accused could explain the possession to the satisfaction of the jury.

"The statute here involved has analogy to Act Jan. 17, 1914, c. 9, 38 Stat. 275, amending Act Feb. 9, 1909, c. 100, 35 Stat. 614, and providing that possession of imported opium shall be deemed sufficient evidence to warrant conviction, unless the defendant shall explain the possession to the satisfaction of the jury. Under that statute convictions have been sustained on proof of possession; the courts ruling that the statute provides for a presumption of prima facie proof of the offense which, while sufficient to sustain a verdict of guilt, may or may not be sufficient to satisfy the jury of the guilt of the accused, applying the doctrine of Luria v. United States, 231 U. S. 9, 34 Sup. Ct. 10, 58 L. Ed. 101, where it was held that the establishment of a presumption from certain facts prescribes a rule of evidence, and not one of substantive right, and that if the inference is reasonable, and opportunity is given to controvert the presumption, it is not a denial of due process of law. United States v. Yee Fing (D. C.) 222 Fed. 154; United States v. Ah Hung (D. C. 243 Fed. 762; Gee Woe v. United States, 250 Fed. 428, 162 C. C. A. 498.

"It is true that in all cases in which a specific intent is made part of the offense by the statute creating it, it must be alleged, but in cases where the act includes the intent it is sufficient to charge the offense in the language of the statute, and the intent will be inferred. . . .

"In enacting the statute under which this indictment is brought, Congress intended that it should express all the elements of the crime, and that the prosecution, having shown the unlawful possession by the accused, should not be required to prove what was in the latter's mind as to future use of the things so possessed, and that a criminal intent is to be inferred from the unlawful possession.

"It is well settled that under the section of the statute which makes unlawful the forging of coins it is unnecessary to allege an intent. United States v. Otey (C. C.) 31 Fed. 68; United States v. Russell (C. C.) 22 Fed. 390; United States v. Peters, 2 Abb. (U. S.) 494, Fed. Cas. No. 16,035. But counsel for the plaintiff in error attempts to distinguish the present case by asserting that the offense which is here charged is not an act of the accused, so that intention may be imputed to it. To this we cannot agree. To have possession is to maintain in physical control, and it implies both will and action on the part of the possessor. Kaye v. United States, 177 Fed. 147, 100 C. C. A.

567, is not in point. That case arose under the statute of February 10, 1891.

"The plaintiff in error admitted by his plea in the court below the truth of the indictment. We hold that the indictment is sufficient to sustain the judgment."

Vol. VII, p. 788, sec. 211. [First ed., 1909 Supp., p. 462.]

II. MAILING OBSCENE MATTER

2. Test of Obscenity (p. 791)

Test of offense—Writing innocent on its face.—It is not sufficient to constitute a violation of this section that a letter or publication be offensive to the feelings or to the pride of those into whose hands it may come. The evil character of the letter or publication must be reasonably apparent or discernible on its face. Sales v. U. S., (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1919) 258 Fed. 597, 169 C. C. A. 537. In commenting on this element of the offense, the court said:

"It need not be in particular words, but may appear in the structure of the sentences, and either directly or indirectly by innuendo or suggestion, or in the thought conveyed. Dunlop v. United States, 165 U. S. 196, 17 Sup. Ct. 375, 41 L. Ed. 799, involved newspaper publications of the latter character. Instances of suggestive letters held to offend the statute may be found in Parish v. United States, 159 C. C. A. 258, 247 Fed. 40, and United States v. Moore (D. C.) 129 Fed. 159. We approve of those decisions. But we know of no case under this clause of the statute in which it has been held that, if the letter or publication in itself is not objectionable, an undisclosed motive or intent of the writer may be found to convict him. In Knowles v. United States, 95 C. C. A. 579, 170 Fed. 409, we held that a good motive was no defense to an evil publication. The converse is measurably true. If an undisclosed evil motive or intent can bring within the statute a letter or publication that is innocent and mailable upon its face, convictions could be sustained in cases of simple newspaper 'want ads,' upon proof of an evil 'ultimate purpose, motive, or intent' in the mind of an advertiser or publisher who employed the mails. Doubtless that would be a proper field for legislation, but we do not think the statute before us goes so far.

"Cases like Grimm v. United States, 156 U. S. 604, 15 Sup. Ct. 470, 39 L. Ed. 550, and De Gignac v. United States, 52 C. C. A. 71, 113 Fed. 197, are not in point. They arose under the clause of the statute making nonmailable any written or printed card, letter, circular, etc., giving information directly or indirectly where, how, or from whom certain articles might be obtained. There a letter may have a perfectly clean face, and yet its mailing be a violation of the law."

a. What Constitutes (p. 816)

Necessity of pecuniary loss.—"This section of the statute does not make damage or loss to the victims of a scheme to defraud, or to obtain money or property by false pretenses, representations or promises, a sine qua non of its violation, and such damage or loss is not indispensable to the commission of an offense under it." Thus, it was held that there was a violation of this section where the defendant induced certain persons to agree to pay $30,000 for 1,760 acres of land and the assignment of a lease of 480 acres of school land in such a way that the defendant could obtain 1,560 acres of other like land from the same owners for nothing, although the land purchased by the victims of the scheme was really worth the amount they agreed to pay for it. Wine v. U. S., (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1919) 260 Fed. 911.

Schemes not enumerated are within the act if they fall within the general words "scheme or artifice to defraud." MacKnight v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1st Cir. 1920) 263 Fed. 832.

Selling land without title.—A scheme whereby a purchaser of land is induced by false representations of title is within the statute. MacKnight v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1st Cir. 1920) 263 Fed. 832.

IV. PROCEDURE

2. Indictment

a. In General (p. 828)

An indictment charging a violation of this section is sufficient where it alleges a scheme by the defendant to defraud people by means of misrepresentations fully set forth, that the representations were false and known to be false, that the supernatural powers which the defendant claimed to be able to exercise were not possessed by him and that his acts and pretenses were fraudulently conceived, and were done with the purpose of defrauding. Crane v. U. S., (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1919) 259 Fed. 490, 170 C. C. A. 466.

In Lewis v. U. S., (C. C. A. 5th Cir. 1919) 259 Fed. 221, 170 C. C. A. 289, the plaintiff in error was charged with violating this section by using the mails to induce shipments of produce to him with the intent to convert the proceeds. In holding the indictment sufficient, the court said: "The indictment is good. The case relied upon by plaintiff in error (Faulkner v. United States, 157 Fed. 840, 85 C. C. A. 204) holds that the fact that a circular sent out by a commission merchant contained exaggerations, and that he failed to settle with some of his patrons, would not sustain a conviction on an indictment under Revised Statutes, § 5480. With reference to fraudulent intent, the allegations in the instant case are more comprehensive than the proof in the Faulkner Case. Besides, the Faulkner Case was decided prior to the amendment effected by the adoption of the Criminal Code (Act March 4, 1909, c. 321, § 215, 35 Stat. 1130). The cases of Bettman v. U. S., 224 Fed. 819, 140 C. C. A. 265, and Tucker v. U. S., 224 Fed. 833, 140 C. C. A. 279, are conclusive against plaintiff in error's contention.

"It is insisted that the letter set forth in the first count negatives the intent to defraud. The letter contains the following with reference to shipment of peas:

"You can ship them B. L. attached, if you want to, or I will send you check as soon as they come in."

"If it were necessary that the 'writing . . . sent by the post office establishment,' as an element of the crime, disclose a fraud, that which would make it illegal would render it innocuous. It was not the purpose of the law to punish merely the incompetent in crime. Efficiency in fraud should not insure immunity. The letter may have been well conceived to establish the relations necessary to the success of the scheme charged. Certainly the contrary could not be said, in the absence of a statement of facts."

c. Use of Mails (p. 833)

Scheme to be effected through use of mails.—To same effect as first paragraph of original annotation, see Robins v. U. S., (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1919) 262 Fed. 126.

f. Repugnancy and Duplicity (p. 836)

Repugnancy.—An indictment under this section which charges that the defendants represented that, by reason of their pretended services, applications to purchase public lands under the Timber and Stone Act of June 3, 1878, ch. 151 (9 Fed. Stat. Ann. (2d ed.) 606) would be accepted and allowed by the Land Office and that they also represented that they could, by reason of their knowledge of the public land laws, cause a reversal and change of certain rules and regulations of the United States and authorities and the Department of the Interior, and in that way secure title to the lands, is not defective for repugnancy. Byron v. U. S., (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1919) 259 Fed. 371, 170 C. C. A. 347.

4. Trial

b. Evidence and Instructions (p. 838)

Intent—Similar schemes.—To same effect as original annotation, see Byron v. U. S., (C. C. A. 9th Cir. (1919) 259 Fed. 371, 170 C. C. A. 347.

Representations made by defendant.—In a prosecution under this section for using the mails to promote frauds in connection with entries on public lands of the United States, evidence that the defendant advised persons wishing to make entries that it would not be necessary for them to personally inspect the land before filing entries but that he could make such entries for them, is admissible, where it appears that such representations were false, that they were made with a view of having the applicants pay him the moneys which he obtained from them, and that they were acted upon by the applicants. Byron v. U. S., (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1919) 259 Fed. 371, 170 C. C. A. 347.

Sufficiency.—In Crane v. U. S., (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1919) 259 Fed. 480, 170 C. C. A. 456, it was held that the evidence was sufficient to sustain a conviction for a violation of this section.

Vol. VII, p. 859, sec. 233. [First ed., 1909 Supp., p. 471.]

Standard of care.—Neither this section nor the regulations formulated thereunder attempt to fix the entire measure or degree of care to be exercised by a common carrier in the care and custody of high explosives. Howell v. Lehigh Valley R. Co., (N. J. 1920) 109 Atl. 309.

Vol. VII, p. 890, sec. 272. [First ed., 1909 Supp., p. 481.]

III. THIRD PARAGRAPH

1. Lands Reserved or Acquired

a. In General (p. 896)

Allegation of character of public use.—Where, in a prosecution for murder, jurisdiction is claimed by the government under the third paragraph of this section, the indictment is not defective because it fails to allege the character of the public use for which the parcel of land was acquired and used by the government, where it identifies the tract by metes and bounds and alleges the date of the cession of jurisdiction by the state to the United States. Thus, the averment that "on the 21st day of September, A. D. 1915, constitutional and exclusive jurisdiction over the site of said lot, tract and parcel of land was ceded to the United States of America by the said state of Texas in the manner provided by law," is a sufficient averment of a cession for one of the purposes enumerated in the third subdivision of this section, and which authorize the United States to accept such a cession, upon the principle that public acts of public officials are presumed to be rightly executed. Brown v. U. S., (C. C. A. 5th Cir. 1919) 257 Fed. 46, 168 C. C. A. 258. The court said:

"It may be conceded that the third subdivision of section 272 of the Penal Code confers no right on the United States to accept a cession of jurisdiction from a state for other than the purposes set out in section 272. For the purposes of this case, the use must have been for a 'needful building.' Exclusive jurisdiction of a tract used for a purpose other than one of the named statutory purposes would be unauthorized. The site was, in fact, acquired for a post office, but the indictment avers only that it was acquired for public purposes. It is contended that this is a fatal defect, because the locality of the offense was jurisdictional, and the indictment must show jurisdiction on its face. The indictment does identify the tract on which the crime is alleged to have been committed by describing it by metes and bounds, and also by alleging the date of the cession of jurisdiction by the state of Texas to the United States. The defendant was fully informed as to the locus of the alleged offense and the claim of exclusive federal jurisdiction arising from it, and it is difficult to see how he could have been prejudiced by the imperfect averment, if there was one, and why it should not, therefore, within the terms of section 1025, R. S., be deemed sufficient."

Vol. VII, p. 983, sec. 330. [First ed., 1909 Supp., p. 494.]

Qualified verdict as changing degree of murder.—A conviction for murder as charged in the indictment, which embraced the elements constituting murder in the first degree, is not rendered less than one for first degree murder merely because the jury exercised its right, under this section, to mitigate the punishment to imprisonment for life. Stroud v. U. S., (1919) 251 U. S. 15, 380, 40 S. Ct. 50, 176, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —.

Vol. VII, p. 984, sec. 332. [First ed., 1909 Supp., p. 495.]

Offenses against internal revenue.—In Mayer v. U. S., (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1919) 259 Fed. 216, 170 C. C. A. 284, the plaintiffs in error were convicted of engaging in the retail liquor business without having paid the tax required by the Act of Feb. 8, 1875, ch. 36, § 16 (3 Fed. Stat. Ann. (2d ed.) 1053). It was held that one of the plaintiffs in error, though employed only as a clerk, might be convicted as a principal through the effect of this section.

Aiding and abetting corporation.—To same effect as original annotation, see Kelly v. U. S., (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1919) 259 Fed. 392, 169 C. C. A. 408.

Failure to take exceptions.—Where, in a prosecution of an employer and employee for a violation of R. S. sec. 3244 (3 Fed. Stat. Ann. (2d ed.) 1045), the particular claims made on behalf of the latter, that he was only an employee, are not brought to the attention of the court during the trial or saved by exceptions, they will not be considered in view of the provisions of this section making aiders and abettors principals. Turner v. U. S., (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1919) 259 Fed. 103, 170 C. C. A. 171.

Vol. VII, p. 987, sec. 335. [First ed., 1909 Supp., p. 495.]

Misdemeanor.—Where the maximum punishment prescribed by a statute was imprisonment for not more than 12 months or a fine of not more than $1,000, or both, the offense was only a misdemeanor, although a failure to pay the fine, in the event the defendant was ordered to stand committed until it was paid, would result in 30 days' imprisonment in addition to the 12 months, if the maximum imprisonment was imposed; for such additional imprisonment would be no part of the original punishment and it would be uncertain, at the time the sentence was imposed, whether the additional 30 days would ever be served. Pollard v. U. S., (C. C. A. 5th Cir. 1919) 261 Fed. 336, holding that violation of the Selective Service Act of May 18, 1917, sec. 13, 9 Fed. Stat. Ann. (2d ed.) 1163, by keeping a house of ill fame was not an offense involving moral turpitude, nor a crimen falsi, nor punishable by a penitentiary or hard labor sentence, and so was not an infamous crime triable under the Constitution only by indictment.

This section does not operate to supersede R. S. sec. 13 (9 Fed. Stat. Ann. (2d ed.) 393). Goublin v. U. S., (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1919) 261 Fed. 5, 171 C. C. A. 601.

PENSIONS

Vol. VII, p. 1026, sec. 4715. [First ed., vol. V, p. 641.]

Allowances under R. S. secs. 4756 and 4757 (see vol. VII, pp. 1045, 1046) do not fall within the prohibition of this section, and may therefore be paid in addition to a pension under the general prison laws. (1918) 21 Op. Atty.-Gen. 268.

Vol. VII, p. 1041, sec. 4747. [First ed., vol. V, p. 667.]

"Pension" as including retired soldier's pay.—The pay of a retired soldier has never been treated as a pension under the statutes of the United States or of the statutes of the various states exempting the same from seizure under legal process. Szymanaki v. Szymanaki, (Ia. 1920) 176 N. W. 806, wherein the court said:

"The word 'pensioner,' as used in our statute, must be given its usual and ordinary meaning, and has application to individuals formerly in the military service of the United States who, either on account of disability or by act of Congress, receive annually a fixed sum, payable ordinarily in quarterly installments. A retired soldier receiving pay cannot, under the United States statutes, receive a pension. The theory upon which pensions are allowed is entirely different from that upon which a soldier's monthly pay is continued after his retirement from the army."

Nature of pension.—The money benefits provided for in this section are "pensions" within the purview of R. S. sec. 4813 (see vol. III, p. 572) and the pertinent provision of the Act of June 30, 1914, 38 Stat. L. 398 (see vol. III, p. 573) and such money benefits inure to the grantees concurrently with maintenance in the Naval Home. (1918) 31 Op. Atty.-Gen. 268.

Exclusive jurisdiction of secretary.—The Secretary of the Navy has exclusive jurisdiction to determine who are entitled to the money benefits granted by this section, and after that official has issued a certificate allowing same, the Commissioner of Pensions, in making payment of said money benefits acts only in a ministerial capacity.

(1917) 31 Op. Atty.-Gen. 127. Regarding the nature of such payments, the Attorney-General said: "The question propounded by the Secretary of the Interior as to whether the payments provided for under this section are within the purview of the term 'pensions' as used in the Act of June 30, 1914 [see vol. III, p. 574], pertains rather to the administration of the Navy Department than of the Department of the Interior, and as the Secretary of the Navy has not requested an opinion with respect to this question, the Attorney-General is precluded by the settled rule of his Department from expressing an opinion in regard to it."

Effect of sec. 312 of War Risk Insurance Act.—A sergeant in the Marine Corps who, prior to the enactment of the War Risk Insurance Act of October 6, 1917 (see vol. IX, p. 1322) had served in the corps for more than 21 years and who had become "disabled from sea service" by a wound received in action in June, 1916, but who, though entitled to honorable discharge from the service upon October 6, 1917, did not actually receive his discharge until November 5, 1917, is entitled both to the benefits of this section and also to whatever allowance he may be otherwise entitled to under the provisions of the War Risk Insurance Act. (1918) 31 Op. Atty.-Gen. 296.

Inmates of St. Elizabeth's Hospital.—Allowances under this and the following section which accrue to inmates of St. Elizabeth's Hospital should be paid to the superintendent of the hospital, notwithstanding such inmates are represented by a legal guardian or committee. 31 Op. Atty.-Gen. 354.

Vol. VII, p. 1097. [Act of March 2, 1895.] [First ed., vol. V, p. 643.]

Payment of pension to guardian of insane pensioner.—Where a pension is paid to the guardian of an insane pensioner who dies while the pension money is still in the hands of the guardian it becomes no part of the deceased's estate and his creditors have no standing in court to require its subjection to the payment of their claims. The guardian in such a case is an agent of the government. Tama County v. Kepler, (Ia. 1919) 173 N. W. 912.

PHILIPPINE ISLANDS

Vol. VII, p. 1140, sec. 5. [First ed., vol. V, p. 719.]

Due process of law - Statute requiring licensed vessels in coastwise trade to carry mail free.—Neither the guaranty of the Philippine Bill of Rights of due process of law nor its prohibition against the taking of private property for public use without compensation can be said to have been violated by a Philippine law which imposed upon vessels engaged in the coastwise trade, for the privilege of so engaging, the duty to carry the mails free to and from their ports of touch, in view of the plenary power which the Philippine government had always possessed and exercised, and which was recognized in the Act of Congress of April 15, 1904, to limit the right to engage in the coastwise trade to those who agree to carry the mails free. Public Utility Com'rs v. Ynchausti, (1920) 251 U. S. 401, 40 S. Ct. 277, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —.

Vol. VII, p. 1182, sec. 6. [First ed., vol. X, p. 262.]

Certificates of indebtedness in the sum of $10,000,000 par value which the government of the Philippine Islands proposes to issue to maintain the required parity between the silver and the gold peso and to meet an emergent exchange situation, as provided by this Act, and also by an act of the Philippine legislature of May 6, 1918, will, if and when issued in the form and under the conditions herein stated, be the valid obligations of the Philippine government. (1919) 31 Op. Atty.-Gen. 426.

1918 Supp., p. 596, sec. 11.

Bond issues by municipalities.—The proposed issue of $250,000 bonds by the municipality of Iloilo, P. I., under the authority of the act of March 9, 1917, of the Philippine legislature (assuming that the issue is necessary to anticipate taxes and is within the debt limit provisions of this act, will be, when made in accordance with the provisions of said act of the Philippine legislature, a valid and binding obligation. (1917) 31 Op. Atty.-Gen. 131.

PORTO RICO

Vol. VII, p. 1276, sec. 38. [First ed., vol. V, p. 775.]

Bonds.—The proposed issue by Porto Rico of $300,000 insular loan refunding bonds, under authority of act No. 120, approved July 26, 1913, of the legislative assembly of Porto Rico, not being in excess of the debt limit provision of this section, will, provided the requirements of said act No. 120 are complied with, when duly sold, delivered, and paid for, constitute the valid obligation of the people of Porto Rico. (1917) 31 Op. Atty.-Gen. 106.

1918 Supp., p. 610, sec. 3.

Validity of bond issue.—The proposed issue of bonds by Porto Rico to the amount of $200,000 for the improvement of the irrigation system, as authorized by act No. 23 of the legislature of Porto Rico of November 22, 1917, not being in excess of 7 per centum of the aggregate tax valuation of the property of Porto Rico, as required by this section, the bonds will, if issued under the conditions prescribed by the said act of Porto Rico of November 22, 1917, be valid and binding obligations upon the people of Porto Rico. 31 Op. Atty.-Gen. 373.

Validity of bond issue.—The proposed issue of bonds by Porto Rico to the amount of $500,000 for the construction of roads and bridges, as provided by act No. 71 of the legislative assembly of Porto Rico of April 13, 1916, not being in excess of the limit of indebtedness imposed by this section, and the form of the proposed bonds complying with the conditions prescribed by the regulation of the executive council of Porto Rico of April 2, 1918, said bonds will be the valid and binding obligations of the people of Porto Rico. 31 Op. Atty.-Gen. 342, wherein it was said:

"In an opinion rendered Aug. 11, 1916. I had occasion to pass upon an issue of $500,000 of the bonds authorized to the total amount of $2,000,000 by said act No. 71 of April 13, 1916, of which the present is a further issue. I pointed out that the general power of the people of Porto Rico to issue bonds under the provisions of section 38 of the organic act approved April 12, 1900, had been fully considered by my predecessors (Op. 27, 104; 28 ib. 246; 29 ib. 468), and held that the issue there in question was legal.

"The act of April 12, 1900, has been superseded by the Act of Congress approved March 2, 1917 (39 Stat. 951), entitled 'An act to provide civil government for Porto Rico, and for other purposes.' Section 3, which reads in part as follows: 'and when necessary to anticipate taxes and revenues, bonds and other obligations may be issued by Porto Rico or any municipal government therein as may be provided by law, and to protect the public credit: Provided, however, That no public indebtedness of Porto Rico or of any subdivision or municipality thereof shall be authorized or allowed in excess of seven per centum of the aggregate tax valuation of its property,' is identical with the provision on the same subject in the act of April 12, 1900.

"My opinion of August 11, 1916, is therefore applicable to the present issue, since the circumstances under which it is to be made and the law authorizing it are not different from those existing when that opinion was written."

1918 Supp., p. 626, sec. 41.

Jurisdiction of alien domiciled in Porto Rico.—Jurisdiction of the federal District Court for Porto Rico of a suit to which an alien domiciled in Porto Rico is a party is denied by the provision of this section, which gives said court jurisdiction of controversies "where all of the parties on either side of the controversy are citizens or subjects of a foreign state or states, or citizens of a state, territory, or district of the United States not domiciled in Porto Rico." The restriction of jurisdiction to cases where all the parties on either side of the controversy are "not domiciled in Porto Rico" applies to aliens as well as to American citizens. Porto Rico Ry., etc., Co. v. Mor, (1920) 253 U. S. 345, 40 S. Ct. 516, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —.

1918 Supp., p. 629, sec. 52.

Continuance in office under original appointments.—This section did not have the effect of reappointing the present attorney general, commissioner of education, and auditor of Porto Rico to a new term of office, but these officials are continued in office under their original appointments. 31 Op. Atty.-Gen. 381.

POSTAL SERVICE

Vol. VIII, p. 74. [Enlisted men, etc.]

[First ed., 1909 Supp., p. 525.]

Authority of Secretary of Navy to fix compensation.—Under the provisions of this act, which authorize the selection and designation of enlisted men of the navy as navy mail clerks and provide for additional compensation for such services, the Secretary of the Navy has the power, with uncontrolled discretion, to fix the compensation of navy mail clerks within the prescribed maximum. (1918) 31 Op. Atty.-Gen. 320.

Vol. VIII, p. 82, sec. 3868. [First ed., vol. V, p. 821.]

Authority of Postmaster General in matter of determining character and quality of letter boxes.—The power to determine the character and quality of letter boxes for the entire postal system is vested in the Postmaster General, and the Art Commission of New York has no right to control the design of letter boxes to be erected in that city. (1916) 31 Op. Atty.-Gen. 73.

Vol. VIII, p. 163, sec. 3962. [First ed., vol. V, p. 893.]

master General to impose fines for delays of less than twenty-four hours in transporting the mails cannot be asserted as the equivalent of a departmental declaration that no such power existed in behalf of a railway company which had notice before it contracted to carry the mail that failure to maintain train schedules was regarded by Congress and by the Post Office Department as a violation of mail-carrying contracts, justifying the imposition of fines or deductions, and that both believed that there was authority under the customary contracts and the law to impose such deductions. Kansas City Southern R. Co. v. U. S., (1920) 252 U. S. 147, 40 S. Ct. 257, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (1918) 53 Ct. Cl. 630.

Vol. VIII, p. 194, sec. 4001. [First ed., vol. V, p. 917.]

Burden of carrying mails at price fixed by Congress when attaching.—The burden of a land-aided railroad, under the Act of June 3, 1856, § 5, to carry the mails at a price to be fixed by Congress, attached upon the acceptance of any aid whatever, no matter how disproportionate to the cost of constructing the portion of the road so aided. Grand Trunk Western R. Co. v. U. S., (1920) 252 U. S. 112, 40 S. Ct. 309, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (1918) 53 Ct. Cl. 473.

Right of government to have mails carried at price fixed by Congress and affected by illegal act of state in issuing patent.—The right to have the mails carried at a price to be fixed by Congress, which was acquired by the federal government by way of charge upon a railroad under the Act of June 3, 1856, through the railroad company's acceptance of a tract of public land therein granted to the state in aid of railroad construction, could not be invalidated by any illegal act of the authorities of the state in issuing a patent for a wholly different tract. Grand Trunk Western R. Co. v. U. S., (1920) 252 U. S. 112, 40 S. Ct. 309, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (1918) 53 Ct. Cl. 473.

Recovery of overpayments to railway companies transporting mail.—The balances due to a railway company for carrying the mails, although arising under successive quadrennial contracts, are regarded as running accounts, and moneys paid in violation of law upon balances certified by the government accounting officers may be recovered by means of a later debit in these accounts. It does not matter how long a time elapsed before the overpayment was discovered, or how long the attempt to recover it was deferred. Grand Trunk Western R. Co. v. U. S., (1920) 252 U. S. 112, 40 S. Ct. 309, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (1918) 53 Ct. Cl. 473.

The Postmaster General, having satisfied himself that overpayments had been made to a railway company for carrying the mails, might, without establishing the illegality by suit, deduct the amount of such overpayments from the moneys otherwise payable to the railway company to which the overpayments had been made. Grand Trunk Western R. Co. v. U. S., (1920) 252 U. S. 112, 40 S. Ct. 309, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (1918) 53 Ct. Cl. 473.

Vol. VIII, p. 195, sec. 4002. [First ed., vol. V, p. 919.]

Pay for carrying mails—Ascertainment of weights as of what time.—Payments to a railway company for carrying the mails during each four-year term upon the basis of weights taken immediately prior to the beginning of such term instead of annually must be deemed to satisfy the requirement of this section, that payment of specified sums per mile be made per annum according to weights, since such action accords with prior practice followed many years, and was permitted by the letter of the statute, the carrier having submitted with full knowledge. New York, etc., R. Co. v. U. S., (1919) 251 U. S. 123, 40 S. Ct. 67, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (1918) 53 Ct. Cl. 222.

Greater compensation than amount fixed by contract.—A railway company which voluntarily accepts and performs mail transportation service, with knowledge of what the United States intends to pay, cannot recover any greater compensation, even though it might have been driven to perform the service for an inadequate compensation by the fear that a refusal would incur the hostility of persons living along its line, since this does not amount to compulsion by the United States, and cannot constitute the basis of a justiciable claim against it for taking property for public use under an implied contract to make adequate compensation. New York, etc., R. Co. v. U. S., (1919) 251 U. S. 123, 40 S. Ct. 67, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (1918) 53 Ct. Cl. 222.

Readjustment order changing practice with reference to compensation for carrying mails and calculation of average weight.—Railway companies carrying the mails after the Postmaster General had, by a readjustment order, directed that compensation be based upon a calculation of average weight, made by taking the whole number of days included in the weighing period as a divisor for obtaining the average weight per day, instead of the number of working or week days, as was the former practice, are bound by such order, either because the Postmaster General had the discretionary power to make the order, as is held by four justices, or because, as is held by two justices, the railway companies by their conduct in fact accepted the terms offered by the Postmaster General by transporting the mails and accepting the stated compensation. The Mail Divisor Cases, (1920) 251 U. S. 328, 40 S. Ct. 162, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (1918) 53 Ct. Cl. 258.

Application of section to every carrier using railroad.—The obligation of a land-aided railroad, under this section, to carry the mails at 80 per cent of the rates otherwise payable, affects every carrier which may thereafter use the railroad, whatever the nature of the tenure, and it is immaterial that the railroad company which later carries the mail over such road received none of the land and obtained no benefit from the grant. Grand Trunk Western R. Co. v. U. S., (1920) 252 U. S. 112, 40 S. Ct. 309, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (1918) 53 Ct. Cl. 473.

Railroad construction when land aided.—Railroad construction cannot be said not to have been land aided, within the meaning of this section, governing rates for mail transportation, because in fact it may have been completed without the aid either of funds or of credits derived from public lands, where, before the road had been fully completed, the railroad company asked that certain lands be granted to it in aid of construction, and accepted from the state a patent for the lands which recited that such was the purpose of the conveyance, and expressly assented to the terms and conditions of the grant which Congress imposed, and thereafter proceeded to dispose of the lands.

Effect of departmental construction.—The long-continued practice of the Post Office Department to pay the full mail transportation rates to a certain railroad company, instead of the 80 per cent payable if the construction of the railroad was land-aided, will not be given effect by the courts under the rule of long-continued executive construction, where such practice was not due to any construction of the statute which the Department later sought to abandon, but to what is alleged to be a mistake of fact,—due, perhaps, to an oversight. Grand Trunk Western R. Co. v. U. S., (1920) 252 U. S. 112, 40 S. Ct. 309, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (1918) 53 Ct. Cl. 473.

Illegal acts of land grant railroad as invalidating charge with reference to compensation.—The charge upon a railroad with reference to compensation for carrying the mails imposed by acceptance of a land grant with its terms and conditions may not be invalidated by any illegal act of the railroad under a mortgage foreclosure, although the mortgage was executed before the railroad company had applied for the grant, and it does not appear that the mortgage purported specifically to cover public lands, where the trustee under the mortgage classed these lands as after-acquired property, and the company's interest in them was, by special proceeding, made subject to the foreclosure proceedings. Grand Trunk Western R. Co. v. U. S., (1920) 252 U. S. 112, 40 S. Ct. 309, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (1918) 53 Ct. Cl. 473.

Vol. VIII, p. 206. [Weighing of mails, etc.]

Power of Congress to authorize withdrawal of empty mail bags from mails.—There is nothing to prevent Congress, when fixing compensation for the carriage of the mails, from directing that the empty mail bags shall be withdrawn from the mails and be transported by freight or express, the effect of which is to reduce the compensation for carrying the mails by excluding the weight of the empty bags in determining the average weight of the mails as the basis of fixing compensation. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. U. S., (1920) 251 U. S. 198, 40 S. Ct. 120, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) — (affirming (1917) 53 Ct. Cl. 45), which further held that Congress, by directing that empty mail bags be withdrawn from the mails and be transported by freight or express, thereby brought such bags when carried by freight on a land-grant-aided railway within the provision of the Land-Grant Acts that all property and troops of the United States shall be transported at the railway company's expense, although by a wholly separate provision it was declared that the mails should be transported over the railway company's lines at such prices as Congress might direct, and the price was later fixed by Congress at 80 per cent of the compensation that would otherwise have been received.

Accepting security from Alaskan banks.—The board of trustees of the Postal Savings System may properly accept from banks organized under the laws of the Territory of Alaska security to insure the safety and prompt payment of postal deposits. (1916) 31 Op. Atty-Gen. 41.

1918 Supp., p. 639, sec. 2.

Rural post roads.—In (1917) 31 Op. Atty-Gen. 109, four classes of roads there specified were considered to be "rural post roads." The opinion read in part as follows:

"The questions submitted for opinion are as to whether certain specified kinds of roads fall within the scope of this definition so that funds appropriated by the act may properly be expended thereon by the Secretary of Agriculture in the manner therein provided.

"The classes of such roads are as follows:

"(1) An existing road, being used in substantial part only for transporting the mails, but in respect to which the facts warrant a finding by the Secretary of Agriculture that, if the aid requested be granted, there is a reasonable prospect that, throughout its entire length, it will be used for transporting the mails immediately, or within a reasonable time after being reconstructed or improved.

"(2) An existing road no part of which is being used for transporting the mails, but in respect to which the facts warrant a finding by the Secretary of Agriculture that, if the aid requested be granted, there is a reasonable prospect that, throughout its entire length, it will be used for transporting the mails immediately, or within a reasonable time, after being reconstructed or improved.

"(3) An entirely new road in respect to which the facts warrant a finding by the Secretary of Agriculture that, if the aid requested be granted, there is a reasonable prospect that, throughout its entire length, it will be used for transporting the mails immediately, or within a reasonable time after construction.

"(4) An existing road different sections of which, constituting substantially the whole road, are being used for the transportation of the mails, but which is not used for that purpose throughout its entire length, and in respect to which the facts do not warrant a finding by the Secretary of Agriculture that the unused portions, constituting an unsubstantial part of the whole, will be used for transporting the mails in the near future, but in respect to which the facts warrant a finding by the Secretary of Agriculture that it would be uneconomical to construct the parts used for carrying the mails without at the same time constructing the parts not so used.

"In my opinion all four of these classes of roads are rural post roads within the intent of section 2 of the act of July 11, 1916, and therefore funds appropriated by that act may properly be expended upon any of them."

Power of state to issue bonds.—In Benson v. Olcott, (1920) 95 Ore. 249, 187 Pac. 843, it was held that under the local statutes the state highway commission had no authority to sell bonds to enable the state to meet the offer made by the Shackelford Act.

1918 Supp., p. 648, sec. 5.

Duty of railroads to carry mails.—Prior to the Act of July 28, 1916, railroads—with the exception of certain roads aided by land grants—were not required by law to carry the mails. New York, etc., R. Co. v. U. S., (1919) 251 U. S. 123, 40 S. Ct. 67, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (1918) 53 Ct. Cl. 222.

PUBLIC CONTRACTS

Vol. VIII, p. 365, sec. 3745. [First ed., vol. VI, p. 185.]

Signing oath of disinterestedness and filing return.—In making the return of a contract on behalf of the government, as provided for in the preceding and this section, if the officer who personally makes the contract himself makes the oath of disinterestedness and files the return in the Returns Office of the Department of the Interior (assuming that the officer manually signing the contract is the officer who makes it in the sense of being responsible for its terms) the letter and spirit of the law are satisfied. (1918) 31 Op. Atty-Gen. 336, wherein it was said: "You state that because of the large volume of business transacted by his office, the Chief of Ordnance, by an order dated June 5, 1918, has designated certain officers of the Procurement Division as persons authorized to sign contracts in the name of the head of that division, adding (after the word 'by') their individual signatures. It is assumed that these officers are the persons who actually negotiate the contracts, and on the part of the government are responsible for their terms. You state that the Ordnance Department has taken the position that the oath of disinterestedness required by section 3745, above quoted, is to be made by the officer who in fact signs the contract, and that it is he who should file the copy of the contract in the Returns Office of the Department of the Interior. You transmit to me a memorandum prepared by the Judge Advocate General, in which this position is approved by him, and you ask my opinion with respect thereto. It appears that the Returns Office of the Interior Department objects to this practice upon the ground that as the head of the Procurement Division is named in the contract as the contracting officer, he also should execute an oath of disinterestedness, although in fact he took no part in the making of the contract.

"Answering only the limited question thus presented and answering it only upon the assumption that the officer manually signing the contract is the officer who makes it in the sense of being responsible for its terms, I concur in the opinion of the Judge Advocate General. The oath of disinterestedness should be made by the officer actually concerned in and responsible for the making of the contract, and I do not think the situation is affected by the circumstance that technically the contract is made in the name of the head of the Procurement Division. The form of the oath required by the statute is that the copy sent to the Returns Office is a copy of a contract made by the affiant 'personally.' If the officer who personally makes the contract himself makes the oath and files the return the letter and spirit of the law, it seems to me, are satisfied."

Protection to subcontractors.—Approving U. S. v. Jack, (1900) 124 Mich. 210, 82 N. W. 1049, cited in the original annotation, it was held in Chicago Bonding, etc., Co. v. U. S., (C. C. A. 7th Cir. 1919) 261 Fed. 266, that subcontractors are within the benefits of the statute, and that "this is shown in many cases, notably in Illinois Surety Co. v. U. S., (1916) 240 U. S. 214, 60 U. S. (L. ed.) 609, 36 S. Ct. 321."

II. FORM AND EFFECT OF BOND (p. 381)

Purpose of bond.—To same effect as original annotation, see Salysers v. U. S., (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1919) 257 Fed. 255, 168 C. C. A. 339.

Assignment of claims.—To same effect as original annotation, see Salysers v. U. S., (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1919) 257 Fed. 255, 168 C. C. A. 339.

VI. ACTION ON BOND (p. 384)

Action at law.—An action upon the bond, in the name of the United States, should be at law and not in equity. Illinois Surety Co. v. U. S., (1916) 240 U. S. 214, 36 S. Ct. 321, 60 U. S. (L. ed.) 609, the court saying: "We see no ground upon which the conclusion can be justified that the liability of the surety on its bond is to be determined in equity. The contrary has been the generally accepted, and we think the correct, practice."

But where an action of debt on the bond was brought, and upon the plaintiff's motion the cause was transferred to the chancery side without objection, and after the defendant surety had answered the bill and intervening petitions without raising objection to a trial in chancery, counsel for plaintiff moved to transfer the cause back to the law side, which motion was denied upon objection of the defendant, who also filed a written consent to the cause remaining on the chancery side, and without moving for a transfer to the law side, defendant participated in the trial before the master and then objected to the report on the ground that plaintiff had an adequate remedy at law, defendant's assignment of error based on the overruling of that objection was unavailable on appeal from a judgment against it. Chicago Bonding, etc., Co. v. U. S., (C. C. A. 7th Cir. 1919) 261 Fed. 266, pointing out that "the district court, on one side or the other, had jurisdiction of the subject-matter, and the parties were before it."

Venue of suit by United States in behalf of subcontractor's receiver.—Although in federal jurisprudence a chancery receiver's authority is confined to the jurisdiction in which he was appointed (Booth v. Clark, (1855) 17 How. 322, 15 U. S. (L. ed.) 164) a suit by the United States against the surety on a contractor's bond was maintainable in a federal court in Illinois for the use of a receiver of a subcontractor appointed in Pennsylvania. Chicago Bonding, etc., Co. v. U. S., (C. C. A. 7th Cir. 1919) 261 Fed. 266.

Parties—Necessity of claimants joining in one action.—Under the provisions of this section, as amended by the Act of February 24, 1905, ch. 778, all claimants against a public contractor must join in one action against him and his sureties. Miller v. American Bonding Co., (C. C. A. 3d Cir. 1920) 262 Fed. 103. Regarding the effect of such amendatory act, the court said: "It is clear from this amendment that Congress did not change the liability of sureties or withdraw from claimants their remedy on bonds for the construction of public works, previously provided by the Act of 1894; but changed simply the manner, and also the time, in which their remedy against sureties should be asserted. To overcome the inequalities and infirmities of the original statute, Congress intended, after the claims of the United States had been satisfied, to unite all claimants in a single proceeding, A. Bryant Co. v. N. Y. Steam Fitting Co., 235 U. S. 327, 337, 35 Sup. Ct. 108, 59 L. Ed. 253, to the end that all matters in controversy between all claimants and the surety, as well as between the claimants themselves, arising out of the obligations of the bond, should be litigated in one action, resulting in one recovery, in which, on the bond proving inadequate, distribution should be pro rata of the amount recovered.

"This was, without doubt, the general intent of Congress. Whether there is any exception to it, we are not called upon to decide, because, in this case, none was claimed. If Miller was entitled to a separate trial by a jury of his own selection, or if he had a right to decline to submit his claim for trial with his co-interveners, it could only have been because of some matter or circumstance addressed to the judgment or discretion of the trial judge, taking him out of the general provisions of the statute and placing him within some exception of the statute. No such matter or circumstance was claimed by Miller. He did not even move for a continuance of the case. As shown in the opinion of the learned trial judge, what Miller did was this;—being represented by counsel in court 'when the case was called for trial, after issue joined and the usual publication of the list, [he] refused and neglected to submit his claim for adjudication without apparent reason or excuse.'

"Miller's action against this surety is not based on any right of action involving a common law right of trial by jury. It is based solely on the new right of action created by the statute 'upon the terms named.' Texas Cement Co. v. McCord, 233 U. S. 157, 34 Sup. Ct. 550, 58 L. Ed. 893; Illinois Surety Co. v. Peeler, 240 U. S. 214, 217, 36 Sup. Ct. 321, 60 L. Ed. 609. These terms provide for one action for all claimants, after the United States has been satisfied, and one recovery for all, under which distribution is made on the claims proved according as the security is adequate or inadequate. In this scheme of the statute, the necessary implication is, that there shall be one trial of the 'one action.' By refusing to submit his claim to trial in the manner and at the time afforded by the statute, without offering to the trial judge any reason or excuse which might have removed him beyond its general terms—as to the possibility of which we express no opinion—Miller waived the right of action which the statute gave him.”

Contractor's trustee in bankruptcy as party.—In a suit by the United States against the surety on a contractor's bond, the objection cannot be first made on appeal that the contractor's trustee in bankruptcy was not made a party. Chicago Bonding, etc., Co. v. U. S., (C. C. A. 7th Cir. 1919) 261 Fed. 266.

Time of bringing suit on bond.—To same effect as original annotation, see Salysers v. U. S., (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1919) 257 Fed. 255, 168 C. C. A. 339.

Pleading—Allegations in complaint.—An allegation in a petition that work on a building was completed and the building accepted by the United States on or about a certain date, is a sufficient allegation of the fact that there had been final settlement between the United States and the contractor as required by this section, especially where the defendant in answer to an intervening petition admitted that settlement was made on the date alleged. Salysers v. U. S., (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1919) 257 Fed. 255, 168 C. C. A. 339.

Evidence.—In Chicago Bonding, etc., Co. v. U. S., (C. C. A. 7th Cir. 1919) 261 Fed. 266, the court, in affirming judgment against the surety on a contractor's bond in a suit by the United States for the benefit of sub-contractor claimants, said: “Appellant's final urge for reversal is that plaintiff introduced no evidence of the fair cash market value of the labor and materials furnished by the claimants. But Shields had covered the matter of price by contracts. Prima facie the contract price was the fair cash market value. Foster v. Swaback, 58 Ill. App. 581. Appellant made no attempt to show that Shields and the claimants had collusively or otherwise agreed upon more than the true market value.”

Recovery—Pro-rating interest on judgments.—Where materialmen recover judgments against the sureties on the bond of a public contractor, interest collected by them on such judgments should not be regarded as part of the trust fund, in the event of an equitable pro-rating of the amount of the recoveries on their claims and on a claim held by the United States. U. S. v. Morris, (D. C. Colo. 1918) 262 Fed. 514.

1919 Supp., p. 304, sec. 1.

Contracts containing no authority for allowance for overproduction.—Claims arising under contracts which contain no authority for allowance for overproduction, and which therefore cannot be allowed under such contracts, must be dealt with under this Act, providing relief in cases of contracts connected with the prosecution of the war. (1919) 31 Op. Atty-Gen. 537.

1919 Supp., p. 306, sec. 5.

Claim for adjustment based upon general appeal or solicitation as entitled to recognition.—The provision in this section which authorizes the adjustment of losses incurred in “producing or preparing to produce either manganese, chrome, pyrites, or tungsten in compliance with the request or demand” of certain designated governmental agencies, does not authorize the recognition of a claim based upon a general solicitation or appeal, but to come within the purview of this provision the claimant must have been asked specifically by one of these governmental agencies to produce or prepare to produce one or more of the named minerals. The words “request or demand” as used in the section are synonymous with the word “ask.” (1919) 31 Op. Atty-Gen. 496.

PUBLIC DEBT

1918 Supp., p. 677, sec. 6.

Exemption from taxation of corporation.—A corporation owning liberty bonds issued under this act is not to that extent exempt from excise taxes, franchise taxes, and other corporation taxes of the federal and state governments when such taxes are laid upon the value of the exercise of corporate privileges. (1917) 31 Op. Atty-Gen. 125, wherein the Attorney General said:

“I assume that in speaking of ‘excise taxes, franchise taxes, and other corporation taxes’ you refer to those taxes which are laid, not upon the property of a corporation by reason of possession or ownership, but upon the value of the exercise of corporate privileges—a value which may be measured by the size of its annual income, the amount of its capital stock, or such other standard of measurement as the taxing power may select.

“Such a tax, for instance, was the special excise tax upon corporations under the act of August 5, 1909, 36 Stat. 11, 112, discussed by the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of Flint v. Stone Tracy Company, 220 U. S. 107, in which the court said:

“It is therefore well settled by the decisions of this court that when the sovereign authority has exercised the right to tax a legitimate subject of taxation as an exercise of a franchise or privilege, it is no objection that the measure of taxation is found in the income produced in part from property which of itself considered is nontaxable.

Applying that doctrine to this case, the measure of taxation being the income of the corporation from all sources, as that is but the measure of a privilege tax within the lawful authority of Congress to impose, it is no valid objection that this measure includes, in part at least, property which as such could not be directly taxed' (p. 165).

"The special excise tax levied upon corporations by the act of September 8, 1916, 39 Stat. 756, 789, and measured by the fair value of their capital stock, is a tax of the same general character, imposed with respect to the carrying on or doing business by such corporations, and the rule laid down in the case of Flint v. Stone Tracy Company applies equally to it."

Exemption from taxation of stockholder.—In (1917) 31 Op. Atty.-Gen. 125, it was decided that liberty loan bonds, issued under this act, were subject to income tax when received by a stockholder of a corporation in payment of a corporate dividend. The reasoning of the Attorney General was as follows: "Like every exemption from taxation, this provision must be literally construed and cannot be extended beyond its precise terms. It protects an owner of these bonds from any tax of whatever character, except estate or inheritance taxes levied upon them by reason of his possession and ownership; but a tax levied upon one's net income or annual gain cannot be evaded because the income or gain happens to be liquidated by the delivery of a certain number of these bonds or other non-taxable securities. Such a tax is upon the income itself as an entirety and not upon the specific articles into which this income is finally transmuted. When these bonds, therefore, are used as a medium of payment, whether in the discharge of a private debt or a corporate dividend, the profit or gain to the recipient is nevertheless subject to income tax."

1918 Supp., p. 685, sec. 9.

Authority of Postmaster General.—In (1918) 31 Op. Atty.-Gen. 234, the Attorney General declined compliance with the request of the Postmaster General for an opinion as to the validity of articles 9 and 10 of the Treasury Regulations, relating to the redemption of war saving certificates and stamps of deceased owners, because the question was not one arising in the administration of the Post Office Department. It was said that the payment or redemption of these certificates and stamps by postmasters or employees of the Post Office Department, if arranged by comity, must be in accordance with the regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury.

PUBLIC LANDS

III. Conclusiveness of decision of land department.

IV. Supervisory authority of Secretary of Interior.

III. CONCLUSIVENESS OF DECISION OF LAND DEPARTMENT (p. 493)

In general.—To same effect as original annotation, see Williams v. Newman, (D. C. Ore. 1919) 257 Fed. 353; Ragan v. Sheffield, (D. C. Ore. 1919) 257 Fed. 358.

Extent of judicial review.—"The rule is well settled that the courts cannot exercise direct jurisdiction over the rulings of the officers of the Land Department of the United States, nor are the courts authorized to reverse or correct such rulings in collateral proceedings between private parties, but that the decisions of the Land Department are subject to review by the courts only where it appears that the Land Department has committed an error of law and denied to the parties the rights to which they are entitled under the Constitution and the laws of the United States. Under such circumstances the courts can in a proper proceeding interfere and refuse to give effect to the action of the Land Department." McLaren v. Fleischer, (Cal. 1919) 185 Pac. 967.

IV. SUPERVISORY AUTHORITY OF SECRETARY OF INTERIOR (p. 494)

Suspension of action in Land Department proceedings.—Under this section and R. S. secs. 441 (3 Fed. Stat. Ann. (2d ed.) 947) and 2478 (8 Fed. Stat. Ann. (2d ed.) 862), the Secretary of the Interior has authority to suspend action in proceedings before the Land Department, in the interest of a just administration of the public lands, with a view to inquiring into any question of fraud attending the acquirement of such lands by private persons. Williams v. Newman, (D. C. Ore. 1919) 257 Fed. 353.

Vol. VIII, p. 527, sec. 1. [First ed., 1909 Supp., p. 549.]

"Fraud" as including what.—The prior execution and delivery by a coal land entryman to a third party of a warranty deed for an undivided one-half interest in the land for which he filed an application to purchase under the statutes applicable to coal lands on the public domain, when not disclosed by the entryman's application, constitutes a fraud within the meaning of this act, and a recovery of the purchase price cannot be maintained either under this act or the act of June 16, 1880, 21 Stat. 287 (see vol. VIII, p. 602). Frackelton v. U. S., (1919) 54 Ct. Cl. 152.

SEC. 2262. [Oath of pre-emptionist, where filed, penalty.]

This section has been construed in the following case: U. S. v. Valley Land, etc., Co., (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1919) 258 Fed. 93, 169 C. C. A. 179.

Vol. VIII, p. 543, sec. 2289. [First ed., vol. VI, p. 285.]

III. Lands subject to homestead entry.

2. Lands not open to entry.

V. Rights of entryman.

III. LANDS SUBJECT TO HOMESTEAD ENTRY

2. Lands Not Open to Entry (p. 549)

Lands withdrawn.—Application for leave to enter made at a time when the land is withdrawn from entry gives no preferential right to the land after a revocation of the withdrawal. Donley v. West, (Cal. App. 1920) 189 Pac. 1052.

V. RIGHTS OF ENTRYMAN (p. 551)

Right to fence.—An entryman may, as against an adjoining owner, fence the land though it is not surveyed. Callison v. Ronstadt, (Ariz. 1920) 188 Pac. 266.

Vol. VIII, p. 555, sec. 2290. [First ed., vol. VI, p. 290.]

Rights acquired by compliance with section.—"The applicant has put himself in privity with the government when he has done all he could do in the matter. He is then in a position to compel the officials to do their duty toward him, and to assert his right against others claiming a similar right from the government." McLaren v. Fleischer, (Cal. 1919) 185 Pac. 967.

Validity of contract—Pleading.—The contention that an agreement by an entryman to devise the property to another is void under this section is waived by failure to plead it, an averment that the contract was "against public policy and wholly illegal and void" being insufficient. Osborn v. Hoyt, (Cal. 1919) 184 Pac. 854, wherein it did not appear that the patent subsequently obtained by the promisor was issued under the homestead law.

VI. Patent.

VII. Decease of entryman.

VI. PATENT (p. 566)

Conclusiveness of departmental ruling.—An ex parte ruling of the Land Department that a patent should issue to the heir of a deceased homestead entryman is not binding on a court of equity which may decree title to be in the devisee of the entryman. Mortgage, etc., Co. v. Rhodes, (1919) 75 Okla. 298, 183 Pac. 481.

VII. DECEASE OF ENTRYMAN (p. 568)

Heirs.—Where a deceased entryman has died before final proof, and one of his heirs, claiming as a sole devisee of the land, has made final proof in behalf of the heirs, and a United States patent has issued to the heirs of the deceased entryman, such heirs take title to the land under the patent as cotenants, and as special purchasers or donees, and not by reason of any right or interest in the estate of the deceased. Stoll v. Gottbrecht, (N. D. 1920) 176 N. W. 932.

Right to devise homestead.—Where a homestead entryman complies fully with the homestead laws of the United States, but dies before making final proof, he is entitled to dispose of his homestead by will. Mortgage, etc., Co. v. Rhodes, (1919) 75 Okla. 298, 183 Pac. 481.

Scope of section.—This section is applicable to the enlarged homestead allowed by the Act of Feb. 19, 1909 (8 Fed. St. Ann. [2d ed.] p. 613). Shelby First State Bank v. Bottineau County Bank, (1919) 56 Mont. 363, 185 Pac. 162, 8 A. L. R. 631.

Nature of right granted.—"Section 2296, United States Revised Statutes, is not, strictly speaking, an exemption statute. It was not enacted pursuant to the police powers of the government, but in virtue of the power conferred upon the Congress to dispose of the public lands. The non-liability declared by that section is one of the conditions attached to the grant as an additional inducement to secure settlement of the public domain." Shelby First State Bank v. Bottineau County Bank, (1919) 56 Mont. 363, 185 Pac. 162, 8 A. L. R. 631.

Exempt in hands of transferee.—Property acquired under the homestead law and transferred by the patentee to his wife is, while so held by her, exempt from execution on a judgment for a debt incurred by the husband before the issuance of the patent. Turner v. Talmadge, (Cal. App. 1919) 187 Pac. 969, wherein the court said:

"The debt out of which the execution and sale arose was a debt of the husband, Essie Turner. It was admittedly a debt for necessities furnished to him and for which he, and not his wife, was liable. Section 171, Civil Code, relied upon by appellants, recognizes such debt as the debt of the husband, and does not make the wife personally liable therefor, but merely provides that, when the husband's property has been transferred to the wife without consideration, this property may be regarded as the property of the husband for the purpose of satisfying any debts of his incurred for necessities furnished to both the husband and wife while living together. The effect of this section is to regard such property as though it had not been transferred. In the present case, if the property is so regarded, it is not liable for the husband's debt contracted before patent issued to the land. Barnard v. Boller, 105 Cal. 214, 38 Pac. 728; Miller v. Little, 47 Cal. 348. Such land is also protected in the hands of a purchaser from execution upon debts of the patentee which could not have been enforced against it while the title remained in the patentee."

Vol. VIII, p. 591, sec. 2307. [First ed., vol. VI, p. 327.]

Persons entitled to benefits of Act.—"Under section 2307, Revised Statutes of United States, only the 'minor orphan children' of the soldier, acting 'by a guardian duly appointed and officially accredited at the Department of the Interior,' were entitled to the benefit of the chapter. As was well said by Hon. Clay Tillman, in Circular No. 528 from the Department of the Interior, of date February 15, 1917:

"It was never in the mind of Congress that these rights should pass beyond the limits indicated in the sections. Out of gratitude to the soldier, Congress desired to confer upon him personally a material benefit; if he died before gaining that benefit, upon those dependent upon him—his widow, or his minor children; not upon adult children, not upon collateral heirs, and certainly not, in the absence of any heir, upon some state or foreign government.'" Hensen v. Merton, (Mont. 1920) 187 Pac. 1017.

What must be shown to claim homestead.—A person suing to compel the granting of an application for a homestead under this Act must allege and show that the soldier by reason of whose service the claim is made was in all respects within the provisions of section 2306 and that the persons claiming are entitled to take by reason of his service. Hensen v. Merton, (Mont. 1920) 187 Pac. 1017.

One who claims rights under this section as a surviving minor child of a soldier must establish his identity. Conklin v. Lane, (App. Cas. D. C. 1919) 258 Fed. 522.

Effect of departmental decisions.—In Conklin v. Lane, (App. Cas. D. C. 1919) 258 Fed. 522, it appeared that the plaintiff claimed to be entitled to a patent as a grantee, through mesne conveyances, of a child of a soldier, alleging that the relationship of his grantor to the soldier was shown by the records of the Interior Department. It further appeared that such allegation was based upon a decision of the department in the case denying that any rights accrued under this section because no application for a patent was made until thirty years after the soldier's death, at which time he could have had no minor children. The Secretary of the Interior denied the allegations of the plaintiff's bill, stating in his answer that the records of the department were not sufficient to establish the essential facts. It was held that the plaintiff, by relying solely upon what was before the Department, was left with unsupported allegations, traversed by the Secretary's answer, and that since he had failed to establish the material facts, his bill should be dismissed.

Vol. VIII, p. 597, sec. 1. [Relinquishment of claim, etc.] [First ed., vol. VI, p. 300.]

Who may relinquish.—The grantee of an entryman has the same right of relinquishment as his grantor. Neis v. Ebbe, (Ore. 1920) 189 Pac. 417.

Effect of relinquishment.—One who has, as grantee of an entryman, relinquished the entry, has no standing to question the refusal of the Land Department to permit an entry by another person. Neis v. Ebbe, (Ore. 1920) 189 Pac. 417.

Vol. VIII, p. 598, sec. 2. [First ed., vol. VI, p. 300.]

Right acquired by contestant.—A successful contestant acquires under this section only the preferential right to enter within thirty days. He gets no vested right in the land itself. Accordingly, the General Land Office may between the date of contest and the date of entry change the rules relating to the manner of acquiring government lands or increase the price to be paid. Brown v. Baker, (1919) 108 Wash. 161, 183 Pac. 89.

When thirty days begins to run.—The thirty days during which a successful contestant has a preferential right of entry does not begin to run against him until the time of the restoration of the land to public entry. McLaren v. Fleischer, (Cal. 1919) 185 Pac. 967. See to the same effect Culpepper v. Ocheltree, (Cal. 1919) 185 Pac. 971.

Vol. VIII, p. 611, sec. 1. [First ed., vol. X, p. 360.]

Dummy entries.—In Eldred v. U. S., (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1919) 257 Fed. 58, 168 C. C. A. 270, it was held that entries made by old soldiers under the provisions of this Act would be cancelled, where it appeared that they were dummy entries, made at the instance of a nearby landowner who paid the expenses of the entrymen and purchased their homesteads from them as soon as they received their patents.

Relation to previous acts.—The act is not independent but is to be construed as a part of the original homestead laws. "If the Enlarged Homestead Act was intended as an amendment to the prior homestead laws, then the acts are to be construed as one—as originally in the amended form. The history of this act is fairly conclusive that it was never intended to be construed otherwise than as a part of the original homestead law as it was then in force. Without quoting from the committee reports or the debates in the Congress, we think it is apparent from them that it was the intention of the lawmakers by this act to supplement the existing statutes—to improve the homestead laws and encourage the settlement of the vast areas of public lands in the semiarid regions, by increasing the amount of land subject to entry, so that the homesteader in 1909, and thereafter, might acquire land approaching in value that of the more fortunate entryman who secured land which could be irrigated at reasonable cost, or land which could be cultivated successfully without irrigation, and which would produce a crop every year." Shelby First State Bank v. Bottineau County Bank, (1919) 56 Mont. 363, 185 Pac. 162, 8 A. L. R. 631.

Exemption.—The enlarged homestead allowed by the act is exempt from liability for debts contracted prior to the date of the patent. Shelby First State Bank v. Bottineau County Bank, (1919) 56 Mont. 363, 185 Pac. 162, 8 A. L. R. 631.

Vol. VIII, p. 657, sec. 1. [First ed., 1912 Supp., p. 321.]

Withdrawal for inclusion in national forest.—A temporary withdrawal from entry of certain public lands in order to include them within a national forest, is within the general purposes contemplated by the statute. Byron v. U. S., (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1919) 259 Fed. 371, 170 C. C. A. 347.

Purpose and construction generally.—In U. S. v. Rock Oil Co., (S. D. Cal. 1919) 257 Fed. 331, it was said:

"This law is the first legislative recognition by Congress of a statutory right in an occupant of public oil lands prior to discovery. It was manifestly intended to and does expressly give to those coming within its provisions a legal status and a right to continue work of discovery with the attendant consequences. It is a remedial statute and should be liberally construed to effect its purpose (Consol. Mut. Oil Co. v. U. S., 245 Fed. 521, 157 C. C. A. 633), which was to protect bona fide occupants of public oil or gas lands who in good faith were, at the date of a withdrawal, engaged in work leading to discovery, by giving them the right to continue their work to a discovery, and thereafter to extract and market the oil, and to acquire title notwithstanding the withdrawal; and in my judgment it is of no consequence from whom such occupants obtained possession, if, as appears in this case, they were at the date of withdrawal claiming in their own right no more land than they would be entitled to take under the mining laws, and were acting in good faith and with an honest purpose to comply with the law."

Rights of locators of mineral lands.—"The so-called locator of mineral lands has no legal status or right to the property against the government, prior to discovery, except such as is given by the Pickett Act. His right, if any, is a mere possessory one, protected and recognized, it is true, against forcible or clandestine entry by a third person, while he is in good faith making a discovery, although open to the entry of others by legal means for the purpose of location. . . . When, however, he relinquishes or transfers his possession to another before discovery, the land thereupon becomes subject to location by that other, if he is qualified to make a location." U. S. v. Rock Oil Co., (S. D. Cal. 1919) 257 Fed. 331.

Withdrawals in aid of pending legislation.—Withdrawals of public lands may be made in aid of pending legislation looking to the inclusion of such lands within existing national forests in those states in which there is a prohibition against the creation of national forests or making additions to existing national forests, except by act of Congress. (1916) 31 Op. Atty-Gen. 53.

Water rights as between settler and appropriator.—"Under the Desert Land Act, Congress has divorced the water from the public domain through which it flows, and as to all surplus water over and above what the settler may divert upon his land, for a useful purpose within the purview of the statute, has declared that it 'shall remain and be free for the appropriation and use of the public for irrigation, mining and manufacturing purposes, subject to existing rights.' The conclusion suggested is that as to all land claimed by settler after the passage of the Desert Land Act he takes it thus separated from the waters flowing thereon, so that any one thereafter who first appropriates the water will take it independent of his rights thereto, beyond his mere domestic use. This, however, does not give any one a right to go upon the lands of the settler without his permission, to divert the waters flowing through the same. Although the water is subject to appropriation, the right to appropriate must be exercised without trespass upon the land of another. The water may be running on its natural course and subject to appropriation, but no one can enjoin this bounty of the government unless he can get to the water. He may avail himself of the permission of the government to approach the stream on its land. He may secure by purchase or gift the consent of private owners to gain access over their lands, and by adverse possession for the statutory prescriptive period he may maintain his appropriation as against private owners over whose lands he has conducted the waters." Allen v. Magill, (Ore. 1920) 189 Pac. 986.

Contest—Sufficiency of affidavit.—The insufficiency of the affidavit in support of a contest does not invalidate an order of the Land Department in favor of the contestant. Sanders v. Dutcher, (Cal. App. 1920) 187 Pac. 51.

Conclusiveness of decision of Land Department.—A decision of the Land Department on a question of fact in determining the right of any person with respect to lands claimed under the Desert Lands Act is conclusive in all other tribunals in the absence of fraud, mistake or imposition. Sanders v. Dutcher, (Cal. App. 1920) 187 Pac. 51.

Vol. VIII, p. 699, sec. 4. [Patents for reclaimed lands, etc.] [First ed., vol. VI, p. 397.]

Purpose of Act.—"The primary purpose of the Carey Act was, not to enable the government to divest itself of title to its desert lands, but to secure their irrigation and reclamation; reclamation is the only consideration for the donation or grant, and is a condition precedent to the exercise of the power to grant. The authority conferred upon the Secretary of the Interior to convey is expressly limited to desert lands, which the state shall have caused to be 'irrigated, reclaimed, occupied, and not less than twenty acres of each hundred and sixty acre tract cultivated by actual settlers . . . as thoroughly as is required of citizens who may enter under the [said] desert land law.'" Twin Falls Salmon River Land, etc., Co. v. Alexander, (D. C. Idaho 1919) 260 Fed. 270.

Suit to restrain cancellation of irrigation agreement—Jurisdiction of federal courts.—A suit by an irrigation company against certain state officers, constituting the state board land commissioners, to compel them to accept an irrigation system, constructed pursuant to a contract with the company under this Act, and to enjoin them from cancelling the contract or impairing the company's lien on the lands embraced in the project, is one against a state within the meaning of Const. Amend. 11 and not within the jurisdiction of a federal court. Twin Falls Salmon River Land, etc., Co. v. Alexander, (D. C. Idaho 1919) 260 Fed. 270.

Vol. VIII, p. 700, sec. 1. [First ed., vol. VI, p. 398.]

Extent of lien.—Under the Idaho law enacted by authority of this section the lien for materials furnished to construct an irrigation system "is not on moneys to be derived from the sale of water rights, but is on such right, title, claim, and interest in the system as the irrigation company had at the time the lien attached." Pacific Coast Pipe Co. v. Blaine County Irrigation Co., (1920) 32 Idaho 705, 187 Pac. 940.

III. LANDS SUBJECT TO GRANT (p. 712)

Beds of navigable streams, lakes, etc., within the tidewaters of the sea do not come within the operation of the Swamp Land Acts. State v. Capdeville, (1919) 146 La. 94, 83 So. 421.

Vol. VIII, p. 732. [Note.] [First ed., vol. VI, p. 456.]

Selection of lieu lands optional.—A person who by mistake settles on an odd numbered section, to which the Northern Pacific Railroad Company is entitled under the Act of July 2, 1864 (13 Stat. 365, c. 217) is not entitled to compel the company to select lieu lands, the right thereto given by the Northern Pacific Adjustment Act of July 1, 1898 (30 Stat. L. 620, c. 546) being optional with the company. Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Mueller, (1919) 108 Wash. 684, 185 Pac. 630.

When title vests.—The title to land selected under this statute does not vest in a state by a mere selection of the land. Such selection is ineffectual until approved by the Commissioner of the General Land Office. Accordingly, where a state, after selecting land, leases it to a private person, and before approval by the commissioner it is withdrawn from entry as being oil land, the state acquires no estate therein as against the government, and the latter may maintain an action against the lessee for trespass. U. S. v. Ridgely, (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1920) 262 Fed. 675.

Lieu lands—Departmental interpretation of Act.—"Since the passage of the act of 1891, so amending sections 2275 and 2276 of the Revised Statutes, the officials of the General Land Office and the Department of the Interior of the federal government, having in charge the administration and disposition of its public lands, have at all times uniformly ruled and held that the states, including the state of Washington, having school land grants of sections 16 and 36, in the several townships therein, were not vested with the title to such sections embraced within the boundaries of reservations, including forest reservations, established prior to the survey of such sections; but that as to such sections the state's rights consisted of nothing more than the right to select from public lands subject to disposition lands in lieu thereof, or await the extinguishment of such reservations, and the survey of such sections within their boundaries. The officials of the General Land Office and Department of the Interior of the federal government have also, since the passage of the act of 1891, uniformly ruled and held to the same effect with reference to the rights of pre-emption and homestead claimants making settlement upon unsurveyed sections 16 and 36. Among numerous decisions of these departments of the federal government so ruling and holding, we note the following: State of Washington v. Kuhn, 24 L. D. 12; State of South Dakota v. Riley, 34 L. D. 657; State of South Dakota v. Thomas, 36 L. D. 171; In re State of Montana, 38 L. D. 247." Thompson v. Savidge, (Wash. 1920) 188 Pac. 397, upholding the doctrine thus laid down by the Land Department.

Authority of state to relinquish school lands.—The state of Oregon has power to relinquish school lands previously granted to it by Congress and accept lieu lands under this Act, the title to the school lands not having vested in present. Thompson v. Savidge, (Wash. 1920) 188 Pac. 397.

Vol. VIII, p. 768, sec. 2276. [First ed., vol. VI, p. 464.]

School lands included in forest reservation.—Where a state files a lieu land selection because of the inclusion of school lands, previously granted to it, in a forest reservation, such selection constitutes a waiver under R. S. sec. 2275 (8 Fed. Stat. Ann. (2d ed.) 765) of its title to the base land. The rights of the parties thereupon become fixed and the Interior Department has no authority to withhold its approval of the selection because of the fact that subsequent to the filing of the lieu land selection, the boundaries of the national forest reservation were changed so that the base land in question was not embraced therein. Lane v. New Mexico, (App. Cas. D. C. 1919) 258 Fed. 980.

Lands subject to grant under Act of July 1, 1862.—Congress could and did, by the Act of July 1, 1862, granting a railway right of way over the public lands, include lands forming a part of the Pottawatomie Indian Reservation not actually allotted in severalty when the grant took effect, notwithstanding the agreement on the part of the United States in the Treaty of June 5 and 17, 1846, to grant to such Indians possession and title to a specified district, and to guarantee full and complete possession thereof as their land and home forever, and of the stipulation in the Treaty of November 5, 1861, that land within the reservation designated in the earlier treaty should be allotted thereafter in severalty to tribe members. Nadeau v. Union Pac. R. Co., (1920) 253 U. S. 442, 40 S. Ct. 570, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —.

Vol. VIII, p. 803, sec. 18. [First ed., vol. VI, p. 508.]

Scope of section.—This section does not confer a right independently of the provisions of section 19 of this Act. The two sections are obviously to be construed together. Union Land, etc., Co. v. U. S., (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1919) 257 Fed. 635, 168 C. C. A. 585.

Forfeiture for noncompletion.—In Union Land, etc., Co. v. U. S., (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1919) 257 Fed. 635, 168 C. C. A. 585, the United States brought a suit in equity to declare forfeited a right of way and easement for the storage of water previously granted to the defendant under this Act. In affirming a decree in favor of the United States, the court said regarding the forfeiture clause of this section:

"It is not to be supposed, we think, that Congress intended that the United States should have no remedy for the failure of an applicant to complete his canal, ditch, or reservoir within the time limited, unless Congress intervened and by a special act either declared the right forfeited or gave express authority to institute a suit to recover the land.

"In United States v. Whitney (C. C.) 176 Fed. 593, Judge Dietrich, in construing the law which is involved here, held that a failure to comply with the requirements of the statute of itself operated to divest the grantee of title and revert it in the government, and that a declaration of forfeiture might be either by act of Congress or by an appropriate judicial proceeding. With that view we agree, and although, aside from the two cases cited, we find no decision directly involving the question here presented, we think the decisions of the Supreme Court, as reviewed in Spokane, etc., Ry. v. Wash. & Gt. Nor. Ry., 219 U. S. 166, 174, 31 Sup. Ct. 182, 184, (65 L. Ed. 159), which establish the doctrine that, where the conditions of the grant are subsequent, 'the title cannot be forfeited, except upon proper proceedings by the government, judicial in their character, or an act of Congress competent for that purpose,' are sufficient in their scope to justify the suit here brought at the instance of the Attorney General, which is a proper proceeding by the government, judicial in its character, and appropriate for the purpose of declaring a forfeiture."

"Pending contest or protest."—A proceeding instituted by the Secretary of the Interior to investigate charges of fraud in making an entry and to cancel the entry if the charges are sustained, is sufficient to prevent the issuance of a patent to the grantee of the entryman. Neis v. Ebee, (Ore. 1920) 189 Pac. 417.

What constitutes "contest" within proviso.—"Just what constitutes a 'pending contest or protest' has been the subject of considerable controversy in the Interior Department. In the case of Jacob A. Harris, 42 L. D. 611, the Secretary, reviewing at length the departmental decisions bearing upon the above proviso, defined its object as follows:

"Upon mature consideration, the department is convinced that a contest or protest, to defeat the confirmatory effect of the proviso, must be a proceeding sufficient in itself to place the entryman on his defense or to require of him a showing of material fact when served with notice thereof."

"This language was quoted with approval in Hoglund v. Lane, 44 App. D. C. 310, 314, and on appeal in Lane v. Hoglund, 244 U. S. 174, 180, 37 Sup. Ct. 558, 61 L. Ed. 1066.

"Applying this rule to the present case, we find that at the expiration of two years from the issuance of the final receipt—September 1, 1909—there was pending one protest and two contests which had been reduced to four specific charges. It is not important that the case thus formulated had resolved itself into a protest by the government, rather than a contest or protest between individual claimants, or that the case was not brought to trial until more than two months after the expiration of the two-year limitation, since the case upon which the government relied, and to which McDonald finally responded by answer and defense, was in fact pending at the expiration of the two-year period. Not only did McDonald have notice of the protest and contests, but he had appeared and sought their dismissal. He also had notice of the proceedings which resulted in the reduction of the protest and contests into a concrete case, which, as we have observed, was pending at the expiration of the two-year period, and which was tried shortly thereafter. In these proceedings the limitation of the statute was not invoked by the contestee. Clearly the bar of the statute has no application to the present case." U. S. v. Lane, (App. Cas. D. C. 1920) 263 Fed. 630.

The issuance of a receiver's receipt upon final entry is a condition precedent to the application of the proviso of this section. Williams v. Newman, (D. C. Ore. 1919) 267 Fed. 353.

PUBLIC OFFICERS AND EMPLOYEES

Vol. VIII, p. 953. [Suits against public officers.] [First ed., vol. VI, p. 614.]

Mandamus proceedings against the Secretary of the Treasury abated when, that officer having resigned his office, his successor was not substituted as defendant within twelve months, which is the limit for substitution afforded by this Act, and the fact that the District of Columbia Code, § 1278, allows the petitioner to recover damages in the same proceeding does not justify the retention of the petition to charge the Secretary personally, since the damages are only incident to the allowance of the writ. Le Crone v. McAdoo, (1920) 253 U. S. 217, 40 S. Ct. 510, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, dismissing writ of error to review (1918) 48 App. Cas. (D. C.) 181.

Appointment of field representative of Geological Survey at salary of one dollar a year held a violation of this section, it appearing that he was secretary of the Southwest Coal Bureau, a salaried office. (1919) 31 Op. Atty-Gen. 470.

1919 Supp., p. 323, sec. 1.

Employees within section.—This section is not limited to former employees of the War Department, but applies alike to former employees in any department of the government. It applies to former employees who entered the naval service or the marine corps as well as to those who entered the army. It includes all who were either drafted or who enlisted as privates, although they may have subsequently been commissioned as officers, and it also includes those who enlisted for the purpose of entering the officers' training camps and who were afterward commissioned, but it does not include those who were commissioned from civil life and without having previously enlisted for any purpose. It applies only to those who were drafted while in the employ of the government or who left government employment for the purpose of enlisting. (1919) 31 Op. Atty.-Gen. 452.

This section does not apply to persons who were commissioned from civil life, without having previously enlisted for any purpose. It requires the restoration of every former government employee to the civil service status he occupied before he entered the military service, but if the position the employee left was only a temporary one and has actually ceased to exist, his right to reinstatement is lost. It requires that a former government employee be reinstated in his former position if it exists, and this requirement is not satisfied by reinstating in a non-statutory position one who vacated a statutory position, although the rate of pay and civil service designation are the same in both. It does not require that a former government employee be reinstated if services of the character he is able to perform are no longer needed, but if such services are required he must be reinstated, although they are already being satisfactorily performed by another employee. (1919) 31 Op. Atty.-Gen. 454.

Employees holding temporary appointments and having no permanent civil service status are included in this section and upon reinstatement they will occupy the same civil service status that they occupied at the time of entering the military service. (1919) 31 Op. Atty.-Gen. 449.

Two members of family in classified service as bar to reinstatement.—Under this section, a government employee, who was inducted into the military service and who thereafter was honorably discharged from such service, is entitled to be reinstated if he is qualified to perform the duties of his former position, and he is not deprived of his right to reinstatement by the fact that two members of his family are already in the classified service. (1919) 31 Op. Atty.-Gen. 449, where it was said: "The second question arises under the following circumstances:

Lester H. Reese was appointed to the position of messenger boy at $400 per annum in the Pension Office, on August 7, 1908, and was subsequently promoted to the position of messenger at $840 per annum. On August 31, 1918, he was dropped from the rolls of the Department, having been inducted into the military service, and now seeks to be reinstated in his former position. His right to reinstatement under the act of February 25, 1919, would be clear were it not for the fact that his father is now employed as a skilled laborer in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, and his brother is employed as a letter carrier in the Washington, D. C., post office.

"The question arises whether, under these circumstances, his reinstatement would be in violation of section 9 of the Act of January 16, 1883 (22 Stat. 406), which provides that:

"Whenever there are already two or more members of a family in the public service in the grades covered by this act, no other member of such family shall be eligible to appointment to any of said grades."

"This question must be answered in the negative. Section 9 of the Act of January 16, 1883, applies only to an original appointment, not to the reinstatement of a former employee. The appointment of Reese was legal at the time it was made. The Act of February 25, 1919, restored to him the status he occupied in the civil service at the time he entered the armed forces of the United States. That status cannot be affected by the fact that while he was in the military service he became ineligible for an original appointment. He is not deprived of his right to be reinstated in his former position by the fact that two members of his family are already in the public service. Thus construed there is no inconsistency between the Act of January 16, 1883, and the Act of February 25, 1919; but if there were, the former would have to be regarded as repealed to the extent that it conflicts with the latter."

PUBLIC PARKS

Vol. VIII, p. 1017, sec. 2. [First ed., 1909 Supp., p. 53.]

The Grand Canyon of the Colorado could be created as a monument reserve by the President under the power conferred upon him by this act to establish reserves embracing objects of historic or scientific interest. Cameron v. U. S., (1920) 252 U. S. 450, 40 S. Ct. 410, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1918) 250 Fed. 943, 163 C. C. A. 193.

To bring a lode mining claim within the saving clause in the withdrawal of public lands for a monument reserve, under this act, in respect of any "valid" mining claim theretofore acquired, the discovery must have preceded the creation of that reserve. Cameron v. U. S., (1920) 252 U. S. 450, 40 S. Ct. 410, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1918) 250 Fed. 943, 163 C. C. A. 193.

To make a lode mining claim valid, or to invest the locator with a right to possession, it is essential that the lands be mineral in character, and that there be an adequate mineral discovery within the limits of the claim as located. Cameron v. U. S., (1920) 252 U. S. 450, 40 S. Ct. 410, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1918) 250 Fed. 943, 163 C. C. A. 193.

To support a lode mining location the discovery should be such as would justify a person of ordinary prudence in the further expenditure of his time and means in an effort to develop a paying mine. Cameron v. U. S., (1920) 252 U. S. 450, 40 S. Ct. 410, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1918) 250 Fed. 943, 163 C. C. A. 193.

Whether a part of a public reserve covered by an unpatented lode mining claim was mineral, and whether there had been the requisite discovery, were questions of fact the decision of which by the Secretary of the Interior was conclusive on the courts, in the absence of fraud or imposition. Cameron v. U. S., (1920) 252 U. S. 450, 40 S. Ct. 410, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1918) 250 Fed. 943, 163 C. C. A. 193.

The Secretary of the Interior, by virtue of the general powers conferred by U. S. Rev. Stat. §§ 441, 453, 2478, (see vol. 3, p. 947; vol. 8, pp. 491, 862) may determine, after proper notice and upon adequate hearing, whether an asserted lode mining location which has not gone to patent, under which the locator is occupying and using a part of the public reserves, is a valid claim, and, if found to be invalid, may declare it void and recognize the rights of the public. Cameron v. U. S., (1920) 252 U. S. 450, 40 S. Ct. 410, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1918) 250 Fed. 943, 163 C. C. A. 193.

PUBLIC PROPERTY, BUILDINGS AND GROUNDS

Vol. VIII, p. 1073, sec. 1799. [First ed., vol. VI, p. 678.]

Validity of appointment of landscape architect by Secretary of War.—The appointment of a landscape architect in the Office of Public Buildings and Grounds by the Secretary of War instead of by the Chief of Engineers must be deemed to have been unauthorized, in view of this section, which excludes positions in such office from the operation of the general provisions of § 169, (see vol. 2, p. 148) conferring the power of appointment upon the heads of departments. Burnap v. U. S., (1920) 252 U. S. 512, 40 S. Ct. 374, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (1918) 53 Ct. Cl. 605. It was further held, however, that the defect in the appointment of the landscape architect, because made by the Secretary of War instead of by the Chief of Engineers, was cured by the acquiescence of the latter throughout five years, so that the appointee's status was better than that of a mere de facto officer, but it was not superior to what it would have been if he had been regularly appointed by the Chief of Engineers.

Power of Chief Engineer to remove landscape architect appointed by Secretary of War.—The power to remove an official is, in the absence of statutory provision to the contrary, an incident of the power to appoint, and the power of suspension is an incident of the power of removal. Burnap v. U. S., (1920) 252 U. S. 512, 40 S. Ct. 374, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) — (affirming (1918) 53 Ct. Cl. 605), wherein it was held that the fact that a landscape architect in the Office of Public Buildings and Grounds was, by inadvertence, appointed by the Secretary of War instead of by the Chief of Engineers, did not preclude the latter from exercising in respect to such employee the general power to remove employees in his office, conferred by implication in this section. It was further held that if the regulations governing suspension and discharge in the classified civil service, as applied to the Engineer Department at large, approved by the Civil Service Commission and the Secretary of War, do not apply to the position of landscape architect in the Office of Public Buildings and Grounds, the exercise of the right of removal which rests in the Chief of Engineers is governed by the provisions of the Act of August 24, 1912, § 6, (see vol. VIII, p. 956) and Civil Service Rule 12, since no applicable regulations have been prescribed by the President through the War Department, under the authority reserved in R. S. sec. 1797, as amended (see vol. VIII, p. 1072).

Nature of state consent necessary.—A state law reserving to the state concurrent jurisdiction over sites therein acquired by the federal government for public buildings is incompatible with the consent required by this section. (1918) 31 Op. Atty-Gen. 260, wherein it was said: "In 1891 one of my predecessors, having under consideration an act of Congress appropriating money for a public building in Kansas but forbidding its expenditure until 'the state of Kansas shall have ceded to the United States exclusive jurisdiction' with certain exceptions, held that the provision of the Kansas statute 'that the United States shall have the right of exclusive legislation and concurrent jurisdiction together with the state of Kansas,' was not in compliance with the requirements of the act of Congress. (20 Op. 242; cf. 20 Op. 298.) My attention, however, is called to a later opinion (24 Op. 617) dealing with an act of the legislature of Louisiana, the first section of which is nearly identical with the first section of the Kansas act (supra). The second section of the Louisiana statute reads 'that the United States may enter upon and occupy any land which may have been or may be purchased or condemned or otherwise acquired, and shall have the right of exclusive jurisdiction over the property so acquired during the time that the United States shall be or remain the owner thereof for all purposes except the administration of the criminal laws of the state . . .

"It will be observed that the Kansas legislature seeks to qualify the cession by a reservation of 'concurrent jurisdiction.' The Louisiana act reserves to the state 'the administration' of her 'criminal laws.'

"It has been settled that unequivocal 'consent' by the state to the purchase of lands by the United States for purposes within paragraph 17 has the constitutional consequence of transferring 'exclusive jurisdiction.' (Fort Leavenworth Railroad Co. v. Lowe, 114 U. S. 525, 533.) Construing the Louisiana act, Attorney General Knox thought that by the first section consent to purchase or condemnation of lands was plainly and unequivocally given; that there was nothing in the second section or elsewhere to indicate that the reservation of jurisdiction which it contained was made an express condition of the consent. He was therefore of opinion that exclusive jurisdiction over the site in question within the requirements of section 355 had passed to the United States freed from the unacceptable reservation contained in section 2. It was also his opinion that the precedents leading to a contrary conclusion found in 20 Op. 613, 298, 242; 8 Op. 418, 102, should be distinguished.

"I am not disposed to follow this opinion, however; and therefore hold in accordance with the opinion of Attorney General Miller, 20 Op. 242, referred to above, that the reservation by the state in the Kansas law of concurrent jurisdiction over sites within the state acquired by the Federal Government for public buildings is incompatible with the consent required by section 355, Revised Statutes."

In (1918) 31 Op. Atty.-Gen. 263, it was the opinion of the Attorney General following the opinion in the preceding paragraph, that the reservation of the right to punish offenses against state laws committed on lands acquired for federal building sites embraced in a cession act of Minnesota was incompatible with the exercise of the exclusive jurisdiction contemplated by this section. See further (1918) 31 Op. Atty.-Gen. 265, wherein the opinion was expressed that the reservation by the state of Illinois of the right to administer its criminal laws upon the lands acquired by the United States for federal building sites did not comply with the requirements of this section. But that the reservation of the right to serve and execute state process on territory ceded to the United States was permissible and not inconsistent with the exclusive federal authority required by this section. See still further on this subject (1918) 31 Op. Atty.-Gen. 282; (1918) 31 Op. Atty.-Gen. 294.

Caterpillar tractors, dies and gauges.—In (1919) 31 Op. Atty.-Gen. 457, it was the opinion of the Attorney General that as part of the consideration for the purchase of certain war material acquired by the government since April 6, 1917, the Secretary of War was authorized, when in his discretion it would be for the public good, to lease for commercial purposes, for a period not exceeding five years and revocable at any time, caterpillar tractors, dies, and gauges belonging to the United States, under the provisions of this act.

VIII. Action by injured employee.

I. INTRODUCTORY

4. State Laws (p. 1157)

To same effect as first paragraph of original annotation, see Ross v. Schooley, (C. C. A. 7th Cir. 1919) 257 Fed. 290, 168 C. C. A. 374.

Where the United States has exercised its exclusive power over interstate commerce so far as to take possession of the field, the states no more can supplement its requirements than they can annul them. It follows that regulations of the Interstate Commerce Commission prescribing requisites for caboose cars without platforms, and of the Post-Office Department respecting the equipment of mail cars when used as end cars, amount to such an assumption of control by the United States over the subject-matter as to invalidate a state statute in so far as it requires that a mail car, when used as the last car in an interstate train, be equipped at its rear end with a platform 30 inches in width, and with guard rails and steps. Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Public Service Commission, (1919) 250 U. S. 566, 40 S. Ct. 36, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, reversing (1917) 67 Pa. Super. Ct. 575.

(p. 1160)

In general.—To same effect as original annotation, see Ross v. Schooley, (C. C. A. 7th Cir. 1919) 257 Fed. 290, 168 C. C. A. 374, wherein it was said: "Liability to private suit for resulting injury or death is expressly declared in the Employers' Liability Act. In the Safety Appliance Act it is implied from the known frightful loss of lives and limbs due to the old link-and-pin couplings and defective automatic couplers; from the purpose stated in the title 'to promote the safety of employes and travelers'; from the effect of the payment of damages as a spur to observance; from the direction to courts contained in section 8 of the act of 1893 that an injured employe 'shall not be deemed to have assumed the risk'; from the proviso in section 4 of the supplemental act of 1910 in relation to 'liability in any remedial action for the death or injury of any railroad employe'; and especially from the premise that the legislators had in mind the immemorial rule that every person for whose protection a statute sets up a particular standard of conduct is entitled to compensation for damages suffered through violation of that statute.

"Under the Employers' Liability Act there is no need to count upon any state statute creating a liability for wrongful death, because that liability was expressly stated by the Congress. Inasmuch as the same legislative intent respecting liability is found in the Safety Appliance Act, the same result follows."

VIII. DUTY TO "EQUIP" AND MAINTAIN EQUIPMENT AS ABSOLUTE (p. 1166)

In general.—To same effect as first paragraph of original annotation, see Southern Pac. Co. v. Thomas, (Ariz. 1920) 188 Pac. 268.

To same effect as second paragraph of original annotation, see Southern Pac. Co. v. Thomas, (Ariz. 1920) 188 Pac. 268.

Duty to keep in repair.—The equipment required by this statute must be kept at all times, while cars are in use, in proper repair. Jackson v. Pirtle, (Ind. App. 1920) 127 N. E. 305.

IX. TO WHOM DUTY TO EQUIP OWED
(p. 1169)

To the same effect as the first paragraph of the original annotation and following the Conarty Case there cited, see Lang v. New York Cent. R. Co., (1920) 227 N. Y. 507, 125 N. E. 681, wherein the court said: "In St. Louis & San Francisco Railroad Co. v. Conarty, 238 U. S. 243, 36 Sup. Ct. 785, 59 L. Ed. 1290, a switch engine collided with a freight car having no coupler or drawbar. The switch engine was not to handle this car, but was on its way to a point some distance beyond it. Conarty, standing on the footboard of the engine, was killed by the collision. There was evidence that had the coupler and drawbar been present the engine and the car would have been held so far apart as to have prevented the injury.

"The Supreme Court said that section 2 of the act was intended to provide against the risk of coupling and uncoupling and to obviate the necessity of men going between the ends of the cars. It was not intended to provide a place of safety between colliding cars. Therefore, when a collision was not the proximate result of the violation of these regulations, where there was no endeavor to couple or uncouple a car or to handle it in any way, there can be no recovery under the act. The absence of a coupler and drawbar was not a breach of duty toward a servant in that situation. . . . In the case before us the defendant was engaged in interstate commerce. A car without drawbar or coupler was standing on the siding. The plaintiff's intestate was a brakeman, and was riding on a second car kicked upon the same siding. A collision occurred, and the deceased was crushed between the car upon which he was riding and the defective car. As in the Conarty Case, it was plain that had the coupler and drawbar been present the two cars would have been held so far apart that he would have escaped uninjured. There was no attempt to couple on to the defective car or to handle it in any way.

"Under these circumstances Mr. Lang was not one of the persons for whose benefit the Safety Appliance Act was passed. The collision was not the proximate result of the absence of the coupler and drawbar. Their presence was not required so that they might act as bumpers.

"It is said that had the car not been defective the work on hand would have been done in a different way. Assuming that this is so, still the collision was not the proximate result of the defect."

XI. CIVIL ACTION ARISING OUT OF VIOLATION OF SECTION (p. 1170)

Contributory negligence.—To same effect as original annotation, see Southern Pac. Co. v. Thomas, (Ariz. 1920) 188 Pac. 268.

Proximate cause.—The failure of a brakeman to signal the engineer before going between two cars to make a coupling is not such an independent cause as to break the chain of causation between a defect in the coupler and an injury to the brakeman while making the coupling. Southern Pac. Co. v. Thomas, (Ariz. 1920) 188 Pac. 268.

Where it appears that the injured employee would not have assumed the position between the cars which resulted in the injury if they had been equipped with automatic couplers, proximate cause is for the jurv. McAdoo v. McCoy, (Tex. Civ. App. 1919) 215 S. W. 870.

Sufficiency of evidence.—To same effect as second paragraph of original annotation, see Philadelphia, etc., R. Co. v. McKibbin (C. C. A. 3d Cir. 1919) 259 Fed. 476, 170 C. C. A. 452, wherein the court said: "We do not wish to be understood, however, as holding what seems to have been conceded in Chicago, R. I. & Pac. Ry. Co. v. Brown, 229 U. S. 317, 320, 38 Sup. Ct. 840, 57 L. Ed. 1204; and what the court in San Antonio Ry. v. Wagner, 241 U. S. 476, 484, 36 Sup. Ct. 626, 629 (60 L. Ed. 1110), expressly found it unnecessary to determine, 'that the failure of a coupler to work at any time sustains a charge that the [Safety Appliance] act has been violated'; nor do we wish to be understood as intimating any opinion upon that question. We merely decide that the failure of the coupler to work under the circumstances above detailed is some evidence, the weight of which is for the jury under all the circumstances of a given case, that the coupler was not in the condition required by the act, when the plaintiff was injured."

Vol. VIII, p. 1174, sec. 4. [First ed., vol. VI, p. 755.]

II. "Handholds in ends." VI. Evidence.

II. "HANDHOLDS IN ENDS" (p. 1174)

Handholds at two diagonal corners of car.—Handholds or grab irons on all four outside corners of freight cars are not required by this section, making unlawful the use of any car in interstate commerce unless such car is provided with secure grab irons or handholds in the ends and sides for greater security to men in coupling and uncoupling cars. The commands of the statute are met by secure and adequate handholds at two diagonal corners of the car. Boehmer v. Pennsylvania R. Co., (1920) 252 U. S. 496, 40 S. Ct. 409, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1918) 252 Fed. 553, 165 C. C. A. 3.

VI. EVIDENCE (p. 1176)

When evidence sufficient to go to jury.—Evidence of obvious defect in grab irons by pulling out of which injury was caused held sufficient to take case to jury. Ferris v. Holiman, (1920) 78 Okla. 251, 190 Pac. 409.

VI. INTRASTATE CARS (p. 1186)

Vol. VIII, p. 1190, sec. 2. [First ed., 1912 Supp., p. 336.]

Duty as absolute.—The duty imposed by this section to equip with efficient hand brakes is absolute. Thayer v. Denver, etc., R. Co., (1919) 25 N. M. 559, 185 Pac. 542. "Efficient" defined.—The word "defective" is not the antonym of "efficient," and, where the federal Safety Appliance Act requires all cars to be equipped with efficient hand brakes, a finding by the jury, in answer to a special interrogatory, that the hand brake rigging on the car in question was not in any manner defective, is not equivalent to a finding that the car was equipped with an efficient hand brake. Thayer v. Denver, etc., R. Co., (1919) 25 N. M. 559, 185 Pac. 542.

VIII. "REMEDIAL ACTION" (p. 1197)

Attaching a freight car, having no drawbar or coupler at its rear end, in the rear of the caboose in an interstate freight train and using it to haul interstate freight, is a violation of this section, and renders the carrier liable for an injury thereby caused to an employee. Erie R. Co. v. Schleenbaker, (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1919) 257 Fed. 667, 168 C. C. A. 617.

Vol. VIII, p. 1201, sec. 2. [First ed., 1912 Supp., p. 339.]

Imposition of absolute duty.—In Thorn-ton v. Minneapolis, etc., R. Co., (Ia. 1919) 175 N. W. 71, the court said: "It will be noted that, by section 2 of the Locomotive Boiler Act, it is made unlawful for a common carrier to use for interstate traffic a locomotive engine unless its boiler and its appurtenances are in proper condition and safe to operate in the service to which it is put. The question whether this provision of this statute imposes upon the carrier an absolute duty, or only a duty to use care, is not open to us. The Supreme Court of the United States has construed the Safety Appliance Acts as imposing upon the carrier an absolute duty as distinguished from the qualified duty at common law to use due care."

Vol. VIII, p. 1205, sec. 1. [First ed., 1916 Supp., p. 215.]

Wear on flange of locomotive wheel.—The Interstate Commerce Commission having approved rules and regulations prescribing with particularity the extent of wear on the flange of a locomotive wheel which renders it defective, conformity with those rules is the test of the duty of a railroad company and the question of "ordinary care" is eliminated. Lancaster v. Allen, (Tex. 1920) 217 S. W. 1032.

I. INTRODUCTORY

2. Construction and Operation

a. In General (p. 1213)

Purpose of Act.—“The purpose of Congress, through the Employers' Liability Act and the Safety Appliance Acts, considered together, is not alone to make the defendant's duty absolute, but also, where, as here, the injury is in part occasioned by the failure of the carrier to comply with the acts mentioned, to excuse the employees from the effect alike of the rules of contributory negligence and assumption of risk.” Erie R. Co. v. Schleenbaker, (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1919) 257 Fed. 667, 168 C. C. A. 617.

d. Construction Controlled by Federal Decisions (p. 1214)

To same effect as original annotation, see Werner v. Southern R. Co., (Cal. App. 1920) 185 Pac. 1016.

Federal decisions are controlling as to the construction of the act. McDougall v. Atchison, etc., R. Co., (Kan. 1920) 186 Pac. 1028; Saxton v. El Paso, etc., R. Co., (Ariz. 1920) 188 Pac. 257.

“Questions of either plaintiff's or defendant's negligence in connection with the injury are controlled by the principles declared by the federal courts rather than those of the state courts.” Kalashian v. Hines, (Wis. 1920) 177 N. W. 602.

c. State Statutes, in General (p. 1219)

Relief associations.—In the federal Employers' Liability Act, Congress covered the responsibility of interstate carriers by railroad to their employees injured in such commerce, and that act supersedes the statutes of the states on the subject; but Congress has not, in that act or otherwise, given authority for the creation and operation of relief associations which employees of carriers engaged in interstate commerce are compelled to join, nor for such association to withhold any part of the wages of an employee against his consent to pay dues therein, nor to require either as a condition to securing employment or being employed. Baltimore, etc., R. Co. v. Bailey, (1919) 99 Ohio St. 312, 124 N. E. 195.

d. State Workmen's Compensation Acts (p. 1220)

Burden of showing application of state law.—In an action under a state Workmen's Compensation Act the burden is upon the plaintiff to prove a case within the statute; that is, to show, affirmatively, that the decedent was engaged at the time of the accident in a service which was not regulated by the federal Employers' Liability Act. Carberry v. Delaware, etc., R. Co., (1919) 93 N. J. L. 414, 108 Atl. 364.

III. EMPLOYEE ENGAGED IN INTERSTATE COMMERCE

1. Relation of Employer and Employee

e. Employee Serving Two Railroads (p. 1232)

A brakeman in the general employ of an interstate railway company, which had a contract arrangement with a connecting railway company for through freight service without change of crews, was not in the employ of the latter company within the meaning of the federal Employers' Liability Act while his train was on that company's line, where, under such contract, each company retained control of its own train crews; what they did upon the line of the other railroad was done as a part of their duty to the general employer, and so far as they were subject, while upon the tracks of the other company, to its rules, regulations, discipline, and orders, this was for the purpose of co-ordinating their movements to the other operations of the owning company, securing the safety of all concerned, and furthering the general object of the agreement between the companies. Hull v. Philadelphia, etc., R. Co., (1920) 252 U. S. 475, 40 S. Ct. 358, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (1918) 132 Md. 540, 104 Atl. 274, wherein the court said: “We hardly need repeat the statement made in Robinson v. Balt. & Ohio R. R., 237 U. S. 84, 94, 35 Sup. Ct. 491, 59 L. Ed. 849, that in the Employers' Liability Act Congress used the words ‘employé’ and ‘employed’ in their natural sense, and intended to describe the conventional relation of employer and employé. The simple question is whether, under the facts as recited and according to the general principles applicable to the relation, Hull had been transferred from the employ of the Western Maryland Railway Company to that of defendant for the purposes of the train movement in which he was engaged when killed. He was not a party to the agreement between the railway companies, and is not shown to have had knowledge of it; but, passing this, and assuming the provisions of the agreement can be availed of by petitioner, it still is plain, we think, from the whole case, that deceased remained for all purposes—certainly for the purposes of the act—an employé of the Western Maryland Company only. It is clear that each company retained control of its own train crews; that what the latter did upon the line of the other road was done as a part of their duty to the general employer; and that, so far as they were subject while upon the tracks of the other company to its rules, regulations, discipline, and orders, this was for the purpose of coördinating their movements to the other operations of the owning company, securing the safety of all concerned, and furthering the general object of the agreement between the companies. See Standard Oil Co. v. Anderson, 212 U. S. 216, 226, 29 Sup. Ct. 252, 53 L. Ed. 480.

"North Carolina R. R. Co. v. Zachary, 232 U. S. 248, 34 Sup. Ct. 305, 58 L. Ed. 591, Ann. Cas. 1914C 159, is cited, but is not in point, since in that case the relation of the parties was controlled by a dominant rule of local law, to which the agreement here operative has no analogy."

2. Employed in Interstate Commerce

a. General Rule and Tests (p. 1236)

It is essential to a case under the statutes. —To same effect as second paragraph of original annotation, see Saxton v. El Paso, etc., R. Co., (Ariz. 1920) 188 Pac. 257.

The true test as to whether one is engaged in interstate commerce.—"The character of the commerce the employee was engaged in is to be determined by the work he was actually doing when injured." Knorr v. New Jersey Cent. R. Co., (Pa. 1920) 110 Atl. 797.

If an employee at the time of his injury is engaged in interstate commerce, the fact that at the particular instant of his injury he was bent on or actually engaged in handling an intrastate shipment, will not necessarily characterize his employment as intrastate, if the discharge of his duty in that behalf also pertains to the operation of a train in interstate commerce. Keathley v. Chesapeake, etc., R. Co., (W. Va. 1920) 102 S. E. 244.

A railway employee charged with the duty of sanding the locomotives of a railway company engaged both in intrastate and interstate commerce is engaged in interstate commerce within the meaning of the federal Employers' Liability Act when, having sanded the last locomotive and carried the ashes from the drying stove in the sand house to the ash pit across the tracks, he was struck by a passing locomotive on his way to get the ash pail, which he had left at the pit while he went for a drink of water, and it is immaterial in what kind of commerce the last locomotive sanded was engaged. Erie R. Co. v. Szary, (1920) 253 U. S. 86, 40 S. Ct. 454, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1919) 259 Fed. 178, 170 C. C. A. 246.

An employee moving from a train to the baggage room on a truck a number of trunks which had just arrived, some of which came from points outside the state, is within the act. Hines v. Wicks, (Tex. Civ. App. 1920) 220 S. W. 581.

b. Employee Operating Train (p. 1244)

Employees within the statute — Trainmen.

—A member of a train crew operating a train of loaded coal cars from colliery to freight yard, both within the state, is, although his duties never took him outside of the state, employed in interstate commerce within the meaning of the federal Employers' Liability Act so as to exclude the operation of a state Workmen's Compensation Law, where the ultimate destination of some of the cars was a point outside the state, as appears from instruction cards or memoranda delivered to the conductor by the shipping clerk of the mine, each of which referred to a particular car by number, and contained certain code letters indicating that such car with its load would move beyond the state, the course followed being to haul the cars to the yard and place them upon appropriate tracks, when the duties of the train crew ended, then, having gathered them into a train, to move them with another crew some 10 miles to a place still within the state, where they were inspected, weighed, and billed to specifically designated consignees in another state, passing in due time to their final destinations over proper lines, freight charges being at through rates and paid for the entire distance, beginning at the mine. Philadelphia, etc., R. Co. v. Hancock, (1920) 253 U. S. 284, 40 S. Ct. 512, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, reversing (1919) 264 Pa. St. 220, 107 Atl. 735.

Conductor.—A conductor of an interstate train who has left his train at the end of the run and is killed while on his way to the yardmaster's office to deliver train records, is employed in interstate commerce at the time of his death. Anderson v. Director General of Railroads, (N. J. 1920) 110 Atl. 829, wherein the court said: "The first ground upon which a reversal is sought is that there was no proof in the case to support the conclusion that plaintiff's decedent came to his death while employed by the defendant in interstate commerce. The testimony showed the following situation: The decedent was conductor upon a freight train which was carrying articles of interstate commerce over the Camden & Atlantic Railroad. When the train reached the freight yard in Camden, his control over it ceased; but his work in connection with it was not terminated until he had delivered certain train records, which he had kept, to the yardmaster. For the purpose of performing this duty he got down from his train and jumped upon the step of a passing locomotive to save time in reaching the yardmaster's office. As this engine was proceeding on its way, the engine of another train collided with it at a switch point with such force as to throw it from the track. Anderson's death resulted from the collision. Although it is conceded that Anderson, while in charge of the train, was employed by the defendant in interstate commerce, the contention is that he ceased to be so employed as soon as he left it. But this suggestion is without merit, for his duty with relation to the subject-matter of the transportation was not ended until he had turned over his records to the yardmaster; and the mere fact that he had left the train in the performance of that duty did not at all change the character of his employment."

c. Employees Coupling, Uncoupling or Switching Cars (p. 1248)

Employees within the statute—Coupling or uncoupling.—An employee engaged in coupling certain "special service cars" used exclusively in particular interstate shipments, preparatory to their being taken to a station whence they were to be sent out of the state, is engaged in interstate commerce. McAdoo v. McCoy, (Tex. Civ. App. 1919) 215 S. W. 870.

Switching.—A switch tender, injured by an engine leaving a switch, cannot be held to have been injured in interstate commerce where there is no evidence to show that the engine was being used in interstate commerce. Missouri Pac. R. Co. v. Mette, (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1919) 261 Fed. 755.

d. Employee Engaged in Construction or Repairs (p. 1254)

Employees within the statute—Roadbed and tracks.—To same effect as original annotation, see Frazier v. Hines, (E. D. S. C. 1919) 260 Fed. 874.

A section hand proceeding to a handcar for the purpose of going with the rest of the crew to repair a transfer track, so called, used in interstate commerce was held within the scope of this section in the case of Kalashian v. Hines, (Wis. 1920) 177 N. W. 602.

In Lammers v. Chicago Great Western R. Co., (Ia. 1919) 175 N. W. 311, wherein it appeared that a section hand was injured while unloading rails on the main line of an interstate railroad for use in repairing the same, the court said: "If at the time of the accident, the rails were being unloaded to be used in repairing a track used by defendant for the movement of interstate trains, he was employed in interstate commerce, whether the particular train from which the rails were being unloaded had in fact come from another state into Iowa or not."

Bridges.—To same effect as original annotation, see Kansas City Southern R. Co. v. Martin, (C. C. A. 5th Cir. 1920) 262 Fed. 241, wherein it was said: "The plaintiff was a member of a bridge gang employed in maintaining and repairing bridges constituting part of lines of railway in use by the defendant in interstate commerce. When he was injured, he, as a member of such gang, was assisting in unloading timbers and cross-ties from a car at a point near a bridge on the defendant's line of railway over the Calcasieu river, near Lake Charles, La.; the purpose being to use the timbers and ties so placed in the reconstruction or repair of that bridge as soon as the required material could be assembled, without causing an interruption of the use of the bridge in interstate commerce. It is settled that the repair of bridges or other structures constituting part of a railway in use as an instrumentality of interstate commerce is so closely related to such commerce as to be in legal contemplation a part of it, that a railway employee engaged in such work is to be regarded as engaged in interstate commerce, and that preparatory steps taken with the purpose of furthering the actual work of repair or reconstruction constitute a part of such commerce within the meaning of the act. Pederson v. Delaware, Lackawanna & Western R. R. Co., 229 U. S. 146, 33 Sup. Ct. 648, 57 L. Ed. 1125, Ann. Cas. 1914C, 153; Southern Railway Co. v. Puckett, 244 U. S. 571, 37 Sup. Ct. 703, 61 L. Ed. 1321, Ann. Cas. 1918B, 69; Louisville & Nashville R. R. Co. v. Parker, 242 U. S. 13, 37 Sup. Ct. 4, 61 L. Ed. 119; Philadelphia, Baltimore & Washington R. R. Co. v. Smith, 250 U. S. 101, 39 Sup. Ct. 396, 63 L. Ed. —.

"The work in which the plaintiff was engaged when he was hurt was not more remote from the actual making of the repairs being prepared for than the work which was held to be a part of interstate commerce in the cases of Pederson v. Delaware, Lackawanna & Western R. R. Co., supra, and Philadelphia, Baltimore & Washington R. R. Co. v. Smith, supra. We are of opinion that the doing of that work is to be considered as a part of what was required to effect the repair of the bridge near which it was being done, and that the plaintiff in taking part in that work was engaged in interstate commerce."

An employee engaged in unloading from a flat car old timbers taken from a bridge used in interstate commerce as a result of the repair thereof is within the Act. Manes v. St. Louis-San Francisco R. Co., (Mo. App. 1920) 220 S. W. 14.

Engine or car.—A car repairer injured while carrying bolts to repair a car used in interstate commerce is engaged in interstate commerce at the time of his injury. Central R. Co. v. Sharkey, (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1919) 259 Fed. 144, 170 C. C. A. 212.

Loading rails.—An employee engaged in loading on a flat car rails to be used in a railroad yard which was used for both interstate and intrastate traffic is within the act. Coons v. Louisville, etc., R. Co., (1919) 185 Ky. 741, 215 S. W. 946.

Erecting block signal system on a line of track used for both interstate and intrastate traffic is within the act. Saxton v. El Paso, etc., R. Co., (Ariz. 1920) 188 Pac. 257.

Painting poles carrying electric wires.—Where an employee of defendant was engaged in his employment of painting a pole used by defendant in its electric railroad operation, in interstate commerce, between Manhattan Transfer and the city of New York, and was injured by the negligent act of a coemployee, the case falls within the provisions of the federal Employers' Liability Act, which eliminates the negligence of a fellow employee as a defense to an action under the act. Stiedler v. Pennsylvania R. Co., (N. J. 1920) 109 Atl. 512.

Employees not within the statute—Carpenter repairing coal chute.—A carpenter employed by a railroad company in repairing a chute within a state for the supply of coal to its interstate and intrastate trains is not engaged in interstate commerce within the intent and meaning of the federal Employers' Liability Act, and his suit under the act to recover damages for a personal injury thus occurring, alleged to have been caused by the railroad's negligence, brought in the state courts, will, on motion for judgment of nonsuit, be dismissed. Capps v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., (1919) 178 N. C. 558, 101 S. E. 216, wherein the court said: "In the very recent case of New York Central Ry. v. Gallagher, Guardian, 248 U. S. 559, a petition for certiorari was denied in a suit where an employee of a company engaged in transporting both kinds of commerce, was killed in repairing coal packets of the company from which coal was supplied from time to time to locomotives engaged in both inter- and intrastate commerce. That case originated on petition before the industrial commission of the state of New York under a state statute for a claim on behalf of the infant dependent children of Daniel T. Gearty, the deceased employee; the facts stated being to the effect that he came to his death from injuries received by a fall from a plank on which he was standing and engaged in cutting heads off bolts in the coal pocket building, etc. The commission have allowed the claim, the cause was carried by appeal of the railroad company to the appellate division of the Supreme Court on the ground that as the facts disclosed a case under the federal Employers' Liability Act, the proceeding under the state statute could not be maintained. The court ruled that the federal act did not apply, and in sustaining the award of petitioner's claim, it was held that a carpenter in the general employ of a state railroad engaged in repairing coal pockets from which coal was supplied to engines of the company engaged in inter- and intrastate commerce, was not engaged in repairing an instrumentality of interstate commerce, so as to prevent the application of the state statute, etc. 180 N. Y. App. Div. (S. Ct.) 88. This ruling was affirmed by the Court of Appeals (222 N. Y. 649). A petition for certiorari to the Supreme Court of the United States setting forth that the facts brought the cause within the provisions of the federal Employers' Liability Act was denied as stated. True, the action of the Supreme Court on these petitions for certiorari is not always necessarily intended to be controlling as a precedent, the exercise of revising power of the court in this manner being to some extent discretionary (Hamilton Shoe Co. v. Wolf Bros., 240 U. S. 251; Forsyth v. Hammond, 166 U. S. 514, 515); but on a judgment making final disposition of the cause, and where the petition for certiorari directly challenged the right of the state board to allow the claim, on the ground that the federal statute was controlling in the matter, it is the reasonable and well nigh the necessary inference that the Supreme Court of the United States intended to affirm the ruling of the New York court that the act of the deceased employee was not one in aid of interstate commerce. From these decisions we conclude that coal as an agency of interstate transportation does not become such until it is supplied, or in the act of being supplied, to engines or trains engaged at the time in carrying interstate commerce, and that the making of repairs on a chute or structure where it is stored for the purpose of being supplied to inter- and intrastate engines as called for is not such an act in aid of interstate transportation as to bring an injured employee's cause within the provisions of the federal statute, the same being too remote. The case of B. & O. R. R. v. Branson, 242 U. S. 623, reversing a decision of the state court in which recovery had been awarded under the federal Act, and two decisions in the state court where relief under the Act was denied, Zavitocki's Administrator v. Chicago Ry., 181 Wis. 461, and case of Grand Trunk Ry., reported in 100, at p. 908, are in general approval of the position."

Construction of new depot and semaphore.

—An employee injured while assisting in the construction of a new depot and semaphore is not engaged in interstate commerce. Williams v. Schaff, (Mo. 1920) 222 S. W. 412, wherein it was said: "Neither the semaphore plaintiff was assisting to build nor the new depot was yet in use in any kind of commerce; for the old semaphore and depot had not been discarded. In fact the new ones were incomplete and the semaphore appears to have been far from completion. As suggested by Judge Sanborn, in the Bravis Case [217 Fed. 234], neither had ever been used, and it is possible neither ever would be used, for some mishap might destroy them."

Laborer working in tunnel.—An employee killed by a train while working in a tunnel not used in the business of interstate commerce was not killed while engaged in interstate commerce. Tilli v. Philadelphia, etc., R. Co., (1919) 263 Pa. St. 558, 107 Atl. 330.

e. Employee Supplying Fuel or Water (p. 1267)

Employees within the act—Supplying fuel.—If an employee is injured while coaling an engine for an interstate trip, he is entitled to the benefits of this act, although the accident occurred prior to the actual coupling of the engine to the interstate cars. Moore v. Grand Trunk R. Co., (Vt. 1919) 108 Atl. 334, (following New York Cent., etc., R. Co. v. Carr, (1915) 238 U. S. 260, 35 S. Ct. 780, 59 U. S. (L. ed.) 1298), wherein the court said:

"In simple form the question under discussion comes to this: Engine 1018, making its regular trips, arrived in Island Pond at 5 p. m., on the day of the accident, as an instrumentality of international and interstate commerce, and left there at 6 a. m., next morning, as such an instrumentality. Did it, by being detached from the train it hauled in, lose its international and interstate character so that the plaintiff, when engaged in coaling it, was not employed in such commerce, within the meaning of the Employers' Liability Act?

"Supplying the locomotive with coal and water, and looking after the fire, on coming into that terminal, were acts essential to the locomotive's further efficient operation, but having no tendency to show an interruption in its international work; but rather, in the circumstances including the time of day and the early hour of its departure the next morning on its regular trip, they were acts which might reasonably be considered as tending to show preparation for that run. Considering therewith that the evidence was such as (we think) reasonably to warrant a finding that this locomotive was destined for such run, by an order issued prior to the time of the accident, it seems clear that, as the case stood, the question of whether the engine and the plaintiff were, at the time in question, engaged in an act so closely related to international or interstate commerce as to be practically a part of it, was for the jury to determine under proper instructions."

Supplying water.—An employee of an interstate railway company assigned to duty in a signaling tower and pumping station was engaged in interstate commerce within the meaning of the federal Employers' Liability Act while starting a gasoline engine at the pumping station, which was used to pump water into a tank from which water was to be supplied daily to locomotives in whatever commerce, interstate or intrastate, engaged. Erie R. Co. v. Collins, (1920) 253 U. S. 77, 40 S. Ct. 450, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming

(C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1919) 259 Fed. 172, 170 C. C. A. 240.

f. Employee Guarding or Inspecting Property (p. 1269)

Employees within the statute—A flagman stationed as a watchman.—To the same effect as the original annotation see Pittsburgh, etc., R. Co. v. Industrial Commission, (1920) 291 Ill. 396, 126 N. E. 123, wherein the evidence showed that the plaintiff's intestate was killed by an intrastate train at a crossing where he flagged both interstate and intrastate trains; Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Industrial Commission, (1919) 288 Ill. 603, 124 N. E. 344, wherein the court after quoting from a case in point said:

"This quotation is from Southern Pacific Co. v. Industrial Accident Com. of California, 174 Cal. 8, 161 Pac. 1139, L. R. A. 1917E 262, and it is a case strikingly in point. There a crossing flagman was engaged in flagging the highway for an intrastate train, and yet he was held to be employed in interstate commerce, where there was evidence that the track which he was protecting was used indiscriminately for intrastate and interstate commerce. The same reasoning was adopted in Southern Pacific Co. v. Industrial Accident Com. of California, 174 Cal. 16, 161 Pac. 1142, where the flagman was working at the crossing of a side track connecting the main line with the freight depot, the side track being used indiscriminately for intrastate and interstate commerce. . . . It has been contended by defendant in error that while the deceased may have been killed by a train engaged in interstate commerce he was not killed by a train of the plaintiff in error; therefore he was not engaged in interstate commerce of his employer. We cannot agree with this view. If an employé is engaged in protecting the instrumentalities of the interstate commerce of his master and is killed in the course of this employment, his injuries arise out of his employment, and the cause is one within the scope of the federal Employers' Liability Act, regardless of who inflicts the injury causing the death."

A watchman at a pier used for the landing of boats operated by a railroad company and used entirely in interstate commerce is within the act. Delaware, etc., R. Co. v. Busse, (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1920) 263 Fed. 516.

Employees not within the statute—Watchman.—Where a night watchman in a railroad yard is killed by an engine of another company while he was standing on the latter's track east of his employer's track, mere proof that a regular interstate freight train of his employer, which it was a particular part of his duty to watch to prevent theft from the cars, was pulling out of the yard at the time on the track west of the one where he was killed, and that he had been directed to be always on the east side of that train, does not show that he was engaged in interstate commerce at the time he was killed.

Atchison, etc., R. Co. v. Industrial Commission, (1919) 290 Ill. 590, 125 N. E. 380.

In Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Industrial Commission, (1919) 290 Ill. 599, 125 N. E. 378, an employee whose duty it was to guard property of a railroad company in its yards and who was shot by men carrying sacks of coal which had been stolen from cars standing in a yard was held not engaged in interstate commerce at the time of the shooting under circumstances stated by the court as follows:

"His duties were to guard the property of the company, and all property being transported by it as a common carrier, to prevent theft, and to apprehend persons stealing or suspected of stealing property. Prior to deceased's injury merchandise had been stolen from cars in trains Nos. 94 and 98 while in the yards. These were both interstate trains. T. J. Reardon was deceased's immediate superior. Deceased reported for duty at 6 o'clock p. m. August 21st, and he and Reardon went together to the yards, where train No. 98 had been made up and was standing. Their purpose was to guard it, and merchandise with which it was loaded, while it stood in the yards and as it was passing out of the East St. Louis terminals. About 7:30 p. m. the train was ready to depart. Reardon boarded it about the middle and directed deceased to go on ahead of it and hide himself behind a pile of ties on the east side of the tracks of the Chicago & Alton Railroad and between them and the tracks of the Wabash Railroad Company. The headlight of train No. 98 was plainly visible at this point. A few days previous the train had been broken into and a case of shoes dropped out of the car about the point where Lambert was sent to secrete himself. At the same time it was also deceased's duty to apprehend any person stealing any property in the yards who might come under his observation or whom he might suspect of stealing. After deceased had taken his position and the train had started, but before it reached the place where he was hiding, he saw two men coming toward him from the Wabash right of way, carrying sacks filled with some articles to him then unknown. He left his hiding place, started toward them, and called to them to halt, whereupon they opened fire on him and shot him and escaped. It was subsequently ascertained that the sacks the men were carrying contained coal. A number of cars loaded with coal were standing on nearby tracks. A few minutes after deceased was shot train No. 98 arrived at that point, and he was placed upon the engine and taken to a hospital."

Flagman.—See Di Donato v. Philadelphia, etc., R. Co., (1920) 266 Pa. St. 412, 109 Atl. 627, which held that a flagman was not engaged in interstate commerce while flagging an intrastate train though the track was used for both intrastate and interstate commerce.

The court said: "But a crossing flagman is in the nature of a traffic officer who protects the public and pilots each train over the crossing; and how can it be said that he is engaged in through traffic when so conducting a local train? He is assisting that train, and his act is not essentially different from that of a conductor or brakeman thereon; for each is working for the safety of the train. Yet an employé upon an intrastate train is not engaged in interstate commerce. Ill. Cent. R. R. v. Behrens, 223 U. S. 473, 34 Sup. Ct. 646, 58 L. Ed. 1051, Ann. Cas. 1914C, 163. However, it is urged that flagging a local train promotes its safe passage, and thus tends to keep the track open and clear for through traffic; but certainly no more so than the work of the crew of the intrastate train on the same track, and, if this incidental matter of keeping the track open renders the one an interstate employment, why not both? The repair of a track or bridge over which interstate commerce passes is a direct immediate benefit thereto, entirely unlike any remote or collateral benefit it might possibly derive from flagging an intrastate train. And the true rule apparently is that to come within the range of interstate commerce the work must bear directly, and not remotely, thereon; otherwise practically all local work on trunk railways would be in interstate commerce; for one can scarcely conceive of any act so done that might not have some remote bearing upon such commerce. So, while this question does not seem to have been directly decided by the United States Supreme Court, and the rulings thereon by other courts are not in harmony, we conclude that a crossing watchman while flagging an intrastate train is not employed in interstate commerce, although trains engaged in such commerce use the same tracks."

g. Employee Going to or Returning from Work or Temporarily Diverted Therefrom (p. 1271)

Employees within the statute.—An employé of an interstate railway carrier, engaged in working as a section man upon the railroad of such carrier, who is injured returning from his work by attempting to board a moving freight train, pursuant to directions or orders of the section foreman so to do, is engaged in interstate commerce within the meaning of the Employers' Liability Act. Schantz v. Northern Pac. R. Co., (N. D. 1919) 173 N. W. 556.

Employees not within the statute.—An employee riding home in a train of his employer on a pass after having finished his day's work as fireman on an interstate train and registering and checking out with other members of the train crew, is not then engaged in interstate commerce. Knorr v. New Jersey Cent. R. Co., (Pa. 1920) 110 Atl. 797.

i. Other Employees (p. 1275)

Employees within the statute—Electric linemen.—The work of an electric lineman in wiping insulators on one of the main electric cables of an interstate railway carrier running from a power house to a reduction and transforming station, whence the current ran to the trolley wires and thence to the motors of the carrier's cars engaged in both intrastate and interstate commerce, is so directly and intimately connected with interstate transportation as to render a state workmen's compensation law inapplicable, where the lineman was killed as the result of an electric shock received while so engaged. Southern Pac. Co. v. Industrial Acc. Commission, (1920) 251 U. S. 259, 40 S. Ct. 130, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, reversing (1918) 178 Cal. 20, 171 Pac. 1071.

Baggage agent.—A baggage agent whose duty it was to meet both interstate and intrastate trains of the railroad company by whom he was employed, and to put on and take off baggage, and who was killed by an interstate train whilst in the performance of that duty, must be held to have been engaged in "interstate commerce" at the time he was killed. Carberry v. Delaware, etc., R. Co., (1919) 93 N. J. L. 414, 108 Atl. 364.

Engine washer in roundhouse.—An engine washer injured by reason of the unlighted condition of a turntable used in part for engines used in interstate traffic is within the act. Lusk v. Bandy, (1919) 76 Okla. 108, 184 Pac. 144.

Trucker injured while unloading interstate freight at destination was held to be engaged in interstate commerce in Cox v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co., (Tex. 1920) 222 S. W. 964.

Employees not within the statute—Employee cutting up timber for crossties.—Where plaintiff, who was employed by defendant, a railroad company engaged in both interstate and intrastate commerce, was injured while working in a saw mill maintained and operated by defendant for cutting up timber and logs in making crossties, and it does not appear that the ties being made, at the time plaintiff was injured, were intended for any particular track or place or for any particular work of repair, but were for use generally at some future time, the purpose for which the crossties were intended was not then so definite and certain as to be beyond the possibility of a change in the use to which they would be devoted or from their being withdrawn from such purpose altogether, and, hence, the work in which plaintiff was engaged had no immediate connection with interstate commerce, and he cannot recover under the federal Employers' Liability Act. Buynofsky v. Lehigh Valley R. Co., (1920) 228 N. Y. 249, 126 N. E. 714, reversing (1918) 183 App. Div. 901, 169 N. Y. S. 1086.

IV. INJURIES TO EMPLOYEES

1. Negligence Generally

d. Defects in Cars, Engines, Appliances, etc.

(1) In General (p. 1280)

Worn flange on locomotive wheel.—The Interstate Commerce Commission having approved rules and regulations prescribing with particularity the extent of wear on the flange of a locomotive wheel which renders it defective, conformity with those rules is the test of the duty of a railroad company and the question of "ordinary care" is eliminated. Lancaster v. Allen, (Tex. 1920) 217 S. W. 1032.

Evidence of cause of injury.—In Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Campbell, (1919) 186 Ky. 628, 217 S. W. 687, evidence of the cause of injury was held inadequate in an action for injuries resulting from falling from a hand car, the theory that the fall was due to a defect in the handle of the hand car being held to rest on mere speculation.

(2) Duty of Carrier as to Place to Work (p. 1280)

Duty of employer as to place to work.—To same effect as original annotation, see Lehigh Valley R. Co. v. Scanlon, (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1919) 259 Fed. 137, 170 C. C. A. 205, holding that the placing of a train on a certain track so that a switch tender was compelled to mount upon the coupling of the cars to cross the track, thus causing his injury, was a violation of the employer's duty to provide him a safe place in which to work.

Likewise leaving brake beams scattered in switch yard is negligence which will sustain a recovery by a switch tender injured by stumbling thereon. Lock v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., (Mo. 1920) 219 S. W. 919.

But it is not negligence for a railroad company to use a car float, built as such floats usually are and with the customary clearance between the side of the car and the stanchions in the center of the float. Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Nelson, (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1919) 259 Fed. 156, 170 C. C. A. 224.

(3) Duty of Carrier as to Appliances, etc. (p. 1281)

Selection by injured employee.—Where a wrecking crew is furnished with a number of chains, and the foreman, having selected one for use on a particular job, is injured by reason of its breaking because it is not large enough, there is no negligence on the part of the railroad company. Roberg v. Houston, etc., Cent. R. Co., (Tex. Civ. App. 1920) 220 S. W. 790.

(5) Particular Acts or Conditions as Negligence (p. 1282)

Attaching defective car to train.—The attaching of a freight car, which has no drawbar or coupler at its rear end, to the rear of the caboose in an interstate freight train, violates section 4 of the Safety Appliance Act of 1910 (8 Fed. Stat. Ann. (2d ed.) 1192) and constitutes negligence on the part of the railroad company, which renders it liable to one of its employees who is injured by falling between the caboose and such car. Erie R. Co. v. Schleenbaker, (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1919) 257 Fed. 667, 168 C. C. A. 617.

f. Effect of Section on Particular Doctrines or Maxims

(2) Fellow Servant Doctrine (p. 1284)

In general.—To same effect as second paragraph of original annotation, see Lehigh Valley R. Co. v. Scanlon, (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1919) 259 Fed. 137, 170 C. C. A. 205; San Pedro, etc., R. Co. v. Brown, (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1919) 258 Fed. 806, 170 C. C. A. 100, 8 A. L. R. 865; Pittsburgh, etc., R. Co. v. Cole, (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1919) 260 Fed. 357, 171 C. C. A. 223, certiorari denied (1919) 250 U. S. 671, 40 S. Ct. 15, 63 U. S. (L. ed.) (holding that the question whether the injury was caused by the negligence of a fellow servant was one for the jury); Davis v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., (Neb. 1920) 177 N. W. 181; McDowell v. Southern R. Co., (S. C. 1920) 102 S. E. 639; Cox v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co., (Tex. 1920) 222 S. W. 964; Wight v. Morgan, (Tex. Civ. App. 1920) 220 S. W. 295; Lock v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., (Mo. 1920) 219 S. W. 919 (holding railroad company liable for injury to switch tender caused by his stumbling over brake beam left lying in yard); Kinzell v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., (Idaho 1920) 190 Pac. 255; Werner v. Southern Pac. R. Co., (Cal. App. 1920) 185 Pac. 1016.

Doctrine recognized.—In McCord v. Schaff, (Mo. 1919) 216 S. W. 320, the court, without considering specifically the applicability of the doctrine, held in a suit under the Act that the negligent servant was a vice-principal, and on that ground allowed a recovery.

Particular instances.—Operating train without giving warning.—Operating a train without giving warning on a track in a railroad yard which is paralleled by a path used by a number of railroad employees, is negligence where such track is obscured by smoke from engines so as to make it impossible for trains thereon to be seen. Central R. Co. v. Sharkey, (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1919) 259 Fed. 144, 170 C. C. A. 212.

2. Persons Entitled to Sue

a. In General (p. 1286)

Joinder of all beneficiaries in one suit is required. Davis v. Wight, (Tex. Civ. App. 1920) 218 S. W. 26.

b. Personal Representatives (p. 1287)

Personal representative must sue.—To same effect as first paragraph of original annotation, see Ferris v. Jones, (1920) 78 Okla. 154, 189 Pac. 527.

c. Widow (p. 1289)

Widow suing individually may amend by making herself personal representative.—To same effect as original annotation, see Ferris v. Jones, (1920) 78 Okla. 154, 189 Pac. 527.

3. Pleadings

a. In General (p. 1295)

Case within statute must be shown.—To come within the provisions of this Act, two things must concur: "first, the offending common carrier, by railroad, at the time of the injury, must be engaged in interstate commerce; second, the injury must be suffered by the employé while employed by such carrier in such commerce." Frazier v. Hines, (E. D. S. C. 1919) 260 Fed. 874.

Where an action in a state court is based on the federal act and a case within the act is not established the court will not dismiss the action but will render judgment under the state law. Archibald v. Northern Pac. R. Co., (1919) 108 Wash. 97, 183 Pac. 95.

Statute need not be expressly referred to.—To same effect as original annotation, see Lusk v. Bandy, (1919) 76 Okla. 108, 184 Pac. 144.

Specific allegation that plaintiff seeks to recover under the federal Employers' Liability Act is unnecessary. It is sufficient if, from the ultimate facts pleaded, it appears that both parties at the time of the accident were employed in interstate commerce. Lammers v. Chicago Great Western R. Co., (Ia. 1919) 175 N. W. 311.

Sufficiency of complaint generally.—Allegations in a petition of the representatives of a railroad employee to recover for death of the employee caused by the railway company's negligence, that the company was incorporated in Iowa and Illinois and operated its railway in and through the state of Oklahoma, and that when injured deceased was in the line of his duty, and that the injury occurred in Oklahoma, by reason of the negligence of the defendant in operating its train, imperfectly stated a cause of action under the federal Employers' Liability Act, and, if the company was in doubt as to whether the action was brought under the state or federal statute, they should have filed a motion to make the petition more definite and certain, or to require the plaintiff to elect. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Owens, (1920) 78 Okla. 50, 186 Pac. 1092.

Replication.—If a declaration in an action in a state court shows a common law action for negligence, a replication showing an action under this act would be a departure. Carpenter v. Central Vermont R. Co., (Vt. 1919) 107 Atl. 569.

b. Particular Allegations (p. 1301)

Negligence.—Some specific act of negligence must be alleged and proved. Nanfito v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., (1919) 103 Neb. 577, 173 N. W. 575.

Conscious suffering.—Where the petition failed to allege that the plaintiff ever recovered consciousness after receiving the injury, and failed to state how long he survived after receiving said injury, and failed to state that the deceased suffered intense pain, it was held that it did not state sufficient allegations to predicate a cause of action to recover for conscious pain and suffering between the time of the injury and the time of the death of the deceased. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Owens, (1920) 78 Okla. 50, 186 Pac. 1092.

Death.—A declaration in an action for damages for alleged wrongful death, brought under the federal Employers' Liability Act, which in each of its two counts sets forth several charges of negligence, and then alleges that, by reason of all the matters and things therein previously set forth, the plaintiff's decedent came to his death, sufficiently states causal connection between the acts of negligence and the injury complained of. Mills v. Virginian R. Co., (W. Va. 1920) 102 S. E. 604.

4. Practice and Procedure

c. Jury of Less than Twelve (p. 1313)

Verdict by three-fourths of jury.—To same effect as original annotation, see St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Fraser, (1919) 75 Okla. 265, 183 Pac. 478.

e. Form of Verdict (p. 1317)

Apportioning damages.—The verdict in an action for death by wrongful act may apportion the damages among the widow and minor children of the decedent. Lusk v. Bandy, (1919) 78 Okla. 108, 184 Pac. 144.

5. Evidence

b. Proof of Negligence (p. 1318)

Visible connection between injury and negligence charged.—Proof of negligence is not sufficient unless the evidence discloses an open and visible connection between the injury and negligence charged as a reasonable and probable result therefrom. The plaintiff must recover upon proof, not upon conjecture or surmise. Watkins v. Hustis, (N. H. 1919) 109 Atl. 713.

Section hand walking along track by direction of foreman.—A member of a gang of section men going for a pail of water, on starting in a particular direction, was called back by the foreman because he could not get through in the direction in which he had started, whereupon he went in the direction indicated along the railroad track, and was afterwards struck by an engine. It was held not to constitute negligence on the part of the defendant company. Tsiampas v. Union Pac. R. Co., (Neb. 1920) 176 N. W. 366.

Evidence held insufficient.—In Erie R. Co. v. Hansen, (C. C. A. 3d Cir. 1919) 260 Fed. 100, 171 C. C. A. 136, it was held that the evidence was insufficient to establish that the accident was due to the negligence of the employer.

In Mullin v. Louisville, etc., R. Co., (C. C. A. 5th Cir. 1919) 261 Fed. 156, it was held that a verdict for the defendant was properly directed because of insufficiency of evidence of its negligence.

d. Presumptions (p. 1320)

Under state statute as to proof of injury.

—The case cited to the original annotation was reversed by the United States Supreme Court in New Orleans, etc., R. Co. v. Scarlet, (1919) 249 U. S. 528, 39 S. Ct. 369, 63 U. S. (L. ed.) 752, it being there held that the prima facie statute of Mississippi did not apply to a case brought under the federal Employers' Liability Act. See to the same effect Yazoo, etc., R. Co. v. Mullins, (1919) 249 U. S. 531, 39 S. Ct. 368, 63 U. S. (L. ed.) 754, reversing (1917) 115 Miss. 343, 76 So. 147; New Orleans, etc., R. Co. v. Harris, (1918) 247 U. S. 367, 38 S. Ct. 535, 62 U. S. (L. ed.) 1167; New Orleans, etc., R. Co. v. Hanna, (1918) 118 Miss. 40, 78 So. 953; New Orleans, etc., R. Co. v. Scarlet, (1919) 120 Miss. 665, 83 So. 1; Yazoo, etc., R. Co. v. Mullins, (1919) 120 Miss. 662, 83 So. 1.

Where an injury results from a defective appliance, not covered by the Safety Appliance Act, in order to establish negligence it is necessary to prove the defect and notice to the employer, and a state statute relating to personal injury actions against railroads and providing that when a defect in an appliance by which an employee is injured is proved, negligence is presumed, has no application. Kent v. Erie R. Co., (1920) 228 N. Y. 94, 126 N. E. 646 (reversing (1917) 181 App. Div. 969, 167 N. Y. S. 1108), wherein the court said:

"Both parties being engaged in interstate commerce, their respective rights and liabilities were governed by the federal Employers' Liability Act, and section 64 of the Railroad Law of the state of New York (Cons. Laws, c. 49) had no application whatever. New Orleans & Northeastern R. R. Co. v. Harris, 247 U. S. 367, 38 Sup. Ct. 535, 62 L. Ed. 1167; New Orleans & Northeastern R. R. Co. v. Scarlet, 249 U. S. 528, 39 Sup. Ct. 369, 63 L. Ed. 752; Yazoo & Mississippi Valley R. R. Co. v. Mullins, 249 U. S. 531, 39 Sup. Ct. 368, 63 L. Ed. 754; Louisville & N. R. R. Co. v. Rhoda, 238 U. S. 608, 35 Sup. Ct. 662, 59 L. Ed. 1487. Notwithstanding that fact, the trial court instructed the jury that the giving way of the handhold furnished, under that section, prima facie evidence of the defendant's negligence. I am of the opinion this was error, and necessitates a reversal of the judgment."

e. Burden of Proof (p. 1321)

Employee engaged in interstate commerce.—Where part of an employee's duties are connected with interstate commerce and part of them are not, if the employer seeks to avoid liability under a state Workmen's Compensation Act on the ground the employee was engaged in interstate commerce at the time of his injury, and the liability, if any, is under the federal Employers' Liability Act, the burden is on the employer to show that the employee at the time of his injury was engaged in interstate commerce. Atchison, etc., R. Co. v. Industrial Commission, (1919) 290 Ill. 590, 125 N. E. 380. To same effect, see Knorr v. New Jersey Cent. R. Co., (Pa. 1920) 110 Atl. 797; Polk v. Philadelphia, etc., R. Co., (1920) 266 Pa. St. 335, 109 Atl. 627; Di Donato v. Philadelphia, etc., R. Co., (1920) 266 Pa. St. 412, 109 Atl. 627, wherein the court said: "Plaintiff made out a prima facie case by showing, inter alia, the employment, work, and accident in this state, and the burden is on defendant, who interposed the federal statute, to prove facts necessary to bring the case within its terms. While a state court can take judicial notice of an act of Congress, it cannot take such notice of facts necessary to bring a particular case within its provisions. The federal Employers' Liability Act, applicable to interstate commerce only, bears no analogy to the federal Bankruptcy Act, which is of general application. There is no presumption that the train a watchman at a local crossing was flagging when killed was an interstate train. It is not a matter governed by presumption, but by proof (Hench v. Penn. R. R. Co., 246 Pa. 1, 6, 91 Atl. 1056, L. R. A. 1915D, 557, Ann. Cas. 1916D, 230; and see Hancock v. Phila. & R. Ry. Co., 264 Pa. 220, 107 Atl. 735), the burden of which rests upon the party alleging it, here the defendant (Polk v. Philadelphia & R. Ry. Co., 109 Atl. 627, filed this term). This familiar rule of evidence is especially applicable here, otherwise plaintiff must prove a negative, to wit, that her husband was not killed while flagging an interstate train, and must do so when the evidence as to whether it was such or not is peculiarly within the knowledge of defendant. As the latter offered no evidence upon the question, that defense failed. It was its duty to individuate that particular act in which the deceased was engaged and show by competent evidence the train in question and that it was an interstate train, or at least that his act had some reasonably direct connection with such train. In Osborne v. Gray, 241 U. S. 16, 21, 36 Sup. Ct. 486, 487 (60 L. Ed. 865), the court, speaking through Mr. Justice Hughes, says:

"It is apparent that there was no evidence requiring the conclusion that the deceased was engaged in interstate commerce at the time of his injury, and we are asked to supply the deficiency by taking judicial notice that the cars came from without the state. This contention we are unable to sustain. The make-up of trains and the movement of cars are not matters which we may assume to know without evidence. . . . The defendants knew the actual movement of the cars, and failing to inform the court upon this point, cannot complain that they have been deprived of a federal right."

Negligence.—To the same effect as the original note see Watkins v. Hustis, (N. H. 1919) 109 Atl. 713, wherein the court said: "The federal legislation under which this suit is brought does not abrogate or qualify the common-law rule that in all actions for negligence the plaintiff has the burden of establishing the defendant's negligence and his resulting injury."

6. Damages

a. Recovery by Employee (p. 1322)

Measure of damages in general.—To same effect as original annotation, see Kinzell v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., (Idaho 1920) 190 Pac. 255; Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Briggs, (1919) 185 Ky. 676, 215 S. W. 529, holding that an instruction stating a rule but slightly variant from that of the federal courts was not prejudicial.

The measure of damages in an action by an injured employee against a carrier engaged in interstate commerce is such sum as will fully and fairly compensate him for his pain and suffering, his mental anguish, the bodily injury sustained by him, his pecuniary loss, his loss of power and capacity to work, and its effect upon his future; and on these questions evidence of the wages he was receiving at the time he was injured, and what he should have been receiving in the same employment at the time of the trial, was properly submitted to the jury. Keathley v. Chesapeake, etc., R. Co., (W. Va. 1920) 102 S. E. 244.

Disfigurement.—Shame and humiliation because of disfigurement may be an element in the recovery of damages for the injury. Erie R. Co. v. Collins, (1920) 253 U. S. 77, 40 S. Ct. 450, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1919) 259 Fed. 172, 170 C. C. A. 240.

Instruction as to future effects of injury.—To the same effect as the original annotation see Moore v. Grand Trunk R. Co., (Vt. 1919) 108 Atl. 334, wherein the court said: "The evidence showed that the nature and extent of plaintiff's injuries, his past improvement, and his condition at the time of the trial, were such as to render it practically impossible to tell with any great degree of certainty the length of time before complete recovery. Mere conjecture and speculation can form no basis for prospective damages. But the expert evidence tended to show the probable future progress of the improvement, and (in the opinion of one of the witnesses) that a year's time was too short in which to make full recovery. The evidence furnished a reasonable basis for the belief that for a year, at least, the plaintiff's inability to work, and his pain and suffering, would continue. The consideration of the jury in this respect was, by the charge, expressly confined to the evidence. The plaintiff was entitled to have the question submitted to the jury, and we see no error in the instructions given."

b. Actions for Death

(1) In General (p. 1323)

Measure of damages generally.—To same effect as first paragraph of original annotation, see Hines v. Mills, (Tex. Civ. App. 1920) 218 S. W. 777.

Conscious suffering.—Damages for the conscious suffering of the intestate may be recovered. McAdoo v. McCoy, (Tex. Civ. App. 1919) 215 S. W. 870; Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Owens, (1920) 78 Okla. 50, 186 Pac. 1092.

Effect of marriage of child.—A minor daughter who marries four months after the death of her father is entitled to some recovery for damages up to the time of her marriage. Davis v. Wight, (Tex. Civ. App. 1920) 218 S. W. 26.

(2) Pecuniary Loss (p. 1325)

Interest.—To the same effect as the original annotation, see Bennett v. Atchison, etc., R. Co., (Ia. 1919) 174 N. W. 805, wherein the court said: "In no event is the plaintiff entitled to recover interest on her unliquidated demands before judgment is entered on those demands. If there is such a thing as an unliquidated demand, the claim made under this statute is essentially so. The amount plaintiff, as widow, is entitled to recover in such sum as the jury finds, when it comes to consider the whole case, is fair compensation to the plaintiff for the pecuniary loss which she sustains by the death of her husband, and that is measured by a review of the whole field of probabilities, involving the expectancy of the husband, the expectancy of the wife, the husband's earning capacity and ability to contribute, the probable amount he would contribute, the times when such contributions would be made, the amount and such other facts as tended to show the probable pecuniary loss to the wife as a proximate result of the husband's death. It will be noted that the federal Employers' Liability Act makes no provision for interest. The authorities on the question here submitted are but few. It was directly held that interest is not allowable in Norton v. Erie Ry. Co., reported in 163 App. Div. 468, 148 N. Y. Supp. 771. In that case it was said, in substance, that the federal statute is paramount and exclusive, and the defendant's liability may not be extended by the provisions of the state statute. No provision is made in the federal act for adding such interest to the verdict. The order disallowing interest was affirmed. See Grow v. Oregon Short Line, first reported in 44 Utah 160, 138 Pac. 398, Ann. Cas. 1915B, 481, and again in 47 Utah 26, 150 Pac. 970. In the last case the question of allowing interest on a verdict was considered, and the right denied. The time between the death and the rendition of the verdict was 4½ years. Following the rule that interest is not allowable on unliquidated demands, until reduced to judgment, the action of the court in refusing to allow interest before judgment must be and is affirmed."

c. Recovery by Widow and Children

(1) In General (p. 1327)

Measure of damages generally.—If the widow has been deprived of a reasonable expectancy of pecuniary benefit by her husband's death, she is entitled to compensation. The amount is largely in the discretion of the jury. Bennett v. Atchison, etc., R. Co., (Ia. 1919) 174 N. W. 798, wherein the court said: "We do not speak of the legal duty of deceased to support his wife in the sense that such is a measure independent of pecuniary benefit. The legal duty is not the sole test. There must appear some reasonable expectation of pecuniary assistance or support of which plaintiff has been deprived. . . . It is suggested because of the absence of evidence, as argued by appellant, that the evidence does not show that deceased had, or ever would, contribute to his wife's support. We think the inference may be properly drawn that there is a reasonable expectation of pecuniary benefit from the relation of husband and wife. Under such circumstances, ordinarily, deceased would feel impelled by relationship to render service had he lived. It has been held that where it is shown there were brothers and sisters of deceased who were of tender age, and without estate, this presents a question for the jury as to whether or not they were dependent upon deceased employee. . . . We held in McCullough v. Railway, 160 Iowa 524-529, 142 N. W. 67, 47 L. R. A. (N. S.) 23, that substantial damages will be presumed in favor of the widow and children without special averment and proof other than a showing of the pecuniary value of the life of decedent to his family, and the method of arriving at such value is stated in the McCullough Case, 160 Iowa at page 532, 142 N. W. 67, 47 L. R. A. (N. S.) 23. See also Bruckshaw v. Railway, 173 Iowa 207-215, 155 N. W. 273; Chesapeake, etc., Ry. v. Kelly, 241 U. S. 485-491, 36 S. Ct. 630, 60 U. S. (L. ed.) 1117, L. R. A. 1917F 367. In the last case it was said that this question, like other questions of procedure and evidence, is to be determined according to the law of the forum. We think the evidence and the situation shown here was such that there was a basis in the evidence for the consideration of the jury in awarding compensation, notwithstanding the paucity of evidence. As said in the McCullough Case, evidence cannot be very definite as to the actual amount of pecuniary loss."

7. Questions for Court and Jury (p. 1334)

Employee engaged in interstate commerce.—In the trial of a cause arising under the federal Employers' Liability and Safety Appliance Acts, when there is testimony raising an issue of fact on the question as to whether or not the defendant railway company was at the time engaged in interstate commerce and whether or not the plaintiff at the time of the injury was so engaged in interstate commerce, it becomes a question to be submitted to the jury for their determination. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Fraser, (1919) 75 Okla. 265, 183 Pac. 478.

Negligence of carrier.—In an action for personal injuries under the federal Employers' Liability Act, where the deceased, a boy 16 years of age, while employed as a section man upon the railway of the carrier, was injured by attempting to board a moving freight train upon his return from work, it was held, under the evidence, that the question of the negligence of the carrier in directing or ordering, through its section foreman, the deceased so to do, and of the contributory negligence of and the assumption of the risk by the deceased, were questions of fact for the jury. Schantz v. Northern Pac. R. Co., (N. D. 1919) 173 N. W. 556.

Fellow servant as vice principal.—The question whether a fellow servant was such a vice principal that his order to the plaintiff to perform a certain act, which caused the plaintiff's injury, was binding on him, is a question of fact for the jury. Pittsburgh, etc., R. Co. v. Cole, (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1919) 260 Fed. 357, 171 C. C. A. 223, certiorari denied (1919) 250 U. S. 671, 40 S. Ct. 15, 63 U. S. (L. ed.) 1199.

Safety of place of work.—In an action for personal injuries by a brakeman against a railroad company, the question whether the company furnished him a safe place in which to work is one for the jury. Virginian R. Co. v. Halstead, (C. C. A. 4th Cir. 1919) 258 Fed. 428, 169 C. C. A. 444.

8. Appeal and Error (p. 1336)

Harmless error as to applicability of statute.—Error in deducing that a case was not within the statute is harmless where the right of recovery is the same whether the state law or the federal statute applies. Stevens v. Hines, (Wash. 1920) 188 Pac. 917.

Trial on wrong theory.—"If a cause of action was not within the scope of the act, but was tried as though it were, it must be retried unless the rules of law, affecting liability and as established by the courts of the state, are the same as those which obtain under the federal statute, or are less favorable to the party against whom the verdict was given." Williams v. Schaff, (Mo. 1920) 222 S. W. 412.

Questions not raised below.—That the trial was had on the theory of common-law liability when the case is within the Act cannot be raised for the first time on appeal. Ford v. Dickinson, (Mo. 1919) 217 S. W. 294.

Review of evidence.—In reviewing a verdict for the plaintiff his testimony as to the negligence of the defendant will be taken as true. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Fraser, (1919) 75 Okla. 265, 183 Pac. 478.

Verdict defective in part—Modification.—Where a verdict in a damage suit for the death of an employee of a railroad company under the federal Employers' Liability Act itemizes the damages at $10,000 for pecuniary loss and $5,000 for conscious pain and suffering, and the petition fails to state a cause of action for conscious pain and suffering, but the item for pecuniary loss is proper, the court being able to separate the legal from the illegal amount of the verdicts, the cause will be modified and affirmed for the amount of the verdict that was proper. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Owens, (1920) 78 Okla. 50, 186 Pac. 1092.

Reversal of the entire judgment is necessary where the damages of several beneficiaries are fixed but damages are erroneously denied to another beneficiary. Davis v. Wight, (Tex. Civ. App. 1920) 218 S. W. 26.

I. CONSTRUCTION OF SECTION (p. 1340)

In general.—Where it is shown that the railroad company was guilty of negligence having a causal relation to the injury, contributory negligence upon the part of the plaintiff will not be a bar to a recovery, although the injuries could have been avoided by the exercise of ordinary care upon the part of the plaintiff. Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Hood, 149 Ga. 829, 102 S. E. 521.

II. CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE

1. In General (p. 1342)

Necessity and effect of pleading contributory negligence.—An averment in plaintiff's pleading that he was in the exercise of due care and diligence is a necessary averment in a declaration based on an action at common law, but it would be out of place and mere surplusage in a declaration based on the federal Employers' Liability Act, under which contributory negligence does not defeat the action but goes only to the diminution of plaintiff's damages, and as to which the burden is placed on the defendant. Carpenter v. Central Vermont R. Co., (Vt. 1919) 107 Atl. 569.

2. Effect on Amount of Damages (p. 1344)

Doctrine as to effect of contributory negligence in general.—To same effect as original annotation, see Central R. Co. v. Sharkey, (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1919) 259 Fed. 144, 170 C. C. A. 212; Lehigh Valley R. Co. v. Scanlon, (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1919) 259 Fed. 137, 170 C. C. A. 205; Kansas City Southern R. Co. v. Sparks, (Ark. 1920) 222 S. W. 724; Werner v. Southern R. Co., (Cal. App. 1920) 185 Pac. 1016; Kenyon v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., (Ia. 1919) 173 N. W. 44; Bennett v. Atchison, etc., R. Co., (Ia. 1919) 174 N. W. 798; Pruitt v. Norfolk Western R. Co., (Ky. 1920) 221 S. W. 552; Childers v. Northern Pac. R. Co., (Mo. App. 1920) 218 S. W. 441; Lock v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., (Mo. 1920) 219 S. W. 919; Manes v. St. Louis-San Francisco R. Co., (Mo. App. 1920) 220 S. W. 14; Reed v. Director General of Railroads, (Pa. 1920) 110 Atl. 254; McDowell v. Southern R. Co., (S. C. 1920) 102 S. E. 639; Kalahian v. Hines, (Wis. 1920) 177 N. W. 602.

3. Effect of Violation of Safety Appliance Acts (p. 1346)

General principles.—To the same effect as the original annotation see Thornton v. Minneapolis, etc., R. Co., (Ia. 1919) 175 N. W. 71; Thayer v. Denver, etc., R. Co., (1919) 25 N. M. 559, 185 Pac. 542; McAdoo v. McCoy, (Tex. Civ. App. 1919) 215 S. W. 870.

Judicial notice of safety appliance standards of Interstate Commerce Commission will be taken up by the courts. Goulette v. Grand Trunk R. Co., (Vt. 1919) 107 Atl. 118.

4. Evidence (p. 1348)

Burden of proof.—To the same effect as the original annotation see Crugley v. Grand Trunk R. Co., (N. H. 1919) 108 Atl. 293.

In Fisher v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., (1919) 290 Ill. 49, 124 N. E. 831, wherein it was held that the burden of proof was on the defendant to prove contributory negligence, the court said:

"It is contended that the court erred in instructing the jury, that, if the defendant relies upon the defense of contributory negligence, the burden is upon it to establish that defense by a preponderance of the evidence. The objections made to the instruction are that the requirement to establish the defense of contributory negligence imposed upon the plaintiff in error too high a degree of proof, and that it withdrew from it the benefit of facts put in evidence by the plaintiff tending to show negligence on the part of Fisher. To establish by a preponderance of the evidence is only to prove by a preponderance of the evidence, and would not be understood by the jury in any different sense."

Sufficiency.—In Knowles v. Western, etc., R. Co., (Ga. App. 1919) 100 S. E. 640, the court said: "In this case an interstate carrier was sued for personal injuries under the federal Employers' Liability Act. . . . The evidence discloses that on a rainy night the plaintiff was walking, with a lighted lantern, beside a railroad track, and fell into a ditch or underpass, with which he was familiar and was thus injured. The plaintiff testifies that he was engrossed with his duty and for the moment did not realize the danger or the proximity of the underpass. The rule announced in the case of King v. S. A. L. Ry., 1 Ga. App. 88, 58 S. E. 252, cannot be extended so as to apply to this case. The evidence here does not show that any negligence of the defendant caused the injury, and, on the other hand, the evidence shows that the injury was the result of the plaintiff's own negligence and lack of ordinary care. . . . It may be further stated that the evidence discloses that there was a safe way around the place where plaintiff was injured, and that this way was known to him."

5. Instructions to Jury (p. 1349)

Harmless charge.—A charge that contributory negligence would prevent a recovery under the federal Employers' Liability Act could not have prejudiced the defendants, being more favorable to them than they were entitled to. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Ward, (1920) 252 U. S. 18, 40 S. Ct. 275, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (Okla. 1918) 173 Pac. 212.

Contributory negligence brought into case through evidence.—In an action under this Act it is proper for the trial judge to instruct the jury regarding the issue of contributory negligence where that issue is brought into the case through the evidence, although not raised by the pleadings. Pittsburgh, etc., R. Co. v. Cole, (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1919) 260 Fed. 357, 171 C. C. A. 223, certiorari denied (1919) 250 U. S. 671, 40 S. Ct. 15, 63 U. S. (L. ed.) 1199.

Right of defendant to complain.—If the instructions asked by the plaintiff and given stake his case on a finding that he was free from contributory negligence, the defendant, who asks no instructions, cannot complain of the failure to submit the question of contributory negligence as reducing damages. Lafaver v. Pryor, (Mo. App. 1920) 218 S. W. 970.

Instruction as to diminution of damages approved.—In Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Smith, (Tex. 1920) 222 S. W. 1099, the following instruction as to diminution of damages was held to be sufficient in the absence of a specific request: "If you find that plaintiff was injured as alleged in his petition, and the proximate cause thereof was the concurring negligence, if any, of the plaintiff and defendant under the issues hereinbefore submitted for your finding, then in answer to this question you will diminish your finding on this issue in proportion to the amount of negligence attributable to plaintiff."

Cole*, (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1919) 260 Fed. 357, 171 C. C. A. 223, certiorari denied (1919) 250 U. S. 671, 40 S. Ct. 15, 63 U. S. (L. ed.) 1199.

I. IN GENERAL (p. 1352)

Construction generally.—To same effect as first paragraph of original annotation, see Thayer v. Denver, etc., R. Co., (1919) 25 N. M. 559, 185 Pac. 542.

Effect limited to terms of Act.—To the same effect as the original annotation, see Kansas City Southern R. Co. v. Sparks, (Ark. 1920) 222 S. W. 724; Thornton v. Minneapolis, etc., R. Co., (Ia. 1919) 175 N. W. 71; Coons v. Louisville, etc., R. Co., (1919) 185 Ky. 741, 215 S. W. 946; Pruitt v. Norfolk & Western R. Co., (Ky. 1920) 221 S. W. 552; Lusk v. Bandy, (1919) 76 Okla. 108, 184 Pac. 144; Curtis v. Erie R. Co., (Pa. 1920) 109 Atl. 871; McAdoo v. McCoy, (Tex. Civ. App. 1919) 215 S. W. 870; Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Clement, (Tex. Civ. App. 1920) 220 S. W. 407; Hines v. Bannon, (Tex. Civ. App. 1920) 221 S. W. 684.

Assumption of risk is a defense to which a defendant sued under the federal Employers' Liability Act is entitled, where the injury was caused otherwise than by the violation of some statute enacted to promote the safety of employees. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Ward, (1920) 252 U. S. 18, 40 S. Ct. 275, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (Okla. 1918) 173 Pac. 212.

In Dutrey v. Philadelphia, etc., R. Co., (1919) 265 Pa. St. 215, 108 Atl. 620, the court said: "Except, then, as to the injuries resulting from the violation of statutes, the common-law doctrine of assumption of risk still remains as a complete defense in an action under this statute, and is applicable to a case such as presented by the facts now before us. The employe assumes, as a risk of his employment, such dangers as are normally and necessarily incident to his occupation, and a workman of mature years is taken to assume them whether he is aware of their existence or not; but risks of another sort, not naturally incident to the occupation, may arise out of the failure of the employer to exercise due care. They are the unusual, extraordinary, and unexpected acts, and the employe is not to be treated as assuming such risks until he becomes aware of their existence, unless the act or risk is so obvious that an ordinarily prudent person would have observed and appreciated them."

Pleading.—To the same effect as the original annotation see Lewis v. Texas, etc., R. Co., (1920) 146 La. 227, 83 So. 535, wherein the court said: "Defendant has argued on this hearing that the deceased assumed the risks of his employment, and that therefore his widow cannot recover damages. The federal Employers' Liability Act provides for the assumption of 'extraordinary risks incident to his (employee's) employment,' but the record does not disclose that Lewis assumed any extraordinary risks in boarding the motorcar, under the direction of his employers, for the purpose of being taken back to the boarding cars of the defendant company, where he was required to return each night. But defendant failed to plead assumption of risk on the part of Lewis; and as this is a special defense, which has to be specially pleaded, it cannot be heard on the trial of the case at this time, particularly on an application for rehearing, when it was not pleaded or argued in the trial court or on the former hearing of the case in this court."

II. PRINCIPLES GENERALLY AS TO ASSUMPTION OF RISK

1. In General (p. 1355)

Rule as to usual and ordinary risks.—To same effect as original annotation, see Erie R. Co. v. Collins, (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1919) 259 Fed. 172, 170 C. C. A. 240, affirming (W. D. N. Y. 1917) 245 Fed. 811; Leary v. New York Cent. R. Co., (Mass. 1920) 126 N. E. 792.

The servant assumes all the risks of his employment which are known to him, or which could have been known by the exercise of ordinary care of a person of reasonable prudence and diligence in like circumstances. Risks not naturally incident to the occupation, but which arise from the negligence of the master, are not assumed by the servant until he becomes aware of such negligence and of the risks arising therefrom, unless the negligence and risk are so apparent and obvious that an ordinary and careful person would observe the one and appreciate the other. Lusk v. Bandy, (1919) 76 Okla. 108, 184 Pac. 144.

Unusual or extraordinary risks.—So far as extraordinary hazards are concerned, an interstate railway employee may assume that the employer and his agents have exercised proper care with respect to his safety until notified to the contrary, unless the want of care and the dangers arising from it are so obvious that an ordinarily careful person, under the circumstances, would observe and appreciate them. Chicago, etc. v. R. Co. v. Ward, (1920) 252 U. S. 18, 40 S. Ct. 275, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (Okla. 1918) 173 Pac. 212, wherein it was held that a switchman riding on a cut of freight cars which he was to check by applying a brake when these cars should be cut off from the engine does not assume the risk of sudden precipitation from the front end of a car by the abrupt checking resulting from the failure of the engine foreman to make the disconnection at the proper time.

An instruction on behalf of an interstate employee intended to negative assumption by him of an extraordinary risk and hazard, but omitting the proviso "unless open and apparent," is not erroneous where such risk and hazard, by negligence of the defendant, was suddenly created, and he did not in fact see the danger, and had the right to assume and did assume he would not be subjected to such extraordinary danger as resulted in his injury. Keathley v. Chesapeake, etc., R. Co., (W. Va. 1920) 102 S. E. 244.

Distinction between assumed risk and contributory negligence.—To same effect as original annotation, see Anzolotti v. McAdoo, (S. D. N. Y. 1919) 262 Fed. 568.

When defense may be pleaded.—In order to avail himself of the defense of assumption of risk the employer must show that the dangers arose either from continuing in the discharge of the work, or from an omission by the employee to do something which was not a part of the discharge of his duties. Accordingly, the defense may not be pleaded where it does not appear that the employee had no way of discharging his duties other than the dangerous one he adopted. In such case the question presented is one of contributory negligence rather than assumption of risk. Anzolotti v. McAdoo, (S. D. N. Y. 1919) 262 Fed. 568.

Brake beams left scattered in a switch yard do not, as to a switch tender, constitute a risk ordinarily incident to the employment, "and he had a right to assume that the appellant had exercised proper care with respect to providing a reasonably safe place for him to work, free from any obstacles which would be likely to cause him injury. In other words, as the statute has been construed by the courts, an employee cannot be treated as having assumed a risk until he becomes aware of the defect or obstruction and of the risk arising from it, unless it is so obvious that an ordinarily prudent person under similar circumstances would have observed it." Lock v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., (Mo. 1920) 219 S. W. 919.

Known defects in platform.—A station employee who knew of defects in a cement walk leading to the baggage room, and who undertook to move a truck loaded with trunks over that walk when the lights were turned off, assumed the risk of injury from a trunk falling from the truck. Hines v. Wicks, (Tex. Civ. App. 1920) 220 S. W. 581.

2. Knowledge as Affecting (p. 1356)

Actual knowledge.—"The servant does not assume any risks or dangers arising from the negligence of the master of which he has no knowledge; but he does assume the risks and dangers caused by the master's negligence of which he had prior knowledge." Hines v. Bannon, (Tex. Civ. App. 1920) 221 S. W. 684, holding that risk of injury from known defects in floor of "dirt spreader" were assumed by employee.

Appliances or place of work not safe.—To same effect as original annotation, see Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Nelson, (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1919) 259 Fed. 156, 170 C. C. A. 224.

In Hatton v. New York, etc., R. Co., (C. C. A. 1st Cir. 1919) 261 Fed. 667, it appeared that the plaintiff's decedent, an experienced trainman, was injured while unloading a barrel from a freight car. A gangplank had been placed between the car and the station platform, and the barrel was being placed upon it, when the end of the gangplank on the platform slipped on some ice, causing the plaintiff's decedent to fall and sustain the injuries from which he later died. It was shown that he had knowledge of the presence of the ice on the platform and had been warned by a fellow servant that the plank was in an insecure position. It was held that he had assumed the risk and that there could be no recovery for his injury.

Knowledge of rules.—The rules and regulations of a railroad company, formulated for the government or control of their employees, are only operative upon such of the employees as have received notice thereof, or who are chargeable with knowledge of their existence. Anderson v. Director General of Railroads, (N. J. 1920) 110 Atl. 829.

Risk of dangers arising from causes ab extra.—In Anderson v. Director General of Railroads, (N. J. 1920) 110 Atl. 829, it appeared that plaintiff's intestate, a conductor, while riding on the step of an engine in the yard, was killed when another engine collided with it. The contention of the defendant was that the step of the engine upon which the decedent stood at the time of the accident was a place of known danger, and that, therefore, he assumed all the risks incident to that position. The court, answering this contention, said: "We content ourselves with repeating what was said by the Supreme Court in the case of Brackney v. Public Service Corporation, 77 N. J. Law, 1, 71 Atl. 149, where the plaintiff had taken up his position on the front platform of a trolley car, and was injured by a collision between it and a passing vehicle:

"A person, under such circumstances, assumes such risks as are incident to the ordinary operation of the car, and not risk of dangers arising from causes ab extra.”

Well known dangerous yard movement.—A member of a train crew assumes the risk arising from a well known dangerous yard movement. Reed v. Director General of Railroads, (Pa. 1920) 110 Atl. 254, where the court said:

“Taking the evidence in the light most favorable to plaintiff, as of course we must do, we find the facts to be as follows: Decedent was a member of a crew which had brought a train from South Bethlehem to Philadelphia. Some of the cars contained goods shipped in interstate commerce. When all the cars were released at their appropriate places, the engine went back to get the caboose, for the purpose of taking it to the point where it was to stay until wanted for further traffic, and then itself go to the round-house, where it remained until again needed. This movement was through defendant's yard, where there were a number of tracks, upon which cars and locomotives were being shifted constantly. Through the yard ran also the main passenger tracks of defendant, and, at the points where other tracks crossed over or connected therewith, derailing devices had been wisely installed for the purpose of preventing locomotives and cars using the other tracks from running onto or over the passenger tracks, at a time when passenger trains were standing or moving thereon, and thereby possibly causing collision and serious loss of life.

“The engine and caboose which had reached South Bethlehem were moving over a track which had one of those derailing devices where it connected with the passenger tracks. The caboose being in front of the locomotive, the engineer could not see the device when operating the engine from his cab, and hence decedent was directed to and did locate himself on the front of the caboose, with a duty to signal the engineer in time for him to safely stop if the derailing device was set against further passage. It was so set on this occasion, but either through the negligence of decedent himself, or of the engineer in not noticing or heeding the signaling of decedent, the latter did not stop in time, the caboose was derailed, and decedent was crushed to death between it and cars on an adjoining track. In considering the present question we also assume the negligence was that of the engineer, and not of decedent. . . . In the present case decedent knew of the risks he assumed in the movement of the engine and caboose through the yard; he knew the place was a dangerous one; he knew that if he did not warn the engineer in time, or if the latter did not see or heed the signals, the engine and caboose would be derailed, a collision with engines or cars on other tracks was probable, and he might be injured or killed as a result thereof. In other words, he was engaged in a well-known dangerous yard movement; and the Supreme Court of the United States, which is, of course, the final arbiter in construing the federal Employers' Liability Act, has repeatedly held that under such circumstances the person injured assumes the ordinary risks of his employment, and no recovery can be had if injury or death results therefrom.”

3. Acts of Master or Superior as Affecting (p. 1357)

Assurance of safety by foreman held to prevent assumption by trucker of risk of injury from defect in truck which he was using to unload freight car. Cox v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co., (Tex. 1920) 222 S. W. 964.

4. Negligence of Employer (p. 1359)

Rule stated.—The risks which a servant may incur in any employment fall naturally into one or the other of two classes: First, the ordinary risks of the service, that is, those which are not created by the master's negligence and which remain after he has used due care to remove them; and, second, the extraordinary risks or those which are created by the master's negligence. It is probably a universal rule that the servant merely by entering the service of the master assumes the ordinary risks of the service, and if he is injured solely because of them he cannot recover. But at common law and under the federal Employers' Liability Act risks created by the master's negligence are not assumed by the servant unless with an actual or constructive knowledge thereof and appreciation of the danger therefrom he voluntarily enters or continues in the employment of the master. Yazoo, etc., R. Co. v. Dees, (Miss. 1920) 83 So. 613.

An employee of a railroad company, except in cases involving violation by the carrier of the statute enacted for the safety of employees, assumes the ordinary risks and hazards of his particular employment, and also those defects and risks which are known to him, or which are plainly observable, although due to the master's negligence. Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Hood, (Ga. App. 1920) 102 S. E. 133.

5. Negligence of Fellow Servant (p. 1361)

Rule stated.—To same effect as original annotation, see Lehigh Valley R. Co. v. Scanlon, (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1919) 259 Fed. 137, 170 C. C. A. 205.

The federal Employers' Liability Act places a coemployee's negligence, when it is the ground of the action, in the same relation as that of the employer upon the matter of the assumption of risk. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Ward, (1920) 252 U. S. 18, 40 S. Ct. 275, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (Okla. 1918) 173 Pac. 212.

In Anderson v. Director General of Railroads, (N. J. 1920) 110 Atl. 829, the court said “By the first section of the federal act a right of action is conferred by the injury or death of the employé ‘resulting in whole or in part from the negligence of any of the employes of the carrier.' Although section 4 of the act recognizes the common-law doctrine of assumed risk as still existent, with certain expressed limitations based upon statutory duties imposed upon the employer, and although that doctrine included the proposition that an employé assumed the risk of injury resulting from the negligent act of a fellow servant, yet the federal statute, having expressly declared that an action will lie where the injury or death of the employé has resulted from the negligence of a fellow servant, has also declared, by necessary implication, that the negligence of a fellow servant shall not constitute a defense to such action. To hold, therefore, that an injury resulting from the negligence of a fellow servant is one of the risks assumed by an employé, and that the carrier may set up that assumption in bar of the action, would be, in legal effect, to strike out the express provision of the act just recited."

In San Pedro, etc., R. Co. v. Brown, (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1919) 258 Fed. 806, 170 C. C. A. 100, 8 A. L. R. 865, the court commenting on the rule stated in the original annotation said:

"It is also argued that Brown must be held to have assumed the risk of the injury he sustained as a result of his reliance on his coemployé and the failure of his coemployé to place the flag and so protect him. The point is based upon a portion of the charge of the lower court to the effect that Brown did not assume the risks that were attendant upon the negligence of a fellow servant.

"Clearly, under the act, the defense of assumption of risk is open to the carrier, except in actions brought under section 4, which provides that, in an action for damages for injury to an employé, 'such employé shall not be held to have assumed the risk of his employment in any case where the violation by such common carrier of any statute enacted for the safety of employes contributed to the injury or death of such employé.' Seaboard Air Line Ry. v. Horton, 233 U. S. 492, 34 Sup. Ct. 635, 58 L. Ed. 1062, L. R. A. 1915C, 1, Ann. Cas. 1915B, 475. But Brown was not injured by reason of any defect in the machinery, or by reason of any danger normally or necessarily incident to the occupation of inspecting cars. The accident would not have happened at all, but for the negligence of a fellow servant; and as to employers, while engaged in interstate commerce, the servant so engaged does not agree, as between himself and the carrier, to assume the risk of the negligence of his fellow servant. Watson v. St. Louis R. Co. (C. C.) 169 Fed. 950. In Boldt v. Penn. Ry., 245 U. S. 441, 38 Sup. Ct. 139, 62 L. Ed. 385, the court affirmed the action of the trial court in refusing to charge that 'the risk the employé now assumes, since the passage of the federal Employers' Liability Act, is the ordinary danger incident to his employment, which does not now include the assumption of risk incident to the negligence of defendant's officers, agents, or employes.' The opinion expressed was that the requested charge was erroneous, because the action there brought was not one within the provisions of section 4 of the act. But as far as we are advised it has never been held that in an action brought under the statute, where an employé trusts to another to do an act necessary for his safety, and he himself is not aware of the failure of such employé to do the act, and actually goes on with his work, relying upon the performance of the act by his fellow servant, and by reason of the negligence of the employé relied upon injury follows, the risk of such negligence on the part of the fellow servant is assumed by the injured man. In Illinois Central Railroad Co. v. Skaggs, 240 U. S. 66, 36 Sup. Ct. 249, 60 L. Ed. 528, upon a writ of error to review a judgment recovered under the federal Employers' Liability Act, it was argued that the railroad company could not be negligent to an employé whose failure of duty and neglect produced the dangerous condition. The court took it for granted that under the statute recovery by an employé for the consequences of actions exclusively his own could not be had. In qualifying the assumption, the court said in effect that where the injury to the employé does not result in whole or in part from the negligence of any of the agents or employes of the employing carrier, or by reason of any defect or insufficiency, due to its negligence, in its property or equipment, action would not lie. 'But,' continued the court, 'on the other hand, it cannot be said that there can be no recovery simply because the injured employé participated in the act which caused the injury. The injury must be whether there is neglect on the part of the employing carrier, and, if the injury to one employé resulted in whole or in part from the negligence of any of its other employes, it is liable under the express terms of the act; that is, the statute abolished the fellow-servant rule. If the injury was due to the neglect of a coemployé in the performance of his duty, that neglect must be attributed to the employer; and, if the injured employé was himself guilty of negligence contributing to the injury, the statute expressly provides that it shall not bar a recovery, but the damages shall be diminished by the jury in proportion to the amount of negligence attributable to such employé.' This decision we believe to be applicable to the facts in the case before us. Brown, pursuing the usual practice at Yermo, may have participated in the act of failing to put up the flag; but Ables' failure was, in large part, the direct cause of the damage. Brown relied upon Ables, and in reliance upon him went on to perform his duty. By the express terms of the statute the negligence of Ables may be attributed to the carrier."

Ordinarily the servant assumes the risks incident to the negligent acts of the officers, agents and fellow employees of the master, but he does not assume the risks of unusual and extraordinary acts of negligence. Dutrey v. Philadelphia, etc., R. Co., (1919) 265 Pa. St. 215, 108 Atl. 620, wherein the court said:

"Except, then, as to the injuries resulting from the violation of statutes, the common-law doctrine of assumption of risk still remains as a complete defense in an action under this statute, and is applicable to a case such as presented by the facts now before us. The employé assumes, as a risk of his employment, such dangers as are normally and necessarily incident to his occupation, and a workman of mature years is taken to assume them whether he is aware of their existence or not; but risks of another sort, not naturally incident to the occupation, may arise out of the failure of the employer to exercise due care. They are the usual, extraordinary, and unexpected acts, and the employé is not to be treated as assuming such risks until he becomes aware of their existence, unless the act or risk is so obvious that an ordinarily prudent person would have observed and appreciated them."

Known or obvious negligence.—Under the federal Employers' Liability Act, an employee does not assume a risk attributable to the negligence of his coemployees until he is aware of it, unless the risk is so obvious that an ordinarily prudent person in his situation would observe and appreciate it. Erie R. Co. v. Purucker, (1917) 244 U. S. 320, 37 S. Ct. 629, 61 U. S. (L. ed.) 1166; Central R. Co. v. Sharkey, (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1919) 259 Fed. 144; Erie R. Co. v. Collins, (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1919) 259 Fed. 172, 170 C. C. A. 240, affirming (W. D. N. Y. 1917) 245 Fed. 811.

"A workman does not assume until made aware of them, or until they become so obvious that an ordinarily prudent man would observe and appreciate them, the risk of the negligence of his employer, or of the employer's agents or servants, for such risks are not risks incidental to the employment." Delaware, etc., R. Co. v. Busse, (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1920) 263 Fed. 516.

"Under the federal Employers' Liability Act, a servant does not ordinarily assume the negligent acts of a fellow servant; but, if he becomes aware of the risk and danger arising therefrom and continued in the employment, or if the risk and dangers therefrom are so obvious that an ordinarily prudent person under the same circumstances would have observed the one and appreciated the other, then the employee assumes the risk arising from the negligent act of a co-employee." Ferris v. Jones, (1920) 78 Okla. 154, 189 Pac. 527.

"Except in cases specified in section 4, the employé assumes the risk due to the negligence of other employes if the danger is obvious as fully known to him." Curtis v. Erie R. Co., (Pa. 1920) 109 Atl. 871.

As to the negligence of a fellow servant there is under the federal law no assumption of risks until at least actual knowledge of such particular negligence is brought to the plaintiff's attention or it is so obvious that the ordinarily prudent person would observe it. Kalashian v. Hines, (Wis. 1920) 177 N. W. 602.

In Southern R. Co. v. Simmons, (Ga. App. 1919) 100 S. E. 5, the court said: "The plaintiff was a section hand in the employ of the defendant, and was injured while engaged in the work which he was employed to perform. The uncontradicted evidence shows that, as to the acts of negligence charged, the defendant used all ordinary care for the plaintiff's safety, unless it be that the foreman was negligent in ordering him to remove the lever car at the time and place he did; and, even though the defendant was negligent in this respect, such negligence was known to the plaintiff, and was plainly observable. He therefore assumed the risk occasioned thereby, and cannot recover."

III. PARTICULAR EMPLOYEES (p. 1362)

Section men, trackwalkers and repairmen.

—In Bennett v. Atchison, etc., R. Co. (la. 1919) 174 N. W. 798, the petition alleged, among other things, substantially that plaintiff's intestate, a trackwalker, was struck and killed on a portion of defendant's double tracks, which run through a deep cut, and on a curve, and that when two trains were passing in said cut, deceased could not avoid an approaching train on one track, except by crossing the adjacent track; that while deceased was engaged in his duties, and while his red signal flag was being displayed, defendant's employees in charge of a passenger train going west on the north track sounded its whistle, and deceased heard and observed said train, and to avoid it stepped over on or across the other track when, without warning or other signal, a freight train, running at high speed, and without sounding the whistle or giving any other warnings, and at the moment when deceased was avoiding danger from the passenger train, negligently ran upon and over said deceased, causing instant death; that the trainmen on the freight did, or could have seen deceased in his perilous condition in time to have prevented the death of deceased; that defendant was negligent in operating its said trains through said cut so nearly at the same time when the defendant should have or did know that the deceased was at said place, and in said cut at said time, and not avoiding said injuries. The answer is in general denial, and that deceased was guilty of contributory negligence, and, further, "that the alleged injuries for damages, on account of which this action was brought, arose out of the risks of the employment in which said deceased was engaged, of which risks he had full knowledge and notice, and that deceased, by entering and continuing in said employment, voluntarily assumed said risks." On an appeal from a judgment for the plaintiff, the court said: "The trial court did not instruct the jury on the question of assumption of risks, and of this appellant complains. Many cases are cited by both sides, both state and federal, on the question, and the question is argued as to whether the common-law rule of assumed risk, as applied to this case, is changed by the federal Employers' Liability Act. . . . Appellant contends that the rule is not changed, and they cite Jacobs v. Railway, 241 U. S. 229, 36 S. Ct. 588, 60 U. S. (L. ed.) 970; Baugham v. Railway, 241 U. S. 237, 36 S. Ct. 592, 60 U. S. (L. ed.) 977. As we understand appellee's argument, they admit that the common-law doctrine of assumption of risk remains in this class of cases the same as it did before the enactment of the Liability Act. But since the question has not been raised by the pleading, we deem it unnecessary to discuss this feature further. Appellant states its proposition that deceased assumed all risk incident to his work, and to the usual and proper operation of its trains. It seems to be conceded, as it must be, that deceased did not assume the added risk of the employer's negligence, unless he had knowledge of the improper operation of the train and conditions which created the danger, and that he had an appreciation of the danger attending such conditions. The burden is upon the defendant to allege and prove such assumption of risk. Scott v. Railway, 160 Iowa 306, 141 N. W. 1065; Taylor v. Railway, 170 N. W. 388-391; Martin v. Light Co., 131 Iowa 724-734-735, 106 N. W. 359. Appellee challenges the sufficiency of the answer to raise this question, and contends that the answer does not more than plead the assumption of the risk which inheres in the contract of hiring. In Shebeck v. Cracker Co., 120 Iowa 414-416, 94 N. W. 930, the answer alleged that the defective condition of the machinery was well known to the deceased, and that, knowing it, he remained in defendant's service without protest, and this was held to tender a plea of assumption of risk; that is, the added risk because of the employer's negligence. The substance of the answer at this point is that the alleged injuries arose out of the risks of the employment of which risks deceased had full notice and knowledge, and that deceased, by entering and continuing in said employment, voluntarily assumed said risks. There is nothing therein that deceased had knowledge, or appreciated the danger, the negligent manner in which defendants operated the train, or that he assumed such risk. It simply states that he assumed the risks of his employment, which is no more than saying that he assumed the ordinary risks. We think the case at this point is ruled by Martin v. Light Co., supra. See, also, Brums v. Brick Co., 152 Iowa 61, 130 N. W. 1083. The matter is discussed in the Martin Case, 131 Iowa, at pages 735 and 737, 106 N. W. 359. Furthermore, the evidence does not show that deceased assumed such additional risk."

A judgment for a section hand injured by a switch engine while clearing snow from a switch in a railroad yard was reversed in Tober v. Pere Marquette R. Co., (Mich. 1920) 177 N. W. 385, and a new trial granted for errors committed by the trial court in instructions to jury.

Engineer.—In an action under the federal Employers' Liability Act 1908 to recover damages for the death of a locomotive engineer who, while leaning out of the cab of his engine and looking backward, was struck by one of the steel girders of an overhead bridge, the special findings show that the clearance between the bridge and the side of the engine was approximately two feet; that deceased had been running an engine over the bridge for 15 years; that in the year previous to the accident he had run an engine of the same class over the same bridge 300 times, including 26 times in that month; that he had warned his fireman against the dangers in passing through the same kind of bridges; that the engine he was operating did not sway from side to side in going over the bridge more than was ordinarily the case in engines of similar type. Held, that the defendant was entitled to judgment on the findings, because they establish that deceased had assumed the risk. McDougall v. Atchison, etc., R. Co., (Kan. 1920) 186 Pac. 1028.

Workman in railroad repair shop.—Where in a railroad repair shop the master has prescribed no particular means whereby the workmen shall climb upon locomotives undergoing repair, but the workmen, when required to take off or replace parts of such engines, have always climbed thereon by means of projecting parts of the engine and cab, an experienced workman, accustomed repeatedly each day to climb upon engines by the use of such means, must rely upon his own judgment in selecting handholds, and assumes the risk thereof. And where an experienced workman in a railroad repair shop, in replacing a part of a dismantled locomotive, uses as a handhold in climbing thereon a loose pipe placed or stuck upon a projecting bolt, mistaking it for a stationary part of the engine, and falls and is injured by reason of its giving way, the placing of the loose pipe in such position by a fellow servant of the injured workman does not constitute actionable negligence, where the circumstances are such as to require the injured workman to rely upon his own judgment in the means employed in climbing upon the engine, and where the risk of injury therefrom has been assumed by him. Davis v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., (Neb. 1920) 177 N. W. 181.

Switchmen.—A switchman does not assume the risk of the light in switch lamps going out because employees charged with the duty of filling the lamps with oil neglected to perform that duty. Yazoo, etc., R. Co. v. Dees, (Miss. 1920) 83 So. 613.

A brakeman who without order or signal gets off a moving train at an unusual and unnecessary distance from the place where he is to throw a switch is not entitled to recover for an injury received from falling into an unguarded culvert near the place where he got off the train. Manual v. Louisville, etc., R. Co., (1919) 186 Ky. 584, 215 S. W. 280.

Brakeman coupling cars is held to assume risk of injury from uneven condition of roadbed. Hamm v. Texas, etc., R. Co., (Tex. Civ. App. 1920) 221 S. W. 345.

Employees in freight yards are aware that cars and engines move in all directions at irregular intervals, and so long as the movement is not unusual employees assume the risk of the accidental hazards incident to employment in such places, and must be on the lookout for their personal safety. Curtis v. Erie R. Co., (Pa. 1920) 109 Atl. 871.

IV. BURDEN OF PROOF (p. 1363)

General rule.—assumption of risk.—To the same effect as the original annotation, see Kenyon v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., (Ia. 1919) 173 N. W. 44; Dutrey v. Philadelphia, etc., R. Co., (1919) 265 Pa. St. 215, 108 Atl. 620; McDowell v. Southern R. Co., (S. C. 1920) 102 S. E. 639.

See further to the same effect Crugley v. Grand Trunk R. Co., (N. H. 1919) 109 Atl. 293, wherein the court said:

"In Central Vermont R. R. v. White, 238 U. S. 507, 35 Sup. Ct. 865, 59 L. Ed. 1433, Ann. Cas. 1916B 252, it was held that the rule as to burden of proof upon the issue of contributory negligence is not a mere matter of procedure, but of substantive law; that Congress presumably enacted the federal Employers' Liability Act with the intent that the federal rule on this subject should apply; and that therefore it does apply, although the suit be brought in a state court in a jurisdiction where the local rule is different.

"In view of this decision, and of the federal rule that the burden of proof upon the issue of assumption of risk is upon the defendant, there is no reasonable doubt that the construction of the statute as to contributory negligence will be followed as to assumption of risk. New Orleans, etc., Co. v. Harris, 247 U. S. 367, 372, 38 Sup. Ct. 535, 62 L. Ed. 1167. The federal interpretation of the statute has progressed sufficiently to indicate the rule to be applied at trials. In suits brought under this act, juries should be instructed that upon the issues of contributory negligence and assumption of risk the burden is on the defendant. It was therefore error to charge that the plaintiff had the burden upon assumption of risk, and for this reason the verdict must be set aside."

V. QUESTIONS FOR COURT AND JURY (p. 1363)

General rule.—To same effect as original annotation, see Virginian R. Co. v. Halstead, (C. C. A. 4th Cir. 1919) 258 Fed. 428, 169

C. C. A. 444; Erie R. Co. v. Collins, (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1919) 259 Fed. 172, 170 C. C. A. 240, affirming (W. D. N. Y. 1917) 245 Fed. 811; Pittsburgh, etc., R. Co. v. Cole, (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1919) 260 Fed. 357, 171 C. C. A. 223, certiorari denied (1919) 250 U. S. 671, 40 S. Ct. 15, 63 U. S. (L. ed.) 1199; Schants v. Northern Pac. R. Co., (N. D. 1919) 173 N. W. 556; Dutrey v. Philadelphia, etc., R. Co., (1919) 265 Pa. St. 215, 108 Atl. 620; McDowell v. Southern R. Co., (S. C. 1920) 102 S. E. 639.

On the issue of assumption of risk by a servant who has sustained injuries, where the evidence is harmonious and consistent and the circumstances are such that all reasonable men must reach the same conclusion, the question whether the plaintiff assumed the risk is one of law for the determination of the court; but where the facts are controverted, or are such that different inferences may be drawn therefrom, the question as to the assumption of the risk should be submitted to the jury under proper instructions from the court. Luak v. Bandy, (1919) 76 Okla. 108, 184 Pac. 144.

Harmless error in charge.—The inaccuracy of a charge on the assumption of risk could have worked no harm to the defendant where the situation did not make the doctrine of assumed risk a defense to the action. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Ward, (1920) 252 U. S. 18, 40 S. Ct. 275, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (Okla. 1918) 173 Pac. 212.

Section hand standing on hand car.—Whether a minor servant eighteen years old, working as a section hand on a railroad, comprehended and fully appreciated the danger attendant upon his standing on the front end of a lever hand car of standard make and working the lever, while the car was under way, in the absence of warning thereof and advice as to means of avoiding it, is a question proper for jury determination, and their findings that he did not and that the failure of the employer, through its foreman, to give him warning of such danger, or to put him in a safer place on the car, in view of his immaturity and inexperience, was negligence on its part and the proximate cause of the injury, cannot be disturbed by the trial court. Mills v. Virginian R. Co., (W. Va. 1920) 102 S. E. 604.

II. Applicability of section generally.

III. Settlement and release after injury.

II. APPLICABILITY OF SECTION GENERALLY (p. 1365)

Requirement of notice of claim.—A provision in a contract of employment that the employee will give notice in writing within thirty days of any personal injury for which he claims damages and that failing such notice his cause of action therefor shall be barred is void as applied to injuries received by the employee while engaged in interstate commerce. Panhandle, etc., R. Co. v. Brooks, (Tex. 1920) 222 S. W. 186.

III. SETTLEMENT AND RELEASE AFTER INJURY (p. 1367)

Rescission of contract of release on ground of fraud.—The well-established principle of law that, before a party to a contract is entitled to have it rescinded for fraud in its procurement, he must pay back or tender any valuable consideration received under the terms of the contract, applies to an action for personal injuries brought under the federal Employers' Liability Act where the plaintiff, after the infliction of the injury sued for, signed, for a valuable consideration, a contract releasing the defendant from all liability therefor. Central of Georgia R. Co. v. Hoban, (Ga. App. 1920) 102 S. E. 46.

Vol. VIII, p. 1369, sec. 6. [First ed., 1912 Supp., p. 335.]

- I. Limitation of action.
- II. Jurisdiction and venue.
- III. Removal to federal court.

I. LIMITATION OF ACTION (p. 1370)

Necessity of pleading act to obtain benefit of it.—This section operates to define and limit the right to maintain an action, and hence is not, strictly speaking, a statute of limitations required to be specially pleaded. Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Echols, (Ala. 1920) 84 So. 827.

It has been held, however, that the statutory limitation is waived by a failure to plead it. Pittsburgh, etc., R. Co. v. Ireton, (Ind. App. 1920) 126 N. E. 431.

Time of accrual of cause of action.—When the cause of action is to recover damages for the death of the injured employee it accrues when an administrator is appointed. Williams v. Western, etc., R. Co., (Ga. App. 1920) 102 S. E. 186, wherein the court said: "The authorities are conflicting on the question as to when a cause of action under this act accrues. Some hold that the right accrues upon the appointment of an administrator of the estate of the person for whose homicide a suit is brought, while others hold that it accrues upon the death of the decedent. The weight of authority seems to support the view that the cause of action accrues with the appointment of the administrator. Without attempting any lengthy discussion or elaboration of the authorities pro and con, we are content to rest our decision on the authority of the recent well-considered and exhaustively treated case of American R. Co. of Porto Rico v. Coronas, decided by the United States Circuit Court of Appeals, First Circuit, 230 Fed. 545, 144 C. C. A. 599, L. R. A. 1916E 1095. It is there held: 'A cause of action to recover damages for death under the federal Employers' Liability Act accrues when an administrator is appointed, and not at the time of death, within the meaning of the section providing that no action shall be maintained unless commenced within two years from the day the cause of action accrued.' L. R. A. 1916E 1095. We adopt the conclusion reached in that case, and hold that the cause of action in this case accrued with the appointment of the administrator."

Limitation on liability.—The provision that "no action shall be maintained . . . unless commenced within two years," etc., is a limitation on the liability, and if an action be not commenced within the period thus specified, the right of action conferred by the statute is extinguished. Carpenter v. Central Vermont R. Co., (Vt. 1919) 107 Atl. 569.

Application to Alaska.—In Sandstrom v. Pacific Steamship Co., (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1919) 260 Fed. 661, 171 C. C. A. 425, it was held that the one year limitation contained in section 4 of the Employers' Liability Act of June 11, 1906 (8 Fed. Stat. Ann. (2d ed.) 1209), applied to Alaska.

Filing of amended complaint after two year period.—Where an original complaint does not indicate whether the injury occurred in intrastate or interstate commerce and the action was brought within two years from the accrual of the cause of action, an amendment to the complaint bringing the action within the terms of this act is not a departure, and though made after the expiration of the two years is not barred by this section. So where an action is begun by an injured employee under this act and he subsequently dies and his wife revives the action under authority of section 9 of the act and files an amended complaint including therein a cause of action for his death, such amended complaint is good though made over two years after the death occurred. Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Echols, (Ala. 1920) 84 So. 827.

Where an amendment serves only to amplify or enlarge the allegations of the original petition, it relates back, and the fact that it is filed after two years has elapsed does not make it subject to the statute of limitations. Lammers v. Chicago Great Western R. Co., (Ia. 1919) 175 N. W. 311, wherein the court said: "We think it clear that the amendment did not state a new cause of action, but only amplified and enlarged the cause of action by specifically and directly asking relief under the federal Employers' Liability Act, and therefore related back to the original cause of action."

Where a declaration setting up a cause of action at common law is amended to set up a cause of action under the federal Employers' Liability Act the amended declaration introduces a new cause of action which must have been commenced within the statutory period. Carpenter v. Central Vermont R. Co., (Vt. 1919) 107 Atl. 569.

Where a woman sues as widow for the death of her husband and thereafter amends so as to sue as administratrix and to add an allegation that the husband was at the time of his death engaged in interstate commerce no new cause of action is stated. Wilson v. Denver, etc., R. Co., (Colo. 1920) 187 Pac. 1027, following former decision 62 Colo. 492, 163 Pac. 857.

II. JURISDICTION AND VENUE (p. 1372)

Necessity of diversity of citizenship.—Under the provisions of this Act diversity of citizenship of the parties is not necessary. Missouri Pac. R. Co. v. Mette, (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1919) 261 Fed. 755.

III. REMOVAL TO FEDERAL COURT (p. 1374)

Removal prohibited for any cause.—To same effect as original annotation, see Frazier v. Hines, (E. D. S. C. 1919) 260 Fed. 874.

Dismissal of action in state court as "removal."—The provisions of this section do not prevent a plaintiff from dismissing an action under this Act which he has brought in a state court, and thereafter bringing it in a federal court. Missouri Pac. R. Co. v. Mette, (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1919) 261 Fed. 755, wherein the court said: "When plaintiff afterwards brought the same suit in a United States court, such proceeding was not a removal, within the meaning of the Removal Act, nor within the meaning of section 6 of the Employers' Liability Act."

Vol. VIII, p. 1378, sec. 9. [First ed., 1912 Supp., p. 335.]

- I. Construction and operation generally.
- II. Survival of actions.

I. CONSTRUCTION AND OPERATION GENERALLY (p. 1378)

Two causes of action on death of injured employee.—Two distinct causes of action, made so by the subsequent death of the injured employee, are created by the federal act where the same wrongful act or neglect causes both the injury and after a legally appreciable period the employee's death. And these two causes of action may be united in one action. Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Echols, (Ala. 1920) 84 So. 827.

II. SURVIVAL OF ACTIONS (p. 1380)

Effect of recovery by employee himself.—A deceased employee's personal representative has no right to maintain an action when the employee himself has recovered for the injury he suffered. Seaboard Air Line R. Co. v. Oliver, (C. C. A. 5th Cir. 1919) 261 Fed. 1, 171 C. C. A. 597, the court saying: "So far as we are advised, the question . . . has not heretofore been ruled on. . . . If, during the life of the injured employee, his employer's liability for the tort is extinguished by any occurrence ordinarily having that effect, the employee's personal representative has no right of action for the injury, as the single cause of action upon which a suit by him must be based has ceased to exist. . . . The cause of action counted on has been extinguished by payment of the judgment recovered by the decedent for the wrong he suffered."

Claim for conscious pain and suffering as properly pleaded in action by widow for pecuniary loss.—A claim for conscious pain and suffering under this section may be made in an action by a widow claiming damages for pecuniary loss to herself and child, but unless pleaded there can be no recovery for such pain and suffering. Lewis v. Texas, etc., R. Co., (1920) 146 La. 227, 83 So. 535.

Construction.—To same effect as original annotation, see U. S. v. Baker, (S. D. Tex. 1919) 261 Fed. 703.

IV. "REQUIRE OR PERMIT" (p. 1389)

Intent is not an essential of the offense prohibited by this section. U. S. v. Baker, (S. D. Tex. 1919) 261 Fed. 703, wherein it was said: "In a case of this kind, where the words 'knowingly and willfully' are not employed, and the carrier is made liable if it requires or permits any employé to be or remain on duty in violation of statutory provisions, the fact of doing the thing prohibited by the statute constitutes the offense, although there is no turpitude nor wrong arising out of willfulness or special intent."

"In the case of A., T. & S. F. v. United States, 236 Fed. 907, 150 C. C. A. 169, the evidence showed that the operation complained of in the action had not been instituted by the company after the taking effect of the Hours of Service Act, but had existed long prior thereto. The court said:

"This course of handling the business was adopted by the company for reasons of convenience, not to evade any law. It began before the passage of the Hours of Service Act. . . . And what could not be done as a new departure would be equally inadmissible as an old custom."

"While it thus appears clear that the presence or absence of a specific intent to employ a subterfuge to violate the law is not material in determining the question of its violation vel non, it is equally clear that, in determining the amount of penalty which should be assessed therefor, specific intent should have just weight. Finding as I do a violation of the law through the doing of the act which the law forbids, without any evidence of the presence in the mind of the receiver of a specific intent to violate it, or that the method employed for the doing of the work was arrived at as a subterfuge, I shall, in finding for the United States, assess the minimum penalty upon each count."

V. EMPLOYEES WITHIN ACT (p. 1391)

Employees of terminal company.—A company maintaining a station and engaged in conducting the usual terminal operations for a number of interstate railways, is a "common carrier" and subject to prosecution for keeping a telegraph operator on duty for a longer period than that prescribed in this longer period than that prescribed in this section. U. S. v. Atlanta Terminal Co., (C. C. A. 5th Cir. 1919) 260 Fed. 779, 171 C. C. A. 505. The defendant contended that it was not engaged in the transportation of passengers or property by railroad. Answering this contention, the court said:

"It is true that it had no cars or engines and no trainmen or engineers. It had, however, railroad tracks, a station, switches, and a telegraph office and signal towers. It employed a station master, signal tower men, car inspectors, telegraph operators, ticket sellers, and baggage checkers and handlers. It is true that the passengers and baggage were carried on the cars and by the engines of the various railroad companies entering the terminal. However, they became passengers as soon as they bought tickets from defendant's agents, and while still on the defendant's station premises, and before boarding their train. Part of the transportation preceded their entrance to their trains, and that part was handled exclusively by the defendant. The same is true as to the passengers' property. It became baggage and began its transportation as soon as it was checked in the defendant's baggage room. After the passenger boarded the coach, and after his property was loaded into the baggage car, both still remained under the control of the defendant, until the train had left the terminal track. Until that time its movements were subject to the control and direction of the defendant's station master, to whose orders the train crew was subservient, and whose orders alone could start or stop the train while it was within the terminal limits. The train orders which governed its movements, after its departure, were transmitted to the train crew through the defendant's telegraph operator—the same person who is alleged to have been kept on duty in violation of the act. So that while the manual acts which started, moved, and stopped the train were not those of the defendant's employees, the orders and directions which put it in motion and caused it to stop were those of defendant's employees.

"Direction and control are as much a part of transportation as are the physical acts of running the engine or handling the train. It is also true that trains, in motion, could only enter and leave the terminal tracks through switches thrown by signal men of defendant, and upon signals given the train crews by defendant's signal men. These acts were acts of transportation, and the defendant was engaged in transportation of passengers and baggage, upon a railroad, while doing them. The fact that the railroad company engaged jointly with defendant in the transportation does not change the conclusion reached. If the railroad companies had performed the entire service themselves, it would all have been transportation. The fact that part of it was performed by their agent, a separate corporation, does not make it less so. That it was transportation by railroad appears from the fact that it was carried on by a corporation organized as a railroad company and over its own railroad tracks. That they were short ones does not signify; nor does the fact that the defendant did not own the engine or cars. The mischief sought to be remedied by the Hours of Service Act is the same, whether the service is performed by the railroad company or by its agent, the Terminal Company, jointly with it, and whether by the use of its own cars and engines or those of the Terminal Company. It is equally important that the remedy be applied to the latter as to the former. The hazard from the excessive hours of service is the same in either case.

"That the service performed by the defendant was interstate transportation appears clearly from the stipulated facts. The transportation of the railroad companies in which it participated was interstate transportation of passengers and baggage. The fact that the defendant performed its part thereof entirely in Georgia is unimportant, since it was part of an interstate movement and partook of the nature of the entire movement."

VII. NIGHT AND DAY OFFICES (p. 1400)

Employment of operators by different companies as affecting character of station.—The fact that for a part of the twenty-four hour period the telegraphic messages of a railroad company are handled by persons employed not by itself, but by another company, does not make the station a daytime station only. U. S. v. Baker, (S. D. Tex. 1919) 261 Fed. 703.

1918 Supp., p. 755, sec. 3.

Agreement between receiver of insolvent railroad and employees for lesser wage.—Nothing in the provisions of the Adamson Act, fixing a permanent eight-hour standard working day for employees engaged in the operation of trains upon interstate railway carriers, and temporarily regulating the wages of such employees, forbids the operation of an insolvent road under an agreement between receiver and employees for a lesser wage, which agreement the employees desire to keep. Ft. Smith, etc., R. Co. v. Mills, (1920) 253 U. S. 206, 40 S. Ct. 526, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, wherein the court said: "The Act in question, known as the Adamson Law, was passed to meet the emergency created by the threat of a general railroad strike. It fixed eight hours as a day's work and provided that for some months, pending an investigation, the compensation of employees or railroads subject to the Act to Regulate Commerce should not be 'reduced below the present standard day's wage,' and that time in excess of eight hours should be paid for pro rata at the same rate. The time has expired long since but the rights of the parties require a decision of the case.

"In Wilson v. New, 243 U. S. 332, 37 Sup. Ct. 298, 61 L. Ed. 755, L. R. A. 1917E, 938, Ann. Cas. 1918A, 1024, it was decided that the Act was within the constitutional power of Congress to regulate commerce among the States; that since, by virtue of the organic interdependence of different parts of the Union, not only comfort but life would be endangered on a large scale if interstate railroad traffic suddenly stopped, Congress could meet the danger of such a stoppage by legislation, and that, in view of the public interest, the mere fact that it required an expenditure to tide the country over the trouble would not of itself alone show a taking of property without due process of law. It was held that these principles applied no less when the emergency was caused by the combined action of men than when it was due to a catastrophe of nature; and that the expenditure required was not necessarily unconstitutional because it took the form of requiring the railroad to pay more, as it might have required the men to take less, during the short time necessary for an investigation ordered by the law.

"But the bill in Wilson v. New raised only the general objections to the Act that were common to every railroad. In that case it was not necessary to consider to what extremes the law might be carried or what were its constitutional limits. It was not decided, for instance, that Congress could or did require a railroad to continue in business at a loss. See Brooks-Scanlon Co. v. Railroad Commission of Louisiana, 251 U. S. 396, 40 Sup. Ct. 183, 64 L. Ed. —. It was not decided that there might not be circumstances to which the Act could not be applied consistently with the Fifth Amendment, or that the Act in spite of its universal language must be construed to reach literally every carrier by railroad subject to the Act to Regulate Commerce. It is true that the first section of the statute purports to apply to any such carrier, and the third to the compensation of railway employees subject to this Act. But the statute avowedly was enacted in haste to meet an emergency, and the general language necessary to satisfy the demands of the men need not be taken to go further than the emergency required or to have been intended to make trouble rather than to allay it. We cannot suppose that it was meant to forbid work being done at a less price than the rates laid down, when both parties to the bargain wished to go on as before and when the circumstances of the road were so exceptional that the lower compensation accepted would not affect the market for labor upon other roads.

"But that is the present case. An insolvent road had succeeded in making satisfactory terms with its men, enabling it to go on, barely paying its way, if it did so, not without impairing even the mortgage security, not to speak of its capital. We must accept the allegations of the bill and must assume that the men were not merely negatively refraining from demands under the Act but, presumably appreciating the situation, desired to keep on as they were. To break up such a bargain would be at least unjust and impolitic and not at all within the ends that the Adamson Law had in view. We think it reasonable to assume that the circumstances in which, and the purposes for which the law was passed import an exception in a case like this."

1918 Supp., p. 757, sec. 1.

Civil service rules as applicable to persons employed by Director General.—Persons employed by the Director General of Railroads in connection with the federal control of railroads need not be appointed in accordance with the Civil Service Act and rules. (1919) 31 Op. Atty-Gen. 530.

Judicial notice.—The federal control of railroads rests on the proclamation of the President and will be judicially noticed. Krichman v. U. S., (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1920) 263 Fed. 538.

Judicial notice will be taken of the fact that on Sept. 24, 1919, a railroad was subject to this Act. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Public Utilities Commission, (Colo. 1920) 190 Pac. 539.

Disregarding contracts with individual shippers.—The fact that cars are needed for government use is a defense to an action for breach of a contract to furnish them to an individual shipper. Underwood v. Hines, (Mo. App. 1920) 222 S. W. 1037.

Service of process on a ticket agent and a division superintendent of a railroad operating under federal control in the district where plaintiff resides.—does not constitute service on another railroad under federal control operating entirely without such district. Seaver v. Hines, (D. C. N. H. 1919) 261 Fed. 239. The court said: "If I understand the position of the plaintiff correctly, the question here is whether the government management and control of the railroads of the country as a war measure, and under the war powers of Congress, so far consolidated or merged the various railroads of the United States into one system as to create a situation which would make it reasonable and proper to assume jurisdiction over a cause of action, and a railroad management, foreign to the district where the suit is sought to be prosecuted, under a kind of service which would not have been effective to that end prior to the assumption of federal control. . . . The service in this case was upon the 'ticket agent of the within-named defendant at the station of the Boston & Maine Railroad at Concord, New Hampshire,' and on 'William R. Mooney, division superintendent of the Southern division of the Boston & Maine Railroad, one of the railroads now under the operation and control of the within-named defendant and agent of the within-named defendant having charge of the property of the within-named defendant in said state and district of New Hampshire.'

"All the agencies and the properties referred to in the return upon the writ are in every substantial and essential sense, so far as judicial procedure goes, the agencies and properties of the Boston & Maine Railroad, because there has been no substantial or permanent taking over of the properties, and as such they are quite independent of the Rutland Railroad of Vermont and New York, unless affected by the act of Congress, the order of the President, or the orders and regulations of the Director General.

"It would hardly be contended, it is supposed, that such a service prior to government control of the railroads would have been even a hint in the direction of creating jurisdiction over the rights of a foreign railroad like that of the Rutland, and I do not think there is anything in the act of Congress, or the executive orders in question, or in the character of the management and control which could reasonably be accepted as fairly intended to enlarge the modes of procedure, or to increase rights and remedies in respect to jurisdiction beyond those common to law and equity proceedings existing prior to government management based upon war necessity.

"While as a matter of form and as a matter of convenience and precaution, it may, perhaps, be well enough to assume that the requirement that all proceedings against the railroads under government control shall, in name, be drawn against the Director General, is a reasonable one, it would be quite another and a different thing to say that, by virtue of this formal and measurably fictional requirement, all individual railroads have lost their identity, and that their interests have been so far consolidated and merged into a system with a single entity that service, for instance, upon a station agent of a railroad in the extreme Eastern district of Maine would be service upon a railroad in the extreme Western district of California."

But service of process on an agent of the railroad against which the suit is brought is sufficient. Vicksburg, etc., R. Co. v. Anderson-Tully Co., (C. C. A. 5th Cir. 1919) 261 Fed. 741.

1918 Supp., p. 760, sec. 3.

Compensation by Director General for use of railroad—Adjustment.—In Railway Steel Spring Co. v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., (N. D.

Ill. 1919) 261 Fed. 690, it was held that the annual compensation offered by the Director General to the receiver of a railroad for the use of the railroad during federal control was inadequate, and the receiver was directed to proceed under this section to obtain adequate compensation.

1918 Supp., p. 762, sec. 10.

Purpose of enactment.—The intention of Congress in enacting this section "was that the railroads, although under federal control, should continue to be subject to all legal liabilities, enforceable in the ordinary way as if federal control did not exist, except that attachment on mesne process and levy on execution were forbidden." Dampakibs Actieselskabet Sangstad v. Hustis, (D. C. Mass. 1919) 257 Fed. 862.

Validity of section.—The section is not invalid because it authorizes an action against a carrier for acts arising during the federal control. Missouri Pac. R. Co. v. Ault, (1919) 140 Ark. 572, 216 S. W. 3.

The expression "actions at law and suits in equity" as used in this section includes admiralty suits. Dampakibs Actieselskabet Sangstad v. Hustis, (D. C. Mass. 1919) 257 Fed. 862; The Catawissa, (D. C. Mass. 1919) 257 Fed. 863.

General orders 18 and 18a are invalid. Hines v. Kelly, (Tex. Civ. App. 1920) 222 S. W. 648; El Paso, etc., R. Co. v. Lovick, (Tex. 1920) 218 S. W. 489.

General Order No. 26 does not deprive the court of its discretion as to the grant of a continuance. El Paso, etc., R. Co. v. Lovick, (Tex. 1920) 218 S. W. 489, holding discretion not to have been abused in denial of continuance.

Validity of General Order No. 50 of the Director General requiring certain suits to be brought against him has been held invalid as being in conflict with this section. Franke v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., (1919) 170 Wis. 71, 173 N. W. 701; Mobile, etc., R. Co. v. Jobe, (Miss. 1920) 84 So. 910, wherein it was further held that this section amounted to a mere invitation to bring suits against the Director General instead of the railroads, excepting, however, suits for fines, penalties, and forfeitures. See further on this question 1919 Supp. p. 776.

In State v. Calhoun, (Mo. 1920) 220 S. W. 6, the court said regarding General Orders 50 and 50a:

"The orders referred to are enabling orders and not disabling in character; that is, they were designed to give the courts jurisdiction over the person of the director general, by proper service, in those courts where they have jurisdiction of the subject matter of the suit, but where the laws make no provision for the service of summons on the person of the director general, for instance."

Arrest of vessel in admiralty suit.—This section does not prohibit the arrest in an admiralty suit of a vessel chartered to a railroad under federal control. The Catawissa, (D. C. Mass. 1919) 257 Fed. 863, wherein the court said:

"I have just decided that section 10 of the Railroad Act (Act March 21, 1918, c. 25, 40 Stat. 456) authorizes suits in admiralty against railroads while under federal control. Dampskibs, etc., v. Hustis, Receiver (D. C. Mass.) 257 Fed. 862, filed June 6, 1919. It follows that the usual admiralty procedure applies to such cases including the right of arrest, unless that is forbidden by the last sentence of the first paragraph of section 10: 'But no process mesne or final shall be levied against any property under such federal control.' If the arrest of the Catawissa be merely the equivalent of attachment on mesne process in an action at law, it is so forbidden. The arrest of the respondent in admiralty proceedings is, however, much more than an attachment on mesne process. It is the foundation of the jurisdiction. The seizure of the vessel is not simply for the purpose of securing property out of which a decree, if one be obtained, can be satisfied; it is the assertion of jurisdiction over the res, and is necessary to such jurisdiction. The purpose of the sentence quoted is to protect the property of carriers against seizure as security in legal proceedings or for the satisfaction of judgments or decrees. The arrest of a vessel in admiralty, while it has the result of furnishing security, is primarily for a different and more fundamental purpose. The Brig Ann, 9 Cranch 291, 3 L. Ed. 734; The Propeller Commerce, 1 Black 574, 580, 17 L. Ed. 107; Taylor v. Carryl, 20 How. 583, 599, 15 L. Ed. 1028.

"The statutory provision just quoted does not, therefore, prevent arrest in admiralty proceedings, and process may issue against the Catawissa."

A vessel operated by the Director General is liable for collision but is not liable to seizure, the words "mesne process" including original process in admiralty. The City of Philadelphia, (E. D. Pa. 1920) 263 Fed. 234.

State regulation of emigrant agents.—The mere possession and control of a railroad by the United States does not empower the railway company to act in violation of the statute of a state, in regard to emigrant agents, unless it is made to appear that there is a general or special order of the Director General to that effect. State v. Bates, (S. C. 1919) 101 S. E. 651.

For causes of action arising prior to federal control suit may not be brought against the Director General. Bolton v. Hines, (Ark. 1920) 221 S. W. 459.

Right of action against Director General in personal injury case.—A person injured by an employee of a railroad which was under federal control has the right to bring suit against the Director General instead of the company owning the road. Leemans v. Hines, (Wis. 1920) 177 N. W. 27.

An action for personal injuries received during federal control should be dismissed as to the receiver of the railroad and allowed to proceed against the Director General alone. Baker v. Bell, (Tex. Civ. App. 1920) 219 S. W. 245.

Trustee process against Director General.—In Fitzhugh v. Grand Trunk Ry., (N. H. 1920) 109 Atl. 562, the action was by an individual against a railroad company being operated under federal control and another for loss sustained because of what the defendants did in pursuance of a conspiracy to prevent his obtaining work by threatening to boycott anyone who might employ him. The Director General was summoned as trustee but he moved for a discharge. On this issue the court said:

"The test therefore to determine whether the plaintiff can summon the Director General as trustee is to inquire whether the defendants or any of them have a claim growing out of the use or operation of a railroad by the Director General which could be enforced in a suit against the road but for Order No. 50, and for which the road could be charged as trustee except for federal control. But it does not follow from the fact the plaintiff can obtain a judgment against the Director General that the court will issue an execution to enforce it; for the judgment will be against him in his official capacity, and section 10 forbids the levy of an execution on the property of a carrier so long as it is under federal control.

"The order therefore should be the Director General's motion is denied, but, unless it shall appear on the filing of his disclosure that some of the defendants have a claim which they can reduce to a judgment in a suit against him in the courts of this state, and that General Order No. 50 is still in force, he will be discharged as trustee."

Action against both railroad company and Director General.—In Clements v. Southern R. Co., (1920) 179 N. C. 225, 102 S. E. 399, it was held that an action by a railroad employee for personal injuries was properly brought against both the Director General in control of the railroad and the railroad corporation, and that the corporation was served with process if it was served upon a local agent.

Liability of railroad to suit.—A railroad company occupies the same status as to liability to suit after being taken over by the government as before. Missouri Pac. R. Co. v. Ault, (1919) 140 Ark. 572, 216 S. W. 3.

But compare Houston, etc., R. Co. v. Long, (Tex. Civ. App. 1920) 219 S. W. 212, wherein it was held that a carrier was not liable to an employee for personal injuries received during federal control, since that control superseded the relation of master and servant between the carrier and its employees. Houston, etc., R. Co. v. Long, (Tex. Civ. App. 1920) 219 S. W. 212.

In McGrath v. Northern Pac. R. Co., (N. D. 1920) 177 N. W. 383, the complaint charged that in November, 1918, at Dunn Center, N. D., the defendant took, carried away, and converted certain cattle, the property of the plaintiff, but at that time and place it conclusively appeared that the government was in full and absolute control of the railway, and that neither defendant nor any of its agents or servants had any control over the operation of the railway, and in the commission of the alleged conversion the railway company did not act or claim to act as an instrumentality or agency of the federal government. It was held, therefore, that the railway company was in no manner liable for the torts or wrongs or contracts of the government or its Director General, or any other party over whom it had no control. McGrath v. Northern Pac. R. Co., (N. D. 1920) 177 N. W. 383.

Suits for statutory penalty.—A state statute providing for double damages for the killing of stock by railroad companies by reason of failure to fence tracks, was held in one jurisdiction inapplicable in a suit against a railroad operated by the federal government, the suit being against the Director General. Hines v. Taylor, (Fla. 1920) 84 So. 381.

But a suit for a state statutory penalty brought against the railroad company instead of the Director General in control at the time the penalty was incurred is properly maintained. Mobile, etc., R. Co. v. Jobe, (Miss. 1920) 84 So. 910.

So a statute imposing upon a railroad company a penalty for the delay in the transportation of an intrastate shipment is in the nature of a police regulation and an action brought to enforce the penalty in the state court should be against the carrier alone. Owens v. Hines, (1919) 178 N. C. 325, 100 S. E. 617, wherein the court said: "The U. S. Supreme Court, in R. R. v. North Dakota, 39 S. C. Reporter, 502, in an opinion by Chief Justice White, filed 2 June, 1919, held that under the Act of 21 March, 1918, section 10, authorizing the President to fix rates for railroads under federal control, but providing for review by the interstate commerce commission, and section 15, declaring that 'nothing in the act shall be construed to impair lawful police regulations of the state,' the President had power to prescribe intrastate rates for railroads under federal control, though such rates shall conflict with the rates previously fixed by state authority. Our Rev., 2632, provides that in shipment of less than a carload there shall be a penalty of ten dollars for the first day's delay and a dollar per day for each succeeding day shall be allowed. In this case there was a delay for twenty days. After deducting the exemption of eight days, as properly allowed by the judge, there was a net delay of twelve days, the penalty for which is twenty-one dollars, as correctly stated by the judge. This was an intrastate shipment and this court has held that Rev., 2632, is a valid law. Davis v. R. R., 147 N. C. 68; Wall v. R. R., ib., 407. The statute prescribing such penalty for delay was a police regulation and section 15 of the Act of 21 March, 1918, as recited by Chief Justice

White in R. R. v. North Dakota, supra, declared that 'nothing in that Act should be construed to impair lawful police regulations of the state.' This was the view taken by the U. S. Railroad Administration, for in General Order No. 50-A, 11 January, 1919, it is provided: 'General Order No. 50, issued October 28, 1918, is hereby amended to read as follows: It is therefore ordered, that actions at law, suits in equity, and proceedings in admiralty hereafter brought in any court based on contract, binding upon the director general of railroads, claim for death or injury to person, or for loss and damage to property, arising since December 31, 1917, and growing out of the possession, use, control, or operation of any railroad or system of transportation by the director general of railroads, which action, suit, or proceeding but for federal control might have been brought against the carrier company, shall be brought against the director general of railroads, and not otherwise: Provided, however, that this order shall not apply to actions, suits, or proceedings for the recovery of fines, penalties, and forfeitures.' It seems clear from this order that the director general of railroads did not assume to repeal the state police regulation fixing a penalty for delay in the transportation of freight between two points in this state, but only directed that he should be made a party defendant in other actions brought against any railroad company, and he provided: 'This order shall not apply to actions, suits or proceedings, for the recovery of fines, penalties and forfeitures.' He thus recognized, as Chief Justice White has stated, that the police regulations were not impaired by the federal statute, but provided that he should be exempt from being made a party to the suits therefor."

Pending suits did not abate by reason of the assumption of federal control, though the suits were ones which under General Orders 18 and 26 of the Director General could not have been brought against him in the jurisdiction. El Paso, etc., R. Co. v. Havens, (Tex. Civ. App. 1919) 216 S. W. 444.

Venue of action.—Congress did not delegate to the executive the power to fix the venue of actions, and the venue remained as it was before the Federal Control Act was passed. Alabama, etc., R. Co. v. Journey, (Miss. 1920) 84 So. 706.

Service of process.—A service of summons on a freight agent was a service on the railroad company employing him although the railroad was under control of the Director General of Railroads. Christian v. Great Northern R. Co., (Wis. 1920) 177 N. W. 29, wherein the court said: "As is said in Rutherford v. U. P. R. Co. (D. C.) 254 Fed. 880, and Mardis v. Hines (D. C.) 258 Fed. 945, the Director General was in exclusive possession of the railroads, and exercised an exclusive control over them. But such exclusive possession and exclusive control was through the boards of directors, receivers, officers, and employes of the transportation systems, who by executive order were to continue the operation of the railroads in the usual and ordinary course of the business of common carriers. If a superintendent of the defendant company discharged one station agent and employed another in his place, which in the absence of any specific direction from the Director General he no doubt had power and authority to do, the person discharged was released from the service of the Director General, and the person employed entered such service by reason of the fact that he was the agent and employe of the company, although he was at the same time and in a larger view the agent and employe of the Director General. But he was such agent and employe of the Director General because he was the agent and employe of the company."

Though two railroads are both under the control of the Director General the possession by one of them of cars of the other does not permit of service of process on employes of the former company in a suit for injuries on the line of the latter company. Seaver v. Hines, (D. C. N. H. 1920) 263 Fed. 454.

Amendment substituting Director General as defendant in place of railroad company was allowed in action against company by owner of land adjoining a railroad right of way for damages from sparks of passing locomotive. Peacock v. Detroit, etc., R. Co., (Mich. 1919) 175 N. W. 580, 8 A. L. R. 984.

In Robinson v. Central of Georgia R. Co., (Ga. 1920) 102 S. E. 532, the action which was by a railroad employee against the railroad for personal injuries was brought after the government took over the railroad, but prior to the assent of General Order No. 50, promulgated by the Director General of railroads, which in effect gave directions that suits for injuries resulting from operation of railroads while under federal control should be brought against the Director General. It was held that the petition could be amended by substituting the Director General of railroads as the suit was maintainable against the government without the aid of General Order No. 50.

Refusal to direct a verdict for the carrier is harmless error where the judgment entered protected the carrier by providing that no execution should issue thereon but the judgment should be paid by the United States. Houston, etc., R. Co. v. Long, (Tex. Civ. App. 1920) 219 S. W. 212.

Removal.—A suit against the Director General of Railroads for personal injuries is not removable because of diversity of citizenship between the plaintiff and the carrier, but is removable as a "case at law under the laws of the United States." Westbrook v. Director General of Railroads, (N. D. Ga. 1920) 263 Fed. 211.

An action in a state court to recover damages for the wrongful death of the driver of an automobile truck in a collision with a train, operated by a railroad under federal control, is not removable to a federal court in view of the provisions of this section. Loughnan v. Hines, (W. D. Wash. 1919) 261 Fed. 218, wherein the court said regarding the provisions of this section:

"Unless an action such as the present was contemplated by Congress in making the foregoing provision—denying the carrier the right to transfer such an action to the federal court—virtually all effect must be denied it. Contrasting actions at law and suits in equity in the first part of the quoted portion of the section with actions, alone, in the latter part of the section, may perhaps show an intention that suits in equity, where a federal question is involved, could be removed, as heretofore. But, however that may be, by the language of the latter part of the section, an intent is clearly shown that actions at law, where merely the liquidation and settlement of the amount of a claim upon a common carrier liability are involved, and the control and use of railroad property by the Director General is not sought to be interfered with, should, if started in the state court, not be removed, over the objection of the plaintiff, to the federal court upon the ground that they involve a federal question."

Attorney's fees by state statute made costs and recoverable as such in suits against railroads for failure to fence their roads, are collectable in suits brought against the Director General. Hines v. Taylor, (Fla. 1920) 84 So. 381.

1918 Supp., p. 763, sec. 11.

Larceny of goods being transported by express company under federal control.—Goods stolen by employees of a railroad under federal control while being transported by such railroad for an express company, are not property "derived from or used in connection with the possession, use or operation" of the railroad within the meaning of this section. Where, however, the express company is also under federal control, such larceny is a violation of this section since it interferes with and impedes the possession, operation, and control of the express company. Kambeltz v. U. S., (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1919) 262 Fed. 378.

1918 Supp., p. 765, sec. 15.

Terminal railway company held not taken over by Director General of Railroads and therefore state Public Utilities Commission had authority to regulate rates thereon. Public Utilities Commission v. Springfield Terminal R. Co., (1920) 292 Ill. 505, 127 N. E. 128.

An order for the erection of a new station and an industrial track may be made by a state public utilities commission notwithstanding the fact that the railroad was under federal control. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Public Utilities Commission, (Colo. 1920) 190 Pac. 539.

RIVERS, HARBORS AND CANALS

Vol. IX, p. 49, sec. 4. [First ed., vol. VI, p. 801.]

Condition precedent to suit in admiralty.—To same effect as 1919 Supplement annotation, see The O. L. Halenbeck, (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1919) 260 Fed. 554, 171 C. C. A. 338. The court said:

"After the writing, and before the filing of this opinion, the Supreme Court of the United States in P. Sanford Ross, Inc., v. United States, 250 U. S. 269, 39 Sup. Ct. 452, 63 L. Ed. — (decided June 2, 1919), held against the contentions of the appellant which are urged upon us in these appeals. There the court said:

"The act of Congress here in question imposes a direct liability upon the vessel for the pecuniary penalties prescribed, and declares that it may be proceeded against summarily by libel in any District Court of the United States having jurisdiction thereof. This precludes the idea that the proceeding by libel is to be deferred to await the possibly slow course of criminal proceedings against the person individually responsible. It treats the offending vessel as a guilty thing, upon the familiar principle of the maritime law, and permits a proceeding against her in any court of admiralty 'having jurisdiction thereof'—meaning any court within whose jurisdiction she may be found."

Vol. IX, p. 60, sec. 15. [First ed., vol. VI, p. 817.]

Knowledge of wreck required.—"We agree with the decision in Eastern Corporations v. Great Lakes, 256 Fed. 497, that the act of Congress above quoted is a criminal statute, and further, that the duty of marking a wreck thereby imposed does not arise until the owner receives information that his vessel is sunk." Sullivan v. C. Ross, (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1920) 263 Fed. 348.

Violation as negligence.—"The effect of any failure to observe the provisions of this statute raises a presumption of negligence, or, as the matter is sometimes put, a failure to do what the act requires is evidence of negligence; but it is no more. Thus for civil purposes the act is but declaratory of the general maritime law in this respect." Sullivan v. C. Ross, (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1920) 263 Fed. 348, holding that presumption was not rebutted by evidence.

Dredge anchored in narrow channel.—In Otto Marmet Coal, etc., Co. v. Fieger-Austin Dredging Co., (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1919) 259 Fed. 435, 170 C. C. A. 411, it was held that there was a violation of this section by the anchoring of a dredging plant at night near a sharp bend in a narrow channel of the Ohio river.

Vol. IX, p. 81, sec. 9. [First ed., vol. VI, p. 805.]

Navigable waters entirely within the limits of a state.—Under this section the authority of a state to authorize the erection of a bridge at points where both banks of a navigable stream are parts of the same state remains subject to the approval of Congress as expressed through its administrative officers. People v. Hudson River Connecting R. Corp., (1920) 228 N. Y. 203, 126 N. E. 801, wherein the court said:

"This act is mainly concerned with maintaining freedom of navigation and preventing obstructions thereto from being erected. So far as the erection of bridges or other obstructions to navigation is concerned, it is an act of exclusion, and prohibits their commencement until the consent of Congress is obtained, together with the approval of plans by the Chief of Engineers and the Secretary of War. Cummings v. Chicago, 188 U. S. 410, 23 Sup. Ct. 472, 47 L. Ed. 525.

"This act does not prohibit the erection of such structures under the authority of the Legislature of a state at points where both banks of the navigable waters are parts of the same state, provided that the location and plans are submitted to and approved by the Chief of Engineers and the Secretary of War before construction is commenced.

"Under this act the authority of the state to authorize such structures wholly within its limits remains subject to the approval of Congress as expressed through its administrative officers. Miller v. Mayor of New York, 109 U. S. 385, 3 Sup. Ct. 228, 27 L. Ed. 971."

Interference by state with bridge franchise granted by Congress.—The legislature of a state cannot interfere with the plenary power of Congress to authorize a bridge for interstate commerce by depriving the corporation authorized and vested with a grant of franchise from Congress, of the power intra vires to avail itself of the franchise by subsequently imposing the penalty of injunction and forfeiture of its charter for exercise of the franchise. People v. Hudson River Connecting R. Corp., (1920) 228 N. Y. 203, 126 N. E. 801.

Taxation of bridge by state.—The fact that Congress has authorized the building of a railroad bridge over a navigable river does not prevent the state from taxing it where Congress is silent on the matter. People v. St. Louis, (1920) 291 Ill. 600, 126 N. E. 529, wherein the court said:

"It is also argued by counsel for appellant that as this bridge was constructed under the authority of an act of Congress it cannot be taxed by the state authorities. It is clear that by this act of Congress the federal government did not retain exclusive power of legislation on all matters pertaining to this bridge; therefore, under the reasoning of Moline Water Power Co. v. Cox, 252 Ill. 348, 96 N. E. 1044, the state authorities retained the power to tax the bridge. The federal government has authorized the construction of several railroad bridges over the Mississippi river near St. Louis, and one of them—the Eads bridge, as we understand it—is not only used by railroads, but it is used for street cars, vehicles, and pedestrians, and yet it has been taxed by the state authorities. People v. St. Louis Merchants' Bridge Co. (No. 12580), 291 Ill. 95, 125 N. E. 752."

Approval of War Department.—The provision of this section requiring the approval of the Chief of Engineers and of the Secretary of War to any modification of plans, does not mean that the Board of Engineers of the War Department shall act as consulting or supervising architects in matters of bridge construction. Their only purpose and obligation is to pass upon the plans for structures in navigable streams in order to determine their effect upon streams from the standpoint of navigation, and not in any sense for the purpose of determining their structural or architectural efficiency. Hence, where changes in plans do not affect the location of the bridge or its obstructive nature in the stream by enlarging its size or changing its shape, they need not be submitted to the War Department. Freeport Texas Co. v. Houston, etc., R. Co., (S. D. Tex. 1919) 257 Fed. 213.

Waiver of penalty for failure to construct bridge within time limit set by Congress.—Where an act of Congress granted authority to a railroad company to construct, maintain and operate a bridge, together with the necessary approaches thereto, across the Hudson river in New York state at a certain point and a later act extended the time for commencing and completing the bridge, whatever penalty or forfeiture is incurred by the failure of the company to comply with the provisions of the original statute is waived by the only authority entitled to enforce such forfeiture. People v. Hudson River Connecting R. Corp., (1920) 229 N. Y. 203, 126 N. E. 801.

Failure to open draw promptly.—Where a tug with barges in tow on approaching a drawbridge signals for it to be opened and the engineer in charge of the drawbridge fails to open it promptly or to respond to the tug's signals, the owner of the drawbridge is liable for a collision between one of the barges in tow and a barge anchored near the shore, occasioned by the tug's attempting to make a turn in order to avoid colliding with the bridge. The Charles Mulford, (S. D. N. Y. 1916) 257 Fed. 131.

In New England Fuel, etc., Co. v. Boston, (D. C. Mass.) 1919) 257 Fed. 778, it was held that a city, which maintained a drawbridge, was liable for a collision by a steamship and tug with the bridge, where it appeared that the bridge tenders failed to open the draw promptly, thereby causing the steamship to collide with the bridge, and, after opening it, permitted it to swing too far and injure the tug while it was passing through the draw opening. The steamship was also held liable for negligent handling of its engines.

Failure to take precautions.—In The No. 9, (D. C. Del. 1919) 258 Fed. 693, it was held that a tug was liable for injuries to a tow caused by a collision of the tow with a drawbridge while going through the draw, where it appeared that the master of the tug knew that the draw was defective and did not take timely measures of precaution.

War emergency services.—See annotation under Act of July 1, 1918, supra, p. 662.

Revision of scale of wages.—It would be legal for the Panama Canal authorities to revise the scale of wages in effect on the Isthmus so that the same should be based on the wages of civilian employees of the naval establishments in the continental United States after the latter have received the benefit of the increases provided in the Naval Appropriation Act of March 4, 1917 (39 Stat. 1195). SALVAGE

Amount of salvage.—In The Professor Koch, (D. C. Mass. 1919) 260 Fed. 969, it was held that three tugs, whose combined value was $175,000, were entitled to a salvage award of $10,000, for pulling a barge, valued with her cargo at $930,000, off a rock where she was stranded, towing her inside the breakwater of a nearby harbor and later towing her into another harbor, where such salvage services were performed in fair weather and neither the tugs nor the men on them were subjected to any extraordinary hazards.

In The Bessie L. Morse, (D. C. Me. 1919) 260 Fed. 252, it was held that a gasoline boat, worth from $5,000 to $6,000, was entitled to a salvage award of $500 for towing ashore a schooner, worth from $2,800 to $6,000, which was afire, where there was danger of the explosion of gasoline on board the schooner.

In The Jason, (E. D. Va. 1919) 257 Fed. 438, it was held that a tug worth $75,000 was entitled to an award of $15,000 for salvaging a ship and cargo worth $3,600,000, which had been seriously damaged, while at anchor in a harbor, by a collision with another ship during a storm.

Apportionment of award.—Whenever a salvage award is made to the master and crew of a vessel, it should be shared among them in proportion to the wage bill. The F. Q. Barstow, (D. C. Md. 1919) 257 Fed. 793.

Vol. IX, p. 122, sec. 3. [First ed., 1914 Supp., p. 384.]

When life salvors share in award to salvors of vessel.—Under this section life salvors are not entitled to any part of the contract price awarded to a towing company for raising a sunken vessel after the life salvors have performed their services. In re St. Joseph-Chicago Steamship Co., (N. D. Ill. 1919) 262 Fed. 535. In discussing the effect of this section, the court said:

"The statute in question was intended only to apply to cases where the vessel and cargo, together with her crew, including also passengers, were exposed to a common danger threatening their destruction and loss; to cases where service is rendered by a volunteer adventurer, and such service is successful in saving lives and property, consisting either of the cargo, the vessel, or both. The services rendered in the saving of lives were to be considered when remuneration for salvage was awarded, so that they might participate in and be given a part of any sum paid for saving the vessel or other property. In such a case, the life salvor, by virtue of his service rendered at the time that the property was saved, became a cosalvor, with a right to recover compensation for a service, when, under the general maritime law, he would get nothing. It was for the purpose of enabling such a salvor to recover for his services that the statute was passed. It was not intended that, as between different sets of salvors, the life salvor was to participate in awards which might be made for services rendered months, and even years, after the life-saving service had been performed.

"The salvage service in saving life, to be compensated for under this statute, must have been performed substantially at the time and while both lives and property were in distress and danger of loss; not, of course, at the same instant of time, but during the period of peril. The life salvors, therefore, are not entitled, under the statute, to any part of the contract price awarded to the towing company for raising and righting the Eastland.

"Second. The claim and lien of the towing company, being for services last in point of time, is paramount and preferred over all others, including those of the life salvors. The life salvors rendered their services on the day of the disaster and the two days following, and we may assume that those services were fully accomplished some days before any attempt was made to raise the steamer. We have, then, this situation: All of the lives saved that could be, and the steamer lying on the bottom of the Chicago river, an obstruction to navigation, and of no value to any one as she lay there. The towing company entered into its contract to raise the boat on July 27, 1915; began work on August 4, 1915; completed the contract and turned the ship over to the owners on August 16th of that same year. The services, therefore, of the towing company were subsequent in point of time to those of the life salvors. There was no connection between the services of the towing company and those of the life salvors. The life salvors had no claim for their services against anybody at the time they were rendered. The towing company was engaged in the wrecking business on the Great Lakes, and was under no obligation, legal or moral, to raise the steamer; and if it had not done the work successfully under its contract there would have been no property to sell, and no fund, or at least a very small one, for distribution. Nothing that the life salvors did contributed to the success of the subsequent service rendered by the towing company.

"It is a well-known rule of the maritime law of the United States that the last salvor is entitled to preference over the first or former salvors. The two services, namely, life-saving service and wrecking service, were rendered at different times, and were not allied in any way. The first service in no way helped the second service, or preserved any of the property that was finally salvaged by the towing company. As priority, in point of logic, depends upon the rank of benefits conferred, so, therefore, must the towing company's claim be preferred to the claims of the life salvors."

Failure to present claims within limitation period.—Life salvors are not entitled to any part of the contract price awarded to a towing company for raising a sunken vessel, where they do not present their claims until more than two years after the date when they performed their services. In re St. Joseph-Chicago Steamship Co., (N. D. Ill. 1919) 262 Fed. 535, wherein the court said:

"The act of Congress under which these life salvors proceed created a new cause of action. 'A statute which in itself creates a new liability, gives an action to enforce it unknown to the common law, and fixes the time within which that action may be commenced, is not a statute of limitations. It is a statute of creation, and the commencement of the action within the time it fixes is an indispensable condition of the liability and of the action which it permits. Such a statute is an offer of an action on condition that it be commenced within the specified time. If the offer is not accepted in the only way in which it can be accepted, by a commencement of the action within the specified time, the action and the right of action no longer exist, and the defendant is exempt from liability.' Partee v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co., 204 Fed. 970, 123 C. C. A. 292, 51 L. R. A. (N. S.) 721, and cases cited.

"It is, however, now contended that inasmuch as no claim is made against the steamer or her proceeds directly, but only against the amount awarded to the towing company, that the two-year limitation in the statute does not apply until after the award to the towing company had been established, and it is argued that until the decision of the Court of Appeals on July 23, 1918, the right of the towing company to recover for its services had not been determined, and that therefore the life salvors had until July 23, 1920, to file their claims for a fair share of the remuneration awarded to the towing company.

"The language of the statute is plain, and not in any degree ambiguous or doubtful. On the day their services were rendered the life salvors had some sort of claim, present, contingent, inchoate, or otherwise, and they were bound, under the law, to present that claim to this court where the limitation proceedings were pending. They have not brought themselves within the exception noted in section 4, and no explanation is made of the reason why they were late in asking for relief. Indeed, I am of the opinion that, inasmuch as the fundamental law required the claims to be filed within a certain time, no explanation would excuse the delay. The court is powerless, under the language of the act, to grant an extension of time beyond the two years, except as provided by the statute, and this case does not come within that exception."

SEAMEN

Vol. IX, p. 139, sec. 4511. [First ed., vol. VI, p. 853.]

Requirements of articles—Voyage and services indefinite.—Shipping articles between the master of a vessel and the libelants at Baltimore prescribed the voyage and duration thereof as follows: "From the port of Baltimore, Md., to such ports and places in any part of the world, via an American port, as the master may direct, and back to a final port of discharge in the United States, for a term of time not to exceed six calendar months." This provision was held too indefinite and uncertain as to the voyage and services contracted for to bind the libelants, and they were entitled to be paid the wages due them up to the date of their refusal to continue the voyage. The Quogue, (E. D. Va. 1919) 261 Fed. 414.

Constitutionality.—To same effect as 1919 Supplement annotation, see The Westmeath, (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1919) 258 Fed. 446, 169 C. C. A. 462, wherein it was said:

"That the statute impairs, or rather abrogates, the foreign seaman's shipping contract, is admitted; but we know of no reason why Congress, if so minded, may not pass such a statute. 'It is no answer (to a plain congressional declaration) to say that it interferes with the validity of contracts, for no provision of the Constitution prohibits Congress from doing this, as it does the states.' Mitchell v. Clark, 110 U. S. 643, 4 Sup. Ct. 170, 28 L. Ed. 279.

"It is, however, urged that any interpretation of the act which enables a seaman on a foreign ship to accomplish that which is embodied in the decree appealed from, is violative of the Fifth Amendment, in that it interferes 'with the liberty to contract on such terms as may be advisable to the parties to the contract,' and is therefore 'a deprivation, of liberty without due process of law,' and for this reliance is placed upon Allgeyer v. Louisiana, 165 U. S. 578, 17 Sup. Ct. 427, 41 L. Ed. 832. In our opinion this very contention was in substance made in Patterson v. The Eudora, 190 U. S. 169, 23 Sup. Ct. 821, 47 L. Ed. 1002, and there disposed of; and this decision was recently approved in The Talus, 249 U. S. —, 39 Sup. Ct. 84, 63 L. Ed. — (December 23, 1918).

"The employment and discharge, treatment, status, and punishment of merchant seamen has long been a part of the regulation of water-borne commerce. With the advisability or expediency of declaring all seamen, irrespective of nationality, to have a status, or be entitled to treatment when within a harbor of the United States totally differing from the treatment or status accorded them in every other part of the world, we have no concern, but entertain no doubt of the power of Congress to enact this statute as a commercial regulation."

Congress could, as it did in this section, make applicable to foreign seamen on foreign vessels when in American ports the provisions authorizing seamen to demand and receive one-half the wages earned at any port where the vessel, after the voyage has been commenced, shall load or deliver cargo before the voyage is ended, notwithstanding any contractual obligations to the contrary. Strathearn Steamship Co. v. Dillon, (1920) 252 U. S. 348, 40 S. Ct. 350, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) — (affirming (C. C. A. 5th Cir. 1919) 256 Fed. 631, 168 C. C. A. 25) wherein the court commenting on the contention of attorneys that the court's construction of this section which subordinated contractual obligations of foreign seamen to the statutory obligation said: "We come, then, to consider the contention that this construction renders the statute unconstitutional as being destructive of contract rights. But we think this contention must be decided adversely to the petitioner upon the authority of previous cases in this court. The matter was fully considered in Patterson v. The Eudora, 190 U. S. 169, 47 L. ed. 1002, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 821, in which the previous decisions of this court were reviewed, and the conclusion reached that the jurisdiction of this government over foreign merchant vessels in our ports was such as to give authority to Congress to make provisions of the character now under consideration; that it was for this government to determine upon what terms and conditions vessels of other countries might be permitted to enter our harbors, and to impose conditions upon the shipment of sailors in our own ports, and make them applicable to foreign as well as domestic vessels. Upon the authority of that case, and others cited in the opinion therein, we have no doubt as to the authority of Congress to pass a statute of this sort, applicable to foreign vessels in our ports, and controlling the employment of payment of seamen as a condition of the right of such foreign vessels to enter and use the ports of the United States."

Right to one-half wages—Necessity of demand.—To same effect as original annotation, see The Italier, (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1919) 257 Fed. 712, 168 C. C. A. 662, wherein the court said: "It seems, also, to be thought that the demand for half wages under R. S. § 4530, as amended, is a ceremony of no moment, and may be made (as it was made in this case) after the seaman leaves his ship (in Judge Story's phrase) animo dereliquendi. Such is not the case. The seaman's is a lawful engagement and its propriety is to be judged primarily by the law of the ship's flag. But Congress has plainly declared that, when foreign vessels are in harbors of the United States, R. S. § 4530, as amended, shall apply to seamen on such vessels. Therefore such seamen are entitled to one-half of the wages earned down to the time of demand made, and such demand must be made within the territorial jurisdiction of the United States, and at a port where said vessel 'shall load or deliver cargo.'"

Time of demand.—A foreign vessel need not have been five days in an American port before seamen thereon may make the wage demand provided for by this section. Strathearn Steamship Co. v. Dillon, (1920) 252 U. S. 348, 40 S. Ct. 350, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) — (affirming (C. C. A. 5th Cir. 1919) 256 Fed. 631, 168 C. C. A. 25) wherein the court said: "But it is insisted that Dillon's action was premature, as he made a demand upon the master within less than five days after the vessel arrived in an American port. This contention was sustained in the district court, but it was ruled otherwise in the court of appeals. Turning to the language of the act, it enacts in substance that the demand shall not be made before the expiration of five days, nor oftener than once in five days. Subject to such limitation, such demand may be made in the port where the vessel stops to load or deliver cargo. It is true that the act is made to apply to seamen on foreign vessels while in United States ports, but this is far from requiring that the wages shall be earned in such ports, or that the vessels shall be in such ports five days before demand for one-half the wages earned is made. It is the wages of the voyage for which provision is made, with the limitation of the right to demand one-half of the amount earned not oftener than once in five days. The section permits no demand until five days after the voyage has begun, and then provides that it may be made at every port where the vessel stops to load or deliver cargo, subject to the five-day limitation. If the vessel must be five days in port before demand can be made, it would defeat the purpose of the law as to vessels not remaining that long in port, and would run counter to the manifest purpose of Congress to prevent a seaman from being without means while in a port of the United States.

"We agree with the Circuit Court of Appeals of the fifth circuit, whose judgment we are now reviewing, that the demand was not premature. It is true that the Circuit Court of Appeals for the second circuit held in the case of The Italier, 168 C. C. A. 662, 257 Fed. 712, that demand made before the vessel had been in port for five days was premature; this was upon the theory that the law was not in force until the vessel had arrived in a port of the United States. But the limitation upon demand has no reference to the length of stay in the domestic port. The right to recover wages is controlled by the provisions of the statute and includes wages earned from the beginning of the voyage. It is the right to demand and recover such wages, with the limitation of the intervals of demand as laid down in the statute, which is given to the seaman while the ship is in a harbor of the United States."

To same effect, see The Sutherland, (D. C. Me. 1919) 260 Fed. 247.

Amount.—In order to ascertain the amount payable to a seaman under this section, his total wages should be divided in two, and all advances and previous payments deducted from the quotient, the remainder, if any, being the amount demandable by the seaman. The Rathlin Head, (C. C. A. 5th Cir. 1920) 262 Fed. 751. In passing upon this question, the court said:

"The question presented is as to the proper method of computing the amount payable to seamen at intermediate ports under this section, in cases in which previous payments or advances have been made. Appellants contend that from the total wages earned from the commencement of the voyage to the date of demand there should first be deducted all advances and payments; one-half of the remainder being the amount payable. The appellee contends, and the district judge held, that the total wages should first be divided in two, and from the quotient should be deducted all advances and previous payments; the remainder, if any, being the amount demandable by the seaman.

"There has been diversity of opinion among the district courts as to which method is the proper one. The cases of The Ixion, 237 Fed. 142, and In re Ivertsen, 237 Fed. 498, hold in line with the contention of appellants. The cases of The Jacob N.

Haskell, 235 Fed. 914, The London, 238 Fed. 645, The Delagoa, 244 Fed. 835, The Meteor, 241 Fed. 735, and The Thor, 248 Fed. 942, support the contention of the appellee. The case of The London, 238 Fed. 645, was affirmed by the Circuit Court of Appeals for the third circuit in an opinion reported in 241 Fed. 863, 154 C. C. A. 565, and a certiorari to the decree of the Circuit Court of Appeals was denied by the Supreme Court, 245 U. S. 652, 38 Sup. Ct. 11, 62 L. Ed. 532. In the case of Sandberg v. McDonald, Claimant of the Talus, 248 U. S. 185, 39 Sup. Ct. 84, 63 L. Ed. 200, the Supreme Court impliedly recognized the correctness of the method adopted by the district judge in this case. The statement of facts contained in the opinion of the Supreme Court in that case recites that—

"The master then paid to them [the demanding seamen] a sum which, with the cash paid them and the price of the articles purchased as stated above, together with the advances made in Liverpool, equaled or exceeded the one-half of the wages then earned by each of them from the commencement of his service for the ship."

"While the adequacy of the payment was questioned in that case on a different ground—i. e., the alleged invalidity of advances made to the seamen in Liverpool—the payments would have been insufficient (granting the present contention of appellants to be correct), even after the allowance of the Liverpool advances, and the Supreme Court, by its affirmation of the decree dismissing the libel, in view of the language quoted, in effect approved the method of computing the half wages demandable under the statute, which was adopted in that case in the court below, and which was that adopted in the district court in this case.

"The 'one-half part of the wages which he shall have then earned' is literally one-half of the wages earned by the seaman to the date of demand, without deductions. The language of the act places emphasis upon wages earned, and not upon amounts due when demand is made. The statute does not concern itself with what is due as upon a partial or final settlement, but requires the payment of an amount proportioned upon earnings rather than upon balances due. While the statute does not expressly say that wages theretofore paid shall be taken into consideration in the computation, the absurdity of a contrary construction is enough to warrant the implication that they are to be considered. If the ascertainment, required by the act, was of the amount owing on a settlement, the ordinary method of computation would be to first deduct from gross earnings previous payments and allow one-half of the residue. But the statute says 'one-half part of the wages which he shall have then earned.' His gross earnings or total wages must therefore be divided in two, in order to arrive at 'one-half part of the wages which he shall have then earned,' which is what the statute read literally accords him the right to demand. The implied condition to the demand is that he shall not have already received the whole or any part of the wages demanded. Otherwise, a double payment would result, and the act will not be construed so as to produce such an inequitable result. The implied condition makes it necessary to deduct from the half earnings, when so ascertained, all previous payments. The remainder is what the seaman is entitled to demand. The evident aim of Congress was to provide that the seaman should be entitled, pending the termination of the voyage, to demand and receive at intermediate ports of loading or unloading, with five-day intervals, a sum equal to one-half of his then earnings, when there was added to it all previous payments, and that the master should retain until the termination of the voyage the remaining half of the seaman's wages as an assurance against desertion. . . . Our conclusion is that the weight of authority and of reason is persuasive that Congress intended to provide by section 4 of the Seamen's Act of 1915, that the half of a seaman's wages should remain in the hands of the master until the voyage was ended, as a security against his leaving the ship, and that the seaman should be entitled to receive only a sum, which at the time demanded would represent one-half of his then earned wages, when there was added to it the total of all previous advances and payments."

Effect of advances.—The prevailing construction of this section is that when a vessel arrives at a port in the United States, the seaman is entitled to be paid one-half of the wages he has earned up to that time, and against such one-half there must be charged all prior payments which he has received. The Sutherland, (D. C. Me. 1919) 260 Fed. 247.

Where seamen on a foreign ship in a United States port make a demand under this section for one-half of their earned wages, credit should be given to the ship in respect of advances made to the claimants beyond the boundaries of the United States. The Italier, (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1919) 257 Fed. 712, 168 C. C. A. 662.

Effect of desertion.—Seamen who desert a vessel before making a demand under this section for one-half of their earned wages, are not entitled to recover any wages. The Italier, (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1919) 257 Fed. 712, 168 C. C. A. 662. In discussing the effect of desertion in such a case, the court said:

"It seems to be thought (judging from the tenor of argument in this and similar cases) that the Seamen's Act of 1915 has abolished the offense of desertion in the mercantile marine. While it is true that arrest for desertion, the bodily return of a deserter to his ship, and generally the holding of a seaman to his shipping contract by physical force, are things of the past, even in respect of foreign vessels so far as the United States is concerned (sections 16-18), desertion is still an offense on American vessels, entailing (inter alia) forfeiture of 'all or any part of the wages or emoluments which the [deserter] has then earned' (R. S. § 4596, as amended).

"Desertion' is not defined by any act of Congress. Quite possibly the definition of desertion varies in different countries. This record does not inform us whether Belgium defines desertion in any special way. Although the Belgian law would control, if proven (The Nigretia, 255 Fed. 56, — C. C. A. —), we may, in the absence of such evidence, apply the general maritime law.

"The definition of desertion 'in the sense of the maritime law' is settled, and consists in 'a quitting of the ship and her service, not only without leave and against the duty of the party, but with an intent not again to return to the ship's duty.' Cloutman v. Tunison, 1 Sumn. 373, Fed. Cas. No. 2,907, where the subsequent cases are collated. Within this definition we have no doubt on the evidence that all the libelants who made demand for half wages deserted before the presentation of such demand. . . . Since a deserter may forfeit all his wages, it is also a prerequisite to recovery under the statute that there should be wages due him when he makes demand, and there are no wages due to a deserter."

Foreign seamen.—To same effect as original annotation, see The Sutherland, (D. C. Me. 1919) 260 Fed. 247, wherein it was said:

"The theory of the courts appears to be that, under the statute, all vessels coming into the jurisdiction of the country come under the laws and regulations of the United States, and that it is competent for Congress to prescribe conditions of entry, and of clearance, for foreign vessels, since it may exclude them altogether. Under the construction given this statute by the federal courts, I must conclude that the statute is applicable to these libelants, although they were foreign seamen on a foreign vessel."

Foreign seamen on foreign vessels in American ports are entitled to the benefits of the provisions of this section notwithstanding contractual obligations to the contrary. Strathearn Steamship Co. v. Dillon, (1920) 252 U. S. 348, 40 S. Ct. 350, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) — (affirming (C. C. A. 5th Cir. 1919) 256 Fed. 631, 168 C. C. A. 25) wherein the court said:

"In Sandberg v. McDonald, 249 U. S. 185, 39 Sup. Ct. 84, 63 L. Ed. 200, and Neilson v. Rhine Shipping Co., 248 U. S. 205, 39 Sup. Ct. 89, 63 L. Ed. 208, we had occasion to deal with section 11 of the Seamen's Act and held that it did not invalidate advancement of seamen's wages in foreign countries when legal where made. The instant case requires us to consider now section 4 of the same act. . . .

"This section has to do with the recovery of wages by seamen, and by its terms gives to every seaman on a vessel of the United States the right to demand one-half the wages which he shall have then earned at every port where such vessel, after the voyage has been commenced, shall load or deliver cargo before the end of the voyage, and stipulations in the contract to the contrary are declared to be void. A failure of the master to comply with the demand releases the seaman from his contract, and entitles him to recover full payment of the wages, and the section is made applicable to seamen on foreign vessels while in harbors of the United States, and the courts of the United States are open to such seamen for enforcement of the act.

"This section is an amendment of section 4530 of the Revised Statutes; it was intended to supplant that section, as amended by the act of December 21, 1898, which provided:

"'Every seaman on a vessel of the United States shall be entitled to receive from the master of the vessel to which he belongs one-half part of the wages which shall be due him at every port where such vessel, after the voyage has been commenced, shall load or deliver cargo before the voyage is ended unless the contrary be expressly stipulated in the contract,' etc.

"The section, of which the statute now under consideration is an amendment, expressly excepted from the right to recover one-half of the wages those cases in which the contract otherwise provided. In the amended section all such contract provisions are expressly rendered void, and the right to recover is given the seamen notwithstanding contractual obligations to the contrary. The language applies to all seamen on vessels of the United States, and the second proviso of the section as it now reads makes it applicable to seamen on foreign vessels while in harbors of the United States. The proviso does not stop there, for it contains the express provision that the courts of the United States shall be open to seamen on foreign vessels for its enforcement. The latter provision is of the utmost importance in determining the proper construction of this section of the act. It manifests the purpose of Congress to give the benefit of the act to seamen on foreign vessels, and to open the doors of the federal courts to foreign seamen. No such provision was necessary as to American seamen for they had the right, independently of this statute to seek redress in the courts of the United States, and if it were the intention of Congress to limit the provision of the act to American seamen, this feature would have been wholly superfluous.

"It is said that it is the purpose to limit the benefit of the act to American seamen, notwithstanding this provision giving access to seamen on foreign vessels to the courts of the United States, because of the title of the act in which its purpose is expressed 'to promote the welfare of American seamen in the merchant marine of the United States.' But the title is more than this, and not only declares the purposes to promote the welfare of American seamen but further to abolish arrest and imprisonment as a penalty for desertion and to secure the abrogation of treaty provisions in relation thereto; and to promote safety at sea. But the title of an act cannot limit the plain meaning of its text, although it may be looked to aid in construction in cases of doubt. Cornell v. Coyne, 192 U. S. 418, 430, 48 L. ed. 504, 509, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 383, and cases cited. Apart from the text, which we think plain, it is by no means clear that if the act were given a construction to limit its application to American seamen only, the purposes of Congress would be subverted, for such limited construction would have a tendency to prevent the employment of American seamen, and to promote the engagement of those who were not entitled to sue for one-half wages under the provisions of the law. But, taking the provisions of the act as the same are written, we think it plain that it manifests the purpose of Congress to place American and foreign seamen on an equality of right in so far as the privileges of this section are concerned, with equal opportunity to resort to the courts of the United States for the enforcement of the act. Before the amendment, as we have already pointed out, the right to recover one-half the wages could not be enforced in face of a contractual obligation to the contrary. Congress, for reasons which it deemed sufficient, amended the act so as to permit the recovery upon the conditions named in the statute."

SHIPPING AND NAVIGATION

Vol. IX, p. 246, sec. 2. [First ed., vol. VII, p. 92.]

Affixing facsimile signature to orders, vouchers, etc.—The affixing of the stamped facsimile signature of the Chief of the Bureau of Navigation to orders, vouchers, etc., properly initialed by officers duly authorized to affix the same thereto, under the direction and control of the Chief of the Bureau of Navigation, is a sufficient approval thereof by the Chief of the Bureau of Navigation. The Chief of the Bureau of Navigation cannot transfer to others any duty which the law imposes upon him in connection with the approval of orders, vouchers, etc., but after he has in some appropriate way passed judgment in such cases, the manual act of affixing his signature in evidence of his approval may be done by others thereunto duly authorized by him. 31 Op. Atty-Gen. 349, wherein it was said:

"From the opinion of the Judge Advocate General annexed to the above-mentioned letter it appears that there is no statute which requires the signing of the orders, vouchers, etc., concerning which this question is asked by the Chief of the Bureau of Navigation. The provisions of law and the regulations respecting this matter require only that the orders and vouchers be approved by the Department or by the Chief of the Bureau of Navigation.

"It further appears from the said opinion, that the Chief of the Bureau of Navigation of the Navy Department in July, 1918, delivered to two officers on duty in the said bureau rubber stamp facsimiles of his signature with the following instructions, 'This stamp "L. C. Palmer" when used and initialed by you is my official signature.'

"Attorney General Wirt, answering a very similar inquiry (1 Op. 670, 672), said:

"The adoption and acknowledgment of the signature, though written by another makes it a man's own. As to usage, and even official usage, I believe that by far the greater part of our judicial records are not signed by the clerk of the court himself, but are signed by deputies, who use the name of the clerk on a mere general verbal authority.

"There would be great difficulty in maintaining the proposition as a legal one, that when the law required signing, it means that it must be done with pen and ink. No book has laid down the proposition, or even given color to it. I believe that a signature made with straw dipped in blood would be equally valid and obligatory; and if so, where is the legal restriction on the implement which the signer may use? If he may use one pen, why may he not use several?—a polygraph, for example, or types—or a stamp, which the court, in Lemaing v. Stanley, said would be a sufficient satisfaction of the statutory requisition of signing. The law requires signing merely as an indication and proof of the parties' assent. It places the Treasury of United States under the guardianship of the Secretary. It requires that no money shall be drawn from the Treasury without his authority. The evidence which it demands of his authority, is, that the warrants shall be signed by him; but as to the method of signing, that is left entirely to himself. He may write his name in full, or he may write his initials; or he may print his initials with a pen; that pen may be made of a goose quill, or of metal; and I see no legal objection to its being made in the form of a stamp or copperplate. It is still his act; it flows from his assent, and is the evidence of that assent. . . . It is true that the stamp may be forged, but so also may the autograph of the Secretary. There would, perhaps, be more difficulty in the latter case than in the former; and the superior facility of forging a stamp, or a copperplate, may be a very good reason why the legislature should, by a positive law, prohibit the use of it, and define the manner in which the signing shall be done. They have not yet defined it; and the word signing does not, as we have seen, necessarily imply ex vi termini, the use of pen and ink, held and guided by the hand of the Secretary himself; it does not imply it in legal acceptance, at least.

"This reasoning has been accepted in subsequent opinions of the Attorney General."

Vessel licensed but not enrolled.—In The Scandanavia II, (D. C. Md. 1919) 258 Fed. 144, the court regarded it as doubtful whether the provisions of section 9 of the Shipping Board Act (1918 Supp. Fed. Stat. Ann. 788) applied to a vessel under twenty tons burden, which was licensed but not enrolled, and hence refused to declare such a vessel forfeited under this section because the license was fraudulently obtained.

Fees for attending to effects of deceased seaman.—A shipping commissioner is entitled to a fee for attending to the effects of a deceased seaman, since such service is not one of those for which the payment of a fee is prohibited by this section. In re Nickerson, (D. C. Mass. 1919) 260 Fed. 1020. Regarding this section, the court said:

"The effect of this statute is to make the commissioner's compensation dependent on the services which he renders, and to put the payment for those services on the United States, instead of on individuals. The commissioner is not entitled to be paid by the United States for services for which he would not, prior to the statute referred to, have been entitled to charge individuals.

"Under the law as it stood prior to the act of June 19, 1886, it must be taken as established in this court that the commissioner was entitled to make a charge for expenses in accordance with Judge Shepley's order of 1873. The question then is whether the statute in question abolishes that charge. The language of the act is extremely precise:

"No fee shall be charged . . . for the following services, to wit."

"Attending to the effects of a deceased seaman was not among the services scheduled. The compensation substituted by the act in lieu of fees is based upon 'a detailed report of such services and the fees provided by law.' It seems clear that the commissioner, if he reported such a fee as is here claimed, could not be allowed for it out of the treasury under the statute. It was obviously not the intention of Congress to change by the statute the amount of compensation, but only the method of payment."

II. Definition and nature of maritime lien.

III. Person entitled to lien.

V. "Repairs, supplies or other necessities."

VIII. Necessity that credit was given to vessel.

II. DEFINITION AND NATURE OF MARITIME LIEN (p. 348)

Merger of lien in account stated.—A maritime lien arising upon the completion of repairs to a vessel, is not lost because the repairer thereafter renders bills to the owner, nor because he alleges in his libel that the bills were retained without objection and therefore became an account stated. The Hattie Thomas, (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1920) 262 Fed. 943. The court said:

"In Morse Dry Dock & Repair Co. v. Munson S. S. Line (D. C.) 155 Fed. 150, affirmed by this court in 158 Fed. 1021, 85 C. C. A. 666, there was an action for repairs in similar form. The suit was in personam. The libel alleged that the respondent engaged the libellant to repair four steamers, that the work was finished, and that there was a balance due. The itemized bills for the work and materials against each vessel were delivered by the libellant to the respondent; the respondent admitted the correctness of the bills and promised to pay the account. The libel was drafted in very much the same language as is this. The court assumed jurisdiction in admiralty, and sustained the libel, and rendered a verdict, which was affirmed in this court, where it was said:

"We think the District Judge was correct in holding that the action was upon an account stated"—and affirmed upon the District Judge's opinion. Indeed, the answer admits by failure to deny that the appellee has a maritime lien. Dunham v. Cudlipp, 94 N. Y. 129.

"The acceptance of a note of a third person for a pre-existing debt does not constitute payment, in the absence of an express agreement to that effect. Atlas S. S. Co. v. Colombian Land Co., 102 Fed. 358, 42 C. C. A. 398. And the acceptance of the note of a third person and taken for debt of a vessel, does not discharge the maritime lien. The James T. Easton (D. C.) 49 Fed. 656. Where a debt was for material and supplies furnished to a vessel, and therefore cognizable in admiralty, it does not deprive a creditor of the right to sue in admiralty by taking a bond and mortgage, unless it appears that such was the express intention of the parties. Robins Dry Dock & Repair Co. v. Chesbrough, 216 Fed. 121, 132 C. C. A. 365. And so a maritime contract is not changed into a nonmaritime contract because of an account stated. Morse Dry Dock & Repair Co. v. Munson Steamship Line, 158 Fed. 1021, 85 C. C. A. 666."

III. PERSON ENTITLED TO LIEN (p. 348)

Part owner.—Under ordinary circumstances, one part owner of a vessel cannot obtain a lien against his co-owners, and a stockholder in a company owning a vessel has been regarded as a part owner. The rule is based upon the presumption that in such cases the advance or payment is made on the credit of the owner, not of the vessel. This presumption, however, may be rebutted. Thus, where advances and payments by stockholders in a corporation owning a vessel, are made on the credit of the vessel and the master is so informed at the time, and it does not appear that in claiming a lien they are acting unfairly either toward their co-owners (i. e., other stockholders in the corporation), or subsequent lienors, the lien will be allowed. The Puritan, (D. C. Mass. 1919) 258 Fed. 271.

Person believed to be acting as agent.—The fact that the master of a vessel believed that a person employed to make repairs was acting for a former employer, when in reality he was in business for himself, does not prevent such person from obtaining a lien under this section. The Kalfarli, (E. D. N. Y. 1920) 263 Fed. 958.

V. "REPAIRS, SUPPLIES OR OTHER NECESSARIES" (p. 349)

Wharfage.—Wharfage for an injured vessel and the use of a dry dock during its repair will support a lien under this section. The Andrew J. Smith, (E. D. N. Y. 1920) 263 Fed. 1004.

Supplies furnished in home port.—It is no defense to a suit for a maritime lien under this section that the repairs and supplies were furnished at the home port. The Lady Rasendyll, (N. D. N. Y. 1919) 258 Fed. 504.

Raising sunken vessel in home port.—A maritime lien under this section arises from the raising of a sunken vessel in its home port where such service is necessary as a part of repairing it. The Convoy, (E. D. N. Y. 1919) 257 Fed. 843, wherein the court, in discussing the scope of liens under this section, said:

"It is evident that a maritime lien may arise in a home port from furnishing either 'repairs' or 'necessaries.' If a vessel is placed on a dry dock or pumped out in order to raise her sufficiently for the making of repairs, a lien will arise for the entire bill, just as a lien for the actual work of repair is created. If, therefore, a vessel is lying on the bottom, and as a part of repairing a hole in the vessel she has to be raised, there seems to be no logical reason why it should not be treated as a part of the work from which a lien would arise. The essential element would seem to be that the vessel was to be repaired—that is, to be restored—and that she had not been abandoned or treated as material for the building of another vessel. On the other hand, if the sunken vessel had been treated as a total loss, and yet is saved, the fact that she might be restored to service by having certain repairs made would not take the work out of the class of salvage.

"In the case at bar the allegations of the libel show that the case is not one of salvage; the vessel was not, apparently, given up as a total loss, and hence the fact that the services were rendered in the home port does not affect the question which it presented, viz., whether the work of raising the vessel was either 'necessary' or a part of the repairs. Certainly nothing could be more necessary, in the ordinary sense, than the raising of the vessel; but the word 'necessaries' in the statute has been limited to such things as go to the actual equipment of the vessel as a navigating object. The statute expressly includes the use of a dry dock and marine railway; but mere services involving the consumption of power or fuel, such as towing, have been held not to be a 'necessary,' in the sense meant by the statute."

Sufficiency of evidence of repairs.—In The Elizabeth Monroe Smith, (C. C. A. 4th Cir. 1919) 258 Fed. 609, 170 C. C. A. 63, a vessel was libeled for a repair bill. The owner offered no testimony, and it appeared from the testimony of the shipbroker, who negotiated the sale of the ship to the owner, that he brought the ship from Philadelphia to the repairman at Norfolk for the purpose of having made to her the repairs recommended by the underwriters, and certain others which the owner itself wanted done, and that one of the owner's representatives was present directing the repairs. It was held that, in the absence of any countervailing testimony, this was sufficient to entitle the libellant to a lien under this section.

VIII. NECESSITY THAT CREDIT WAS GIVEN TO VESSEL (p. 352)

Charterer bound to furnish supplies.—In denying a lien for coal furnished to a vessel, the charterer being bound to provide coal, the court, in Curacao Trading Co. v. Bjorge, (C. C. A. 5th Cir. 1920) 263 Fed. 693, said:

"It is not claimed that under the law as it was before the enactment of the Act of June 23, 1910, 'relating to liens on vessels for repairs, supplies, or other necessities' (36 Stat. 604), the coal was so furnished as to give a lien on the vessel. Assuming, without deciding, that that statute is applicable to the transaction in question, we are not of opinion that the furnisher acquired the lien claimed. According to the evidence it was not procured by the master, or by any one authorized to bind the vessel therefor, but was procured by and furnished to the charterers on their order and credit. So far as appears, the master had nothing to do with getting the coal, except that, under directions from the charterers, of which the appellant was informed, he told the appellant how many tons were required. The statute does not create a presumption that a charterer, unless he is also either the 'ship's husband, master or a person to whom the management of the vessel at the port of supply is intrusted' has authority from the owner to procure repairs, supplies, or other necessities for the vessel. No lien on a vessel is given for supplies procured by one having no such relations to it that, under the terms of the statute, he is presumed to have authority from the owner to procure supplies."

Waiver of lien.—Where a fuel company furnishes coal to a vessel without knowledge that it is under charter and that the charterer is to pay for its coal, but on learning such facts, immediately bills the coal to the charterer and attempts to obtain payment from him, it thereby waives any lien it may have against the vessel under this section, and may not thereafter enforce it. The Eastern, (D. C. Mass. 1919) 257 Fed. 874.

Vol. IX, p. 354, sec. 2. [First ed., 1912 Supp., p. 353.]

"The management of the vessel."—In The Eastern, (D. C. Mass. 1919) 257 Fed. 874, coal was furnished to a vessel on the order of her chief engineer. It was held that "the management of the vessel," in respect to her coal supply, was intrusted to her chief engineer, and that the fuel company was entitled to a lien for furnishing it.

Vol. IX, p. 355, sec. 3. [First ed., 1912 Supp., p. 353.]

Clause in charter-party requiring charterer to save owner harmless from liens.—In The South Coast, (1920) 251 U. S. 519, 40 S. Ct. 233, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1917) 247 Fed. 84 159 C. C. A. 302, there was a libel against the steamer South Coast, belonging to the claimant, a California corporation, and registered in San Francisco, for necessary supplies furnished in San Pedro, California. The answer denies the authority of the master to bind the steamer. The bare vessel at the time was under charter to one Levick, the contract stipulating that Levick was to pay all charges and to save the owner harmless from all liens or expenses that it might be put to in consequence of such liens. There was also a provision that the owner might retake the vessel in case of failure of Levick to discharge within thirty days any debts which were liens upon it, and another for surrender of the vessel free of all liens upon Levick's failure to make certain payments. When the supplies were ordered, representatives of the owner in San Pedro warned the libellant that the steamer was under charter, and that he must not furnish the supplies on the credit of the vessel. He replied that he would not furnish them in any other way, but the reply does not affect the case, because, by the terms of the charter, the master who ordered them, although appointed by the owner, was under the orders of Levick. It is agreed by both courts below that if the owner had power to prevent the attaching of a lien by its warning, it had done so. Both courts, however, held that the charter gave the master power to create the lien. 233 Fed. 327, 159 C. C. A. 302, 247 Fed. 84. The Supreme Court, on certiorari, affirmed the Circuit Court's holding. The court, through Mr. Justice Holmes, said: "By the Act of June 23, 1910, c. 373, § 1, 36 Stat. 604, a maritime lien is given for such supplies, and by section 3 a presumption is declared that a master appointed by a charterer has authority from the owner to procure them. It is true that the act goes on that nothing in it shall be considered to give a lien where the furnisher knew, or by the exercise of reasonable diligence could have ascertained, that because of the terms of a charter party, or for any other reason, the person ordering the necessities was without authority to bind the vessel. But the authority of the owner to prohibit or to speak was displaced, so far as the charter went, by that conferred upon the charterers, who became owners pro hac vice, and, therefore, unless the charter excluded the master's power, the owner could not forbid its use. The charter party recognizes that liens may be imposed by the charterers and allowed to stand for less than a month and there seems to be no sufficient reason for supposing the words not to refer to all the ordinary maritime liens recognized by the law. The statute had given a lien for supplies in a domestic port and therefore had made that one of these ordinary liens. Therefore the charterer was assumed to have power to authorize the master to impose a lien in a domestic port, and if the assumption expressed in words was not equivalent to a grant of power, at least it cannot be taken to have excluded it. There was nothing from which the furnisher could have ascertained that the master did not have power to bind the ship."

Proviso—Generally.—In Coyle v. North America Steamship Corp., (C. C. A. 5th Cir. 1920) 262 Fed. 250, it was held that the single fact that the furnisher of supplies to a vessel was informed that it was under charter to the party on whose order the supplies were furnished did not charge such furnisher with notice of the terms of the charter party, and that where the order was given by a business associate of the charterer, on the requisition of the ship's engineer, and the master and engineer of the ship acquiesced in the delivery of the supplies to the vessel, it must be regarded as having been given by the master of the vessel, and the vessel was bound thereby. The court said:

"The mere fact that one knows or is informed that a ship is under charter is not enough to charge him with notice of the terms of the charter party. The George Dumois, 68 Fed. 926, 15 C. C. A. 675. In the case just cited the claim was for coal furnished to a ship in a foreign port on an order given by one known to be the charterer of it. The coal was received by the master and officers of the ship, was a necessary supply to the ship, without which the voyage could not have been prosecuted, and was used by the ship in prosecuting the voyage. That case arose and was decided before the enactment of the above-mentioned act of June 23, 1910, relating to liens on vessels for repairs, etc. It was held that under the law as it then existed a lien on the ship resulted from the furnishing of supplies under the circumstances stated, unless it was shown that the furnisher relied on the credit of the owner or charterer, not of the ship, and that, though the furnisher knew that the order for the coal was given by the charterer, he was not bound to know the terms of the charter party, which in fact included a provision requiring the charterer to pay for such supplies. If there had been no change in the law, that decision would be an authority supporting a ruling in the instant case that the furnishing of coal by the libellant was under such circumstances as to have the effect of creating a lien on the ship.

"While the evidence showed that Mr. Hiller, in giving the order for the coal, did so at the request of a business associate of the charterer, it also showed that when he gave the order he was apprised of the amount of coal needed by a requisition of the ship's engineer, an appointee of the owner, and that the master and the engineer acquiesced in the delivery of the coal to the ship; the former giving a receipt for it. An order so given is to be regarded as given by the ship's master, though a business associate of the charterer co-operated in procuring the giving of it. The Philadelphia, 75 Fed. 684, 21 C. C. A. 501; Norwegian Steamship Co. v. Washington, 57 Fed. 224, 6 C. C. A. 313; In re Alaska Fishing & Development Co. (D. C.) 167 Fed. 875.

"The necessity, existing under the law as it formerly was, of alleging and proving that necessary supplies furnished on such an order as the one shown in the instant case were furnished on the credit of the vessel, is dispensed with by the provision of the above referred to act of June 23, 1910, that designated persons, including a ship's master, 'shall be presumed to have authority from the owner or owners to procure repairs, supplies, and other necessities for the vessel.' This provision is qualified by the following one contained in section 3 of the act:

"'But nothing in this act shall be construed to confer a lien when the furnisher knew, or by the exercise of reasonable diligence could have ascertained, that because of the terms of the charter party, agreement for the sale of the vessel, or for any other reason, the person ordering the repairs, supplies, or other necessities was without authority to bind the vessel therefor.'

"Language used in the last-quoted provision, 'nothing in this act shall be construed to confer a lien,' etc., is some indication of the absence of an intention to deprive a furnisher of a lien on a ship for necessary supplies furnished to it under such circumstances that he would have had a lien under the previously existing law, unaffected by any lien statute. It is questionable whether the same meaning properly can be attributed to the proviso that it would have had if, instead of the last-quoted language, it had used some such language as the following:

"'But the furnisher shall not have a lien if he knew, or by the exercise of reasonable diligence,' etc.

"If the transaction now in question had occurred before the enactment of the act mentioned, as it was a furnishing on the order of the master of necessary supplies to a ship in a foreign port, there would have been a lien on the ship, unless it had been shown that the supplies were not furnished on its credit, or that the libellant knew, or by the exercise of reasonable diligence could have ascertained, that the master was without authority to bind the vessel therefor, and the circumstance that the libellant knew that the ship was under charter would not have been enough to rebut the presumption that the supplies were obtained on its credit, though the charterer participated in the ordering of them, and the charter party required the charterer to pay for them. The George Dumois, supra. As the libellant would have had a lien if the statute had not been enacted, there is some ground for saying that language used in the statute stands in the way of its being given the effect of preventing a lien in the libellant's favor attaching.

"But, assuming that the statute has the effect of preventing the furnishing of necessary supplies to a vessel in a foreign port giving a lien on it, if a lien would not have resulted if the transaction had been in the vessel's home port, it is plain that an effect of the statute is to either create or recognize a presumption of the validity of such an order as the one on which the libellant furnished the coal, and that proof of the giving of that order and of compliance with it by delivering the coal to the ship with its master's acquiescence was prima facie sufficient to entitle the libellant to the lien claimed, and put upon the claimant the burden of proving that the master was without authority to bind the vessel, and that the libellant knew, or by the exercise of reasonable diligence could have known, of such lack of authority. The Yankee, 233 Fed. 919, 147 C. C. A. 593."

Reasonable diligence.—Where coal is furnished to a vessel at the request of its engineer in pursuance of a regular custom, and the information that it is under charter is not communicated to the fuel company until after the coal has been furnished, the company is not lacking in reasonable diligence, within the meaning of this section, because it did not ascertain the existence of the charter before putting the coal on board. The Eastern, (D. C. Mass. 1919) 257 Fed. 874.

Rebuttal of presumption of master's authority.—"Nothing in the act indicates that the presumption of authority in a vessel's master to procure necessities for it could be rebutted or destroyed by showing that the furnisher knew or was informed that the vessel was under charter. To rebut or overcome the presumption of the master's authority to bind the vessel, it must be shown that the furnisher knew, or by the exercise of reasonable diligence could have ascertained, that the terms of a charter party, or something else, deprived the master of authority to bind the vessel for necessities furnished to it." Coyle v. North America Steamship Corp., (C. C. A. 5th Cir. 1920) 262 Fed. 250.

Application of section—Vessels licensed but not enrolled.—In The Scandinavia II, (D. C. Md. 1919) 258 Fed. 144, the court regarded it as doubtful whether the provisions of this section applied to a vessel, under twenty tons burden, which was licensed, but not enrolled, and refused to declare such a vessel forfeited under R. S. sec. 4189 (9 Fed. Stat. Ann. (2d ed.) 283) because the license was fraudulently obtained. Regarding this question, it said:

"The claimant argues that, whatever may have been the deceitful purpose of Wilson and the officials of the company which employed him, they did nothing which was in law fraudulent, because he says that the act of 1916 concerns itself with only two of the three classes of vessels of the United States, namely, those which are registered, and those which are at once licensed and enrolled, and has nothing to do with those which, because they are under 20 tons burden, are licensed, but not enrolled. He relies upon the phrasing of the third paragraph of the ninth section of the Shipping Board Act, already mentioned. In that it is said:

"When the United States is at war . . . no vessel, registered or enrolled and licensed under the laws of the United States, shall, without the approval of the board, be sold, leased, or chartered to any person not a citizen of the United States."

"The presumption would be strongly against the federal Legislature having intended to limit its definition of citizens in the manner now claimed, were it not that Congress, two years later, seems to have thought that it had. By the act of July 15, 1918, the word 'documented,' when used in connection with ships, is defined to mean: 'Registered, enrolled or licensed under the laws of the United States.' The report of the House committee on merchant marine and fisheries (No. 568, House, 65th Congress, Second Session) declares that the purpose in so doing was to 'bring under the act vessels licensed, but not enrolled (i. e., ships under 20 tons). In view of the military value of even small vessels, this change is considered important.' The report of the House committee was adopted by the Senate committee on commerce as a part of its report. Senate, 536, 65th Congress, Second Session.

"In the light of this fact, there is at least a doubt as to whether the act of 1916 in any wise affected the status of such small craft. The provision here sought to be enforced is highly penal.

"The libel will be dismissed."

"Employed solely as a merchant vessel."

—A vessel engaged in carrying food products from this country to Europe is employed as a merchant vessel within the meaning of this section, and the fact that her cargo is owned by a foreign government does not alter the essentially mercantile character of the service she is rendering. Nor does the fact that she is commanded by officers of the United States Navy and has a naval crew, render her immune from process, since the government is deemed to have waived its privileges by employing her as a merchant vessel. The Jeannette Skinner, (D. C. Md. 1919) 258 Fed. 768.

Vessels of sovereign—Immunity from process.—The immunity from process of property of a sovereign, whether the United States or a foreign sovereign, depends, not merely upon the ownership, but also upon the actual possession by the sovereign of the property at the time process is served. This general rule of law is not affected by this section. The vessels referred to herein are such as are operated, not by the government, but by persons who have "purchased or leased or chartered" them from the government. The Carol Poma, (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1919) 259 Fed. 369, 170 C. C. A. 345.

Emergency Fleet Corporation—Immunity from process.—In Commonwealth Finance Corp. v. Landis, (E. D. Pa. 1919) 261 Fed. 440, it appeared that several actions had been brought against the Emergency Fleet Corporation. The defense was interposed that the corporation was the United States, and hence not subject to process. Regarding this defense the court said:

"We have had neither time nor opportunity to investigate the organization of this corporation, for the purpose of getting first-hand information of what it is. We have not taken the time to make this investigation, because counsel agree upon what are the essentials of this organization. These are that the Fleet Corporation is a private corporation, in the organization of which it is provided that the United States shall own more than 50 per cent. of its stock, and may own, and the fact is that at present it does own, all of the capital stock, except a few shares, which, for organization purposes, are required to be owned by those who have certain official relations with the company. It is further organized for the purpose of acting as an agent of the United States, and doing what the United States might do direct. These things, which are expected to be thus done by the corporation, are essentially of a military character, and primarily for the welfare and protection of the people.

"We have, in consequence, room for the following distinctions and the following at least possible differences: One of the distinctions is that the Fleet Corporation is, as before stated, a private corporation, and, in this sense, a private individual or a person authorized to perform a public service as an agent of the United States. One of these possible differences is that private persons or individuals may be among the ultimate owners of the assets of the corporation, and the United States is required to be also among these ultimate owners, and the property and assets of the corporation may be actually and wholly in use for public purposes, or may at least possibly not be in such actual use, or all such property and assets may not be in such actual use.

"There is another respect in which a distinction, which is also a difference, may exist. The Fleet Corporation may be acting as such agent of the United States, or may not be so acting, or it may so act in some of its activities, and not in others. It follows from this that when it is acting as the United States, and such of its property and assets as are in the actual use of the United States, neither it as such agent nor such property can be drawn into or jeopardized by disputes between private parties. It would also follow, however, that in so far as it is acting as a private corporation, and in so far as its property and assets are and are used as its private property, it is not immune from the liabilities and responsibilities which are imposed by law upon litigants.

"The foregoing observations indicate the line to be drawn. It is easy to draw the line, but not so easy to determine when and where it shall be drawn. It has been determined for us that when the corporation, through one of its activities, was fabricating ships for the United States that the property which otherwise would be the private property of the corporation was being devoted to and used in this public purpose, it might be found to be the property of the United States, and that any one who was guilty of selling any part of it was subject to indictment for stealing the property of the United States. United States v. Carlin, (D. C.) 259 Fed. 904.

"It has also been determined for us that, when the United States had bought and become the owner of all the property, assets, and franchises of a railroad, and there was nothing which by any possibility could be seized under an execution issued upon a judgment, and nothing upon which any part of that judgment could be a lien other than property of the United States, a proceeding having for its sole purpose and objective such a method of enforcing the payment of a claim, being thus prosecuted, could not be sustained. Ballaine v. Alaska, 259 Fed. 183, — C. C. A. —. There is authority, however, for the proposition that under some circumstances a proceeding against a corporation having these general relations with the United States can be upheld. Salas v. United States, 234 Fed. 842, 148 C. C. A. 440.

"There is thus presented this broad distinction, and this general proposition, that sometimes a proceeding set in motion to have determined the obligation of a corporation of this general kind is permitted to become effective and sometimes it is not. This proposition necessarily involves the thought that there is a question to be determined, and this again necessarily carries the further thought that the corporation is not immune from process, because otherwise nothing other than such immunity could be determined. It may be that if any one of these plaintiffs secures a final judgment against this corporation, he will be unable to enforce payment of the judgment because of the fact that there is no property out of the sale of which the judgment can be paid, other than either property of the United States or property which is in use by the United States for military purposes. The futility or hopelessness of execution process does not, however, deprive a litigant of judgment process.

"There is this very practical and common-sense view of the broad question here involved and of the general situation presented. Private persons and individuals must deal with this corporation as contractors or otherwise in the accomplishment of the work with which the corporation has to do. Supplies of materials must be furnished to the corporation and to those who have contracted with it. Obligations of some kind to make payment must be incurred. Congress has found it to be best to so provide that the United States shall not directly incur these obligations. If the obligations incurred were the obligations of the United States, it has so far laid aside the robes of sovereignty as to permit the question of the existence of such obligation to be determined by the Court of Claims and within limits by the District Courts. If this remedy was pursued by any one having a claim, no matter how just that claim might be, the United States might very well interpose the defense that it had not incurred any obligation, and the foregoing remedy would be denied the claimant. If the corporation was not amenable to process, then the intolerable situation would be presented that the corporation was free to admit or repudiate its obligations at its free will and pleasure. The sovereign, it must be conceded, cannot be sued without its consent; but the doctrine must also be accepted that he may consent."

To same effect, see Gould Coupler Co. v. United States Shipping Board, etc., Corp., (S. D. N. Y. 1919) 261 Fed. 716, where the court, in holding that the Emergency Fleet Corporation was subject to suit, said: "The Lake Monroe, 250 U. S. 246, 39 Sup. Ct. 460, 64 L. Ed. —, seems to me finally to control both cases. In that case the vessel had been requisitioned and completed by the Fleet Corporation and chartered by the Shipping Board, under the 'emergency shipping fund' provision of the Urgent Deficiencies Act. That provision (40 Stat. 182) empowered the President to requisition any ship then being constructed and to exercise his powers through any designated agencies. The question was whether such a ship was within the liability to arrest of section 9 of the Shipping Act, or whether that act applied only to ships which had been built, chartered, or purchased by the Shipping Board under section 5 of the Shipping Act. It was held that, though the President was free to select other agencies, Congress showed that it contemplated the probability that he would in fact choose the Shipping Board and the Fleet Corporation, and that if he did choose them the general administrative provisions of the Shipping Act should apply, among them the liability of all vessels to be arrested on civil process. Therefore the court thought it an irrelevant consideration whether the Shipping Board had chartered the Lake Monroe under its powers derived from the Shipping Act or as a delegate of the President. In either case section 9 applies to such vessels.

"Now, in these cases it appears to me too clear for dispute that the Fleet Corporation is in general capable of being sued. Section 11 of the Shipping Act provides that the corporation shall be chartered under the laws of the District of Columbia, and no one disputes that this means under its general corporations laws. The corporation was so formed under Code of Law D. C. c. 18, subchapter 4, which authorized actions by and against any corporation so organized. The Fleet Corporation was therefore meant to be a legal person without immunity quite as much as any other corporation. In view of these provisions it is unnecessary to consider any of the cases touching the general liability to process of corporations in which the United States may be a stockholder or which it may organize for governmental purposes.

"If so, then this process would have been legal if these actions had concerned any activities authorized by the Shipping Act. But the objection raised is to process in suits which arose out of the execution of duties imposed upon the Fleet Corporation by the President under the Emergency Shipping Fund provision of the Urgent Deficiencies Act. That provision (a) authorized the President to place any order for ships or materials as he might think necessary, and it is to be assumed apparently on this motion that it was such an order that is the subject of the larger of the claims at bar. The other claim arises as a necessary incident to the construction of ships, and may properly be thought to fall within the same power. When the President chose the Fleet Corporation as his agent to discharge the duties so imposed upon him, it may of course be argued, as the defendant does, that the agent retained the same immunity as the President would have had, had he deputed it to an individual immediately under his control. Nevertheless, by a precise parity of the reasoning which the Supreme Court adopted in The Lake Monroe, supra, it must follow that in choosing the Fleet Corporation he chose it with all its limitations upon its head. In other words, Congress contemplated that possibility, and expected that in so delegating his powers he must subject their exercise to the scrutiny and determination of the customary tribunals, precisely as the Fleet Corporation's other activities were subject.

"To draw a distinction between ships and the contracts under which they were made would be a capricious rule. If all ships operated by the Board are subject to arrest, whether or not they are operated under the President's powers, it is hard to see why disputes should be justiciable arising under contracts made to build one class of ships and not under those made to build the other. No possible ground appears to me for distinguishing between the agents selected by the President when discharging one of his duties and when discharging any other.

"Moreover, it is in general highly desirable that, in entering upon industrial and commercial ventures, the governmental agencies used should, whenever it can fairly be drawn from the statutes, be subject to the same liabilities and to the same tribunals as other persons or corporations similarly employed. The immunity of the sovereign may well become a serious injustice to the citizen, if it can be claimed in the multitude of cases arising from governmental activities which are increasing so fast. At least I have no disposition to strain the point in their favor, where they fall clearly within the principle of authoritative decisions."

See also Haines v. Lone Star Shipbuilding Co., (Pa. 1920) 110 Atl. 788, wherein it was held that the Emergency Fleet Corporation organized under this section was held not immune from a writ of garnishment levied against it by a state court. The court said: "If it was the intent of Congress that the Fleet Corporation should be immune from civil process, it would have been very easy to have written it into the act; but nowhere is such language found, nor can it be reasonably inferred therefrom. If the Fleet Corporation was to be immune from civil process of any nature whatever, why the necessity of a Fleet Corporation at all? The United States government, acting through the Shipping Board as such, was immune from such process. It possessed the power and authority to do all the corporation could do. What was the intent of Congress when it authorized the creation of the Fleet Corporation, if it was not for the purpose of conducting a business corporation and assuring to those with whom it dealt that they would have a speedy adjustment of their claims; if not so adjusted, they had a debtor responsible in a court of law for the contracts and obligations undertaken, and when its contractors incurred debts a way was at hand, as in this case, to compel payment. Where would this immunity cease, considering the language of the delegation and the sundry subsequent delegation of the same subject-matter, as the corporation was empowered to and did make?"

"It must be further borne in mind that at this time the enforcement of the present attachment does not interfere with the construction of ships, nor does it endanger the public welfare in the slightest degree, nor is it capable of doing any act that would jeopardize the interests of the government. Courts will not close their doors to the relief of honest claimants (who have dealt with concerns such as herein discussed), for the reason that at one time they were engaged in and had for their immediate purpose the preparation of the United States government for its successful entry into and conclusion of the war with Germany.

"We might, then, safely rest the case on the general rule that it, as a corporation doing business in Pennsylvania, is amenable to the processes of this court. As a corporation, chartered in the District of Columbia, there is no doubt the federal courts have concurrent jurisdiction with the state courts; it being a creature of the United States government. It has been held that corporations organized under the laws of the District of Columbia may be sued in the state courts. Scheffer v. National Life Insurance Co., 25 Minn. 534. Generally speaking, whenever the legal right arises, and the state court is competent to administer justice, the right may be asserted in such court, although the federal court may have concurrent jurisdiction, unless the jurisdiction is limited by law to the federal courts. State courts have, therefore, been held to have jurisdiction of the suit against a federal officer or an officer of the general government, except where exclusive jurisdiction is given to the federal courts. Scranton v. Wheeler, 179 U. S. 141, 21 Sup. Ct. 48, 45 L. Ed. 126, affirming Scranton v. Wheeler, 113 Mich. 565, 71 N. W. 1091, 67 Am. St. Rep. 484; Crawford v. Waterson, 5 Fla. 472, 474; Smith v. Berman, 8 Ga. App. 262, 273, 68 S. E. 1014; Ward v. Henry, 19 Wis. 76, 80, 88 Am. Dec. 672; Teall v. Felton, 1 N. Y. 537, 543, 49 Am. Dec. 352; Polack v. Mansfield, 44 Cal. 36, 40, 13 Am. Rep. 151; Louis v. Buck, 7 Minn. 104, 112 (Gil. 71), 82 Am. Dec. 73. In Kneedler v. Lane, 45 Pa. 238, 249, Judge Lowrie has an interesting discussion as to the right of the state courts to exercise jurisdiction over questions emanating from federal laws, but no right is here raised as to the right to sue in the state court because the garnishee is a corporation of the District of Columbia. We conclude, therefore, that the attachment was proper and a valid process against the garnishee."

Constitutionality.—To same effect as 1919 Supplement annotation, see Kuehn v. Neugebauer, (Tex. Civ. App. 1919) 216 S. W. 259.

Purpose of Act.—In Bassham v. Evans, (Tex. Civ. App. 1919) 216 S. W. 446, an action for damages for the wrongful sequestration of land belonging to a person in the military service, the court said: "It appears to have been the purpose of Congress to place the civil rights of the person in the service under the supervision of the courts. It evidently was not the purpose to permit parties holding claims or obligations affecting such rights to act arbitrarily, or to enforce liens without those rights being considered by the court, or to seize the property of the soldier by ancillary or harsh writs, and to dispossess the soldiers, or their agents, without giving the courts which Congress had constituted and authorized an opportunity to protect, and prevent prejudice to such rights. We think all these matters may be looked to in ascertaining the motive and animus of appellants in this case."

Effect on state acts.—A state statute suspending mortgage foreclosures during the military service of the mortgagor is not superseded by the federal act. Pierrard v. Hoch, (Ore. 1919) 184 Pac. 494.

Effect of failure to file affidavit.—"Section 200 . . . declares that, in any action or proceeding commenced in any court, if there shall be a default of an appearance by the defendant, the plaintiff before entering judgment shall file in the court an affidavit setting forth facts showing that the defendant is not in military service. But the act does not anywhere declare that a judgment rendered on default and without such affidavit shall be absolutely null. On the contrary, there are several provisions that indicate that the judgment in such case would be voidable only at the instance of a defendant in military service. For example, the third sentence in section 200 declares that, if an affidavit is not filed showing that the defendant is not in the military service, no judgment shall be entered without first securing an order of court directing such entry, and no such order shall be made if the defendant is in such service until after the court shall have appointed an attorney to represent defendant and protect his interest, and the court shall on application make such appointment. . . . The fourth sentence declares that, unless it appears that the defendant is not in the military service, the court may require as a condition before judgment is entered that the plaintiff file a bond approved by the court conditioned to indemnify the defendant, if in military service, against any loss or damage that he may suffer by reason of any judgment should the judgment be thereafter set aside in whole or in part. And the fifth sentence authorizes the court to make such other and further order or enter such judgment as in its opinion may be necessary to protect the rights of the defendant under this act. All of which is in accord with the general provision in section 102 of the act that its provisions shall be enforced through the usual forms of procedure obtaining in the court in which the proceeding is commenced, or under such regulations as may be prescribed by that court, which court may be any court of the United States, or of one of the states or territories, or of the District of Columbia, or of any territory subject to the jurisdiction of the United States.

"The fourth paragraph of section 200 makes it quite plain that the final judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction shall be prima facie evidence that the person against whom it was rendered was not in the military service. The paragraph declares that, if any judgment shall be rendered against any person in military service during the period of such service, or within 30 days thereafter, and it appears that such person was prejudiced by reason of his military service in making his defense thereto, such judgment may, upon application made by such person or his legal representative, not later than ninety days after the termination of such service, be opened by the court rendering the same and such defendant or his legal representative let in to defend; provided it is made to appear that the defendant has a meritorious or legal defense to the action or some part thereof. And the concluding sentence of the paragraph declares that the vacating, setting aside, or reversing of any judgment because of any of the provisions of this act shall not impair any right or title acquired by any bona fide purchaser for value under such judgment. Hence it follows that a judgment rendered on default of an appearance by defendant, and without the affidavit referred to in section 200, is not an absolute nullity." Eureka Homestead Soc. v. Clark, (1919) 145 La. 917, 83 So. 190.

So a default judgment entered without the affidavit required by this section will not be set aside at the instance of one who was not in the military service. Alzugaray v. Onzures, (1920) 25 N. M. 662, 187 Pac. 549. See to the same effect Wells v. McArthur, (1920) 77 Okla. 279, 188 Pac. 322.

1918 Supp., p. 815, sec. 201.

A witness in military service is ground for a continuance of a case where he is practically a defendant. Ilderton v. Charleston Consol. Ry., etc., Co., (S. C. 1919) 101 S. E. 282.

1918 Supp., p. 815, sec. 203.

Conflict with state law.—"In Granger v. Luther, (S. D. 1920) 176 N. W. 1019, wherein it was held that a state "moratorium law" violated the contract clause of the Federal Constitution, the court said:

"Appellant has not raised the question as to whether a state 'moratorium' law based upon existence of war can exist and be in force in favor of those in the federal service when there is also in existence a federal law covering the same subject matter. We do not intend by deciding the constitutionality of our state law to imply that, so far as it merely suspends remedies, it is in force and effect together with the federal law. Upon this we express no opinion."

Additional time to pay costs on appeal.—"Under this section an Appellate Court may excuse noncompliance with the terms of a statute requiring costs on appeal to be paid within one year if a mandate is to be issued, where the party requesting the mandate was in the military service during the year allowed for the payment of costs. Kuehn v. Neugebauer, (Tex. Civ. App. 1919) 216 S. W. 259.

1918 Supp., p. 817, sec. 301 (2).

Does not fix measure of damages.—This section does not apply to an action for wrongful sequestration of property in the attempt to foreclose a contract of sale while the vendee was in military service, and the payments previously made cannot be recovered. Bassham v. Evans, (Tex. Civ. App. 1919) 216 S. W. 446.

1918 Supp., p. 817, sec. 302 (1).

Scope of provision.—This provision is confined to the obligations therein referred to, and does not apply to the other classes of obligations which are provided for in other sections of article III of the Act. Bassham v. Evans, (Tex. Civ. App. 1919) 216 S. W. 446.

1918 Supp., p. 818, sec. 302 (3).

Foreclosure of mortgages by equity courts.—In John Hancock Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Lester, (Mass. 1920) 125 N. E. 594, it was held that the existence of the Soldiers' and Sailors' Civil Relief Act is a special circumstance which is sufficient to give the equity courts of Massachusetts jurisdiction to foreclose mortgages within the time specified in the act. It was further held that the fact that the defendants were trustees and that they held the legal title to the mortgaged property for numerous shareholders, some of whom were in the military service, did not make it necessary to join the shareholders as parties. The court said:

"The petition in this case was filed July 16, 1919. In addition to service on the trustees, a general order of notice has been published. The trustees only have appeared. Under the trust instrument, the trustees who 'take charge of and manage the property . . . as they . . . deem for the interest of the shareholders,' do not present to the court any reason why the mortgages should not be foreclosed, apart from the fact that persons who are 'owners' under the statute are in military service. It is not urged that the mortgagees' interests do not require a foreclosure, or that a foreclosure would inequitably affect the interests of those in military service. Interest and taxes form a rapidly increasing burden on the property. The trustees do not claim that foreclosure is unwarranted, because of impaired ability of certificate holders to comply with their obligations because of military service, and no such representation has been made by any person in their behalf. It is nearly fourteen months since the signing of the armistice. Free course of mails between this country and Europe has existed for many months. Here the activities and sacrifices of war no longer engage the minds of men or forbid attention to business. It is clear that the ability of shareholders to comply with the terms of the mortgages is not now materially affected by reason of such service.

"The plaintiffs are entitled to a decree authorizing the foreclosures in accordance with clause 3 of § 302 of the act. The form of the decree is to be settled by a single justice, but it is to provide for a sale or sales, without the intervention of a commissioner or special master, substantially in accordance with the powers of sale contained in the mortgages, and without further notice than that required by said powers, unless in the discretion of the single justice it is deemed necessary or advisable to provide for additional notice, or for an extension of the time required for notice of sale under the powers, or required by R. L. c. 187, § 14, as amended by St. 1906, c. 219."

Foreclosure of real estate mortgage by advertisement.—The Soldiers' and Sailors' Civil Relief Act was designed and intended to authorize and require in particular instances the restraint and stay of judicial proceedings commenced in any state or federal court for the enforcement of pecuniary obligations against those in the military service of the United States; but it had no application to the nonjudicial proceeding for the foreclosure of a real estate mortgage by advertisement, as authorized by state statutes, which was fully completed by a sale of the mortgaged property prior to the commencement of the military service of the soldier affected, though the period of redemption had not then expired. Taylor v. McGregor State Bank, (1919) 144 Minn. 249, 174 N. W. 893.

STATE DEPARTMENT

Vol. IX, p. 376, sec. 205. [First ed., vol. VII, p. 116.]

Publication as essential to validity.—The publication of a constitutional amendment under this section is not essential to its validity. Ex p. Dillon, (N. D. Cal. 1920) 262 Fed. 563, wherein the court said: "The promulgation of a constitutional amendment under section 205 is no more essential to its validity than is the promulgation of an act of Congress under the preceding section, and the former is no more the beginning of the amendment than the latter is the beginning of the law; for, notwithstanding the requirement for promulgation, it is universally recognized that an act of Congress takes effect and is in force from the date of its passage and approval, and a constitutional amendment is likewise in full force and effect from and after its ratification by the requisite number of states. In other words, the promulgation by the Department of State only affords prima facie evidence of ratification, and the promulgation, when made, relates back to the last necessary vote by a state Legislature."

STATUTES

Construction.—To same effect as original annotation, see De Four v. U. S., (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1919) 260 Fed. 596, 171 C. C. A. 360.

This section is still in force, as it was not included in the express repealing provisions in the Criminal Code, Penal Laws, sec. 341 (7 Fed. Stat. Ann. (2d ed.) 989), and there is no repealing clause in any subsequent act which conflicts with the general rule of this section, nor is the latter superseded by Penal Laws, sec. 343 (7 Fed. Stat. Ann. (2d ed.) 997). Goublin v. U. S., (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1919) 261 Fed. 5, 171 C. C. A. 601.

STEAM VESSELS

Vol. IX, p. 464, sec. 4487. [First ed., vol. VII, p. 97.]

Violation of statute as contributory negligence.—Where those in control of a vessel violate this section and the vessel is injured in consequence, the defense of contributory negligence may be set up by persons against whom an action is brought to recover damages for such injuries. Watson v. Mississippi River Power Co., (1920) 176 N. W. 624.

TELEGRAPHS, TELEPHONES AND CABLES

1918 Supp., p. 834. [Government control, etc.]

Regulation of intrastate rates.—To the same effect as 1919 Supplement annotation, see State v. Burleson, (Ala. 1919) 82 So. 458.

The Postmaster General, by virtue of this joint resolution, had authority to prescribe local telephone rates applicable only to a municipality without reference to the laws of the state. State v. Tri-State Telephone, etc., Co., (1919) 143 Minn. 141, 173 N. W. 856.

Liability of telegraph company for negligence.—A telegraph company is not liable for the negligent transmission of a message during the period of federal control. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Davis, (Ark. 1920) 218 S. W. 833.

Likewise, it is not liable for delay in transmission of a message during the period of federal control. Foster v. Western Union Tel. Co. (Mo. App. 1920) 219 S. W. 107.

Nor does its liability extend to a negligent injury to a servant during the period of federal control. Mitchell v. Cumberland Telephone, etc., Co., (Ky. 1920) 221 S. W. 547.

Government control as defense to action.—It is no defense to an action against a cable company for damages, alleged to have been caused by delay in delivering a cable, that its lines are being operated by the Postmaster General on behalf of the United States. Witherspoon v. Postal Tel., etc., Co., (E. D. La. 1919) 257 Fed. 758, wherein Foster, J., said:

"Neither in the joint resolution nor the proclamation of the President is there a provision similar to section 10 of the Act of March 21, 1918, c. 25, 40 Stat. 456, taking over the railroad systems of the country. It seems to me, however, that it was the intention of Congress, in authorizing the President to take over the lines, that the companies should go ahead with private business the same as theretofore. This would contemplate the institution and defense of suits. If the company is allowed to take and send private messages, there should be some method of holding it liable for damages occasioned through negligence, notwithstanding the Postmaster General had the direction and control of the company. See Postal Tel. & Cable Co. v. Call. Dist. Judge, 255 Fed. 850, — C. C. A. —.

"The joint resolution provides for just compensation to the companies and the method of settling disputes as to same between them and the government. If the companies are held for damages occasioned while under government control, compensation will certainly extend to reimbursement. In the meantime litigants should not be delayed in liquidating their claims. Therefore I think it proper that the plaintiff in this case should be allowed to establish his liability against the company, if there is any. Delay in the trial of the case may result in hardship to either side."

For decisions relating to the selection of lieu lands see Washburn v. Lane, (App. Cas. D. C. 1919) 258 Fed. 524; Sandpoint Lumber, etc., Co. v. Anderson, (1919) 32 Idaho 571, 186 Pac. 254.

Vol. IX, p. 595. [Money received from forests, etc.] [First ed., 1909 Supp., p. 666.]

Expenditure of money by states.—This Act creates an express trust, of which the several school districts and road districts are the cestuis que trust. Under its provisions the fund is to be expended as the state or territorial legislatures may prescribe, but their discretion may not be delegated. Accordingly, the county commissioners of a county have no authority under state statute to direct the manner in which the money shall be expended. Everett School Dist. No. 24 v. Pearson, (W. D. Wash. 1918) 261

Fed. 631. Regarding the expenditure of money paid to the states under the provisions of this Act, the court said:

"The act of Congress creating the trust for the schools and roads provided that the fund is 'to be expended as the state or territorial Legislature may prescribe.' The Legislature could not delegate any discretionary power reposed in it with relation to such fund. This is a discretion which must be exercised by the trustee provided by the act of Congress (Singleton v. Scott, 11 Iowa, 589), and in so far as this act, if it may be so held, seeks to delegate discretion, must be inoperative; but such issue is not in this case, as this matter must be determined upon the rights of the parties in the particular fund.

"Schools have ever received the special consideration of Congress, and many grants to states in trust for various objects are on the statute books, and no diversion from the purpose is countenanced without the approval of Congress. Act March 4, 1907, c. 2934, 34 Stat. 1414. A distinction between grants for a specific purpose and grants to a state generally is recognized by Congress. Act Sept. 4, 1841, c. 16, 5 Stat. 453. Particular localities have been made the beneficiaries from the sale of lands located in such communities. Act March 6, 1820, c. 22, § 6, 3 Stat. 547; Act March 3, 1845, c. 75, 5 Stat. 788. The same policy evidently actuated the congressional mind by the act in issue, when it granted to the schools and roads in such counties 25 per cent. of the net proceeds received for the sale of timber from the forest reserve located in such county.

"It is contended by the plaintiff that the history of congressional grants is conclusive that each fund should receive an equal share. In the consideration of the act in issue, aside from the congressional policy gleaned from the legislative history which should be considered (United States v. Sweet, Adm'r [decided Jan. 28, 1918] 245 U. S. 563, 38 Sup. Ct. 193, 62 L. Ed. 473), it would seem that the general rule applicable to the construction of gifts, wills, and deeds should apply, where it is established that when bequests, gifts, or grants are made to two or more persons, each is presumed to take an equal share, in the absence of limitations to the contrary.

"The power which was given by the state Legislature, supra, to the board of county commissioners to expend the moneys for the benefit of the public schools and the public roads, was only a power to expend the funds in the manner authorized by the laws of the state relating to roads and schools. There are many ways in which money available may be expended for roads or for schools. The money having been paid to the county treasurer for roads and schools, he had no authority to disperse the fund in any other proportion than directed by the act of Congress, which language was repeated by the state Legislature; and the defendants, being the custodians of the trust funds, are liable for any misappropriation, and must account to the fund for the sums diverted. The evident purpose of the Congress, by the act, supra, was to have the schools and roads participate in the funds in equal shares."

Vol. IX, p. 606. [Construction of summer homes, etc.] [First ed., 1916 Supp., p. 266.]

Rainier National Forest.—The authority to lease for summer recreation purposes land around Bumping Lake withdrawn for irrigation uses but not required for the irrigation project, which land constituted part of the area previously withdrawn for the Rainier National Forest, is in the Department of Agriculture, and the rentals should be covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts. But in recognition of the needs of the reclamation service, and to forestall any contracts detrimental to the reclamation project, all leases should be subject to the prior approval of the Secretary of the Interior. (1916) 31 Op. Atty-Gen. 56.

Vol. IX, p. 606, sec. 1. [Timber and Stone Lands Act.] [First ed., vol. VII, p. 300.]

Increase of price.—The fixing of a "minimum price" of $2.50 per acre by this section does not prevent the General Land Office from increasing the price. "The words 'minimum price,' used in this section, mean the lowest price, and not a fixed price of $2.50 per acre. To hold otherwise would be to say that the words 'minimum price' were superfluous and meant nothing." Brown v. Baker, (1919) 108 Wash. 161, 183 Pac. 89.

III. CONSTRUCTION OF ACT

1. In General (p. 647)

Interstate character of combination.—

Where the object of a combination was to prevent interstate transportation of switchboards, it was held that the mere fact that the means by which this object was to be accomplished was limited to interference with their installation after they had reached their destination, did not relieve the transaction of its interstate character. Boyle v. U. S., (C. C. A. 7th Cir. 1919) 259 Fed. 803, 170 C. C. A. 603.

So contracts which are part of an illegal combination to secure control of a product and raise the price of the same to all buyers in the United States are within the prohibition of the Anti-trust Act, although to be performed wholly within one state. McNear v. American, etc., Mfg. Co., (R. I. 1919) 107 Atl. 242.

IV. MODE OF DETERMINING QUESTION OF VIOLATION

2. Intention or Motives (p. 655)

Effect and not intention controls.—The Sherman Anti-trust Act is directed against monopoly; not against an expectation of it, but against its realization. U. S. v. United States Steel Corp., (1920) 251 U. S. 417, 40 S. Ct. 293, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, 8 A. L. R. 1121, affirming (D. C. N. J. 1915) 223 Fed. 55.

Size of corporation as controlling.—The mere size of a corporation, or the existence of unexerted power unlawfully to restrain competition, does not of itself make such a corporation a violator of the Sherman Anti-trust Act. U. S. v. United States Steel Corp., (1920) 251 U. S. 417, 40 S. Ct. 293, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, 8 A. L. R. 1121, affirming (D. C. N. J. 1915) 223 Fed. 55.

V. APPLICATION OF ACT

2. Application in Particular Instances

a. Combinations and Contracts to Affect Prices and Terms of Sale (p. 660)

Fixing prices and terms of sale.—A manufacturer of patented automobile tire accessories violates the Sherman Anti-trust Act when it requires all tire manufacturers and jobbers to whom it sells to execute uniform contracts which obligate them to observe certain fixed resale prices; it would be otherwise if the manufacturer had merely specified the resale prices and refused to deal with anyone who failed to observe them, but had not entered into any contract or combination which would obligate the vendees to maintain such prices. U. S. v. Schrader, (1920) 252 U. S. 85, 40 S. Ct. 251, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) — (following Dr. Miles Medical Co. v. John D. Park, etc., Co., (1911) 220 U. S. 373, 31 S. Ct. 376, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 502, and explaining U. S. v. Colgate, (1919) 250 U. S. 300, 39 S. Ct. 465, 63 U. S. (L. ed.) 992, 7 A. L. R. 443, 373, 31 S. Ct. 376, 55 U. S. (L. ed.) 502).

An injunction will lie to restrain a retailer of watches from cutting prices on watches manufactured by complainant and sold at retail by defendant where the watches were sold to the defendant subject to notice that they must not be resold at less than the fixed retail price without first removing the notice, the name, the trademark and guaranty which every watch had upon it. Such an agreement between the two was not prohibited by the Sherman and Clayton Acts. Ingersoll v. Hahne, (N. J. 1918) 108 Atl. 128, wherein the court said:

"It is insisted by defendant that the contract against price-cutting evidenced by the notice is contrary to public policy and to the Sherman and Clayton Acts, and defendant relies upon the cases in the Supreme Court of the United States, the last of which is Boston Store of Chicago v. American Graphophone Co., et al., 246 U. S. 8, 38 Sup. Ct. 257, 62 L. Ed. 551, Ann. Cas. 1918C, 447.

"On the motion to strike out the bill (88 N. J. Eq. 222, 101 Atl. 1039), I contented myself with holding that I was dealing with the public policy of this state and that the decisions in the Supreme Court of the United States were not controlling, as the subject-matter of the legislation was within the police power of the state. Since the final hearing I have re-examined the cases in the Supreme Court of the United States in the light of counsel's briefs, and have come to the conclusion that the restrictions upon the resale of the article would be valid at common law, and their validity is not affected by either the Sherman or Clayton Acts, and that the Supreme Court of the United States

"With respect to contracts in restraint of trade, the earlier doctrine of the common law has been substantially modified in adaptation to modern conditions. But the public interest is still the first consideration. To sustain the restraint, it must be found to be reasonable both with respect to the public and to the parties and that it is limited to what is fairly necessary, in the circumstances of the particular case, for the protection of the covenantee. Otherwise restraints of trade are void as against public policy."

"If the distinguished justice meant that all restraints were void at common law, I think he was mistaken; but, be that as it may be, it is now well settled that restraints which are reasonable in the absence of statute are valid. It is also well recognized that a person has a property interest in his trade-name and good will, and will, even in the absence of statute, be protected against injury to that trade-name and good will. This right has in this state been as above indicated recognized by statute."

A lumber dealers' association which employed a secretary and circulated information as to prices obtained on sales by members, and similar information designed to keep up prices, was held to be within the Act in U. S. v. American Column, etc., Co., (W. D. Tenn. 1920) 263 Fed. 147.

Fixing selling price of potash.—Where the owners of potash mines in Germany entered into an agreement, the effect of which is to place all the potash mines in Germany, with one exception, under the control of a syndicate which fixes the selling price of potash for every mine, and the syndicate established connections with an American corporation for the sale of its potash shipped into the United States, such facts are subject to the provisions of the Act of August 27, 1894 (see vol. IX, p. 726), prohibiting combinations in restraint of import trade; and such facts also establish a violation of the provisions of the Sherman Anti-trust Act, as constituting a "contract, combination in form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce . . . with foreign nations." (1910) 31 Op. Atty-Gen. 545.

c. Coal Companies and Producers (p. 663)

Lease of railroad by coal company with covenant to ship coal over road.—A covenant in a lease by a coal company of a railway owned by it to another railway company, which may be construed to require the coal company to ship to market over the leased line three-fourths of all the coal it produces, cannot be said to impose an undue restriction upon the coal company in selecting its markets and in shipping its coal, in violation of the Sherman Anti-trust Act, where the lines of the two railway companies are in no sense competitive, the leased line serving as a natural extension of the lessee railway company's lines to the great tonnage-producing coal districts, and where the rental to be paid is one-third of the gross earnings of the railway. U. S. v. Reading Co., (1920) 253 U. S. 26, 40 S. Ct. 425, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming in part and reversing in part (E. D. Pa. 1915) 226 Fed. 229.

Lease for operation of coal-producing lands containing covenant for shipment of coal by certain rail routes.—Attempts to enforce a covenant in leases for the operation of coal-producing lands that the lessee shall ship all coal mined by rail routes which are named, or which are to be designated, are properly enjoined where such covenant was resorted to as part of a scheme in contravention of the Sherman Anti-trust Act to control the minings and transportation of coal. U. S. v. Reading Co., (1920) 253 U. S. 26, 40 S. Ct. 425, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming in part and reversing in part (E. D. Pa. 1915) 226 Fed. 229.

Holding company controlling two competing railroads and two competing coal companies.—An undue and unreasonable restraint of interstate trade and commerce in anthracite coal, and an attempt to monopolize and a monopolization of such trade and commerce, forbidden by the Sherman Anti-trust Act, and calling for dissolution of the combination, results from a scheme whereby a holding company was created and placed by stock control in a position to dominate, not only two great competing interstate railway carriers, but also two great competing coal companies engaged extensively in mining and selling anthracite coal which must be transported to interstate markets over the controlled interstate railway lines, which power of control was actually used, once successfully, to suppress the building of a prospective competitive railway line, and a second time successfully, until the federal Supreme Court condemned certain percentage coal contracts as illegal, to suppress the last prospect of competition in anthracite production and transportation, the holding company continuing, up to the time the present dissolution suit was begun, in active dominating control of the carriers and coal companies, thus effectually suppressing all competition between the four companies and pooling their earnings. U. S. v. Reading Co., (1920) 253 U. S. 26, 40 S. Ct. 425, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming in part and reversing in part (E. D. Pa. 1915) 226 Fed. 229.

f. Miscellaneous Cases (p. 669)

Steel corporation.—A holding corporation which by its formation united, under one control, competing companies in the steel industry, but which did not achieve monopoly, and only attempted to fix prices through occasional appeals to and confederation with competitors, whatever there was of wrongful intent not having been executed, and whatever there was of evil effect having been discontinued before suit was brought, should not be dissolved nor be separated from some of its subsidiaries at the suit of the government, asserting violations of the Sherman Anti-trust Act—especially where the court cannot see that the public interest will be served by yielding to the government's demand, and does see in so yielding a risk of injury to the public interest, including a material disturbance of, and, perhaps, serious detriment to, the foreign trade. U. S. v. United States Steel Corp., (1920) 251 U. S. 417, 40 S. Ct. 293, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, 8 A. L. R. 1121 (affirming (D. C. N. J. 1915) 223 Fed. 55) wherein the court said: "But let us see what guide to a procedure of dissolution of the corporation and the dispersion as well of its subsidiary companies, for they are asserted to be illegal combinations, is prayed. And the fact must not be overlooked or underestimated. The prayer of the government calls for not only a disruption of present conditions, but the restoration of the conditions of twenty years ago; if not literally, substantially. Is there guidance to this in the Standard Oil Co. Case and the American Tobacco Co. Case 221 U. S. 106, 55 L. ed. 663, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 632? As an element in determining the answer we shall have to compare the cases with that at bar, but this can only be done in a general way. And the law necessarily must be kept in mind. No other comment of it is necessary. It has received so much exposition that it and all it prescribes and proscribes should be considered as a consciously directing presence.

"The Standard Oil Company had its origin in 1882, and through successive forms of combinations and agencies it progressed in illegal power to the day of the decree, even attempting to circumvent by one of its forms the decision of a court against it. And its method in using its power was of the kind that Judge Woolley described as 'brutal,' and of which practices, he said, the Steel Corporation was absolutely guiltless. We have enumerated them, and this reference to them is enough. And of the practices this court said, no disinterested mind could doubt that the purpose was 'to drive others from the field and to exclude them from their right to trade, and thus accomplish the mastery which was the end in view.' It was further said that what was done and the final culmination 'in the plan of the New Jersey corporation' made 'manifest the continued existence of the intent . . . and impelled the expansion of the New Jersey corporation.' It was to this corporation, which represented the power and purpose of all that preceded, that the suit was addressed and the decree of the court was to apply. What we have quoted contrasts that case with this. The contrast is further emphasized by pointing out how in the case of the New Jersey corporation the original wrong was reflected in and manifested by the acts which followed the organization as described by the court. It said: "The exercise of the power which resulted from that organization fortifies the foregoing conclusions [as to monopoly, etc.] since the development which came, the acquisition here and there which ensued of every efficient means by which competition could have been asserted, the slow but resistless methods which followed by which means of transportation were absorbed and brought under control, the system of marketing which was adopted, by which the country was divided into districts and the trade in each district in oil was turned over to the designated corporation within the combination and all others were excluded, all lead the mind up to a conviction of a purpose and intent which we think is so certain as practically to cause the subject not to be within the domain of reasonable contention."

"The American Tobacco Co. Case has the same bad distinctions as the Standard Oil Co. Case. The illegality in which it was formed (there were two American Tobacco Companies, but we use the name as designating the new company, as representing the combinations of the suit) continued, indeed progressed in intensity and defiance to the moment of decree. And it is the intimation of the opinion, if not its direct assertion, that the formation of the company (the word 'combination' is used) was preceded by the intimidation of a trade war, 'inspired by one or more of the minds which brought about and became parties to that combination.' In other words, the purpose of the combination was signaled to competitors, and the choice presented to them was submission or ruin,—to become parties to the illegal enterprise or be driven 'out of the business.' This was the purpose and the achievement, and the processes by which achieved this court enumerated to be the formation of new companies, taking stock in others to 'obscure the result actually attained, but always to monopolize and retain power in the hands of the few and mastery of the trade; putting control in the hands of seemingly independent corporations as barriers to the entry of others into the trade; the expenditure of millions upon millions in buying out plants, not to utilize them, but to close them; by constantly recurring stipulations by which numbers of persons, whether manufacturers, stockholders, or employees, were required to bind themselves, generally for long periods, not to compete in the future. In the American Tobacco Co. Case, therefore, as in the Standard Oil Co. Case, the court had to deal with a persistent and systematic law-breaker, masquerading under legal forms, and which not only had to be stripped of its disguises, but arrested in its illegality. A decree of dissolution was the manifest instrumentality, and inevitable. We think it would be a work of sheer supererogation to point out that a decree in that case or in the Standard Oil Co. Case furnishes no example for a decree in this."

Restraint of foreign trade in munitions.—A conspiracy to restrain the export of munitions to Europe by fomenting strikes among workers in munition factories, is a violation of this Act. Lamar v. U. S., (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1919) 260 Fed. 61, 171 C. C. A. 345. Regarding the legality of the defendant's acts, the court said:

"It is further contended that, assuming everything covered by the evidence as proven and all the legal rules above adverted to as correct, it still remains true that the only suggested means or method of restraining trade was to strike—to induce laborers to peacefully quit work; and such acts are lawful under the statute of October 15, 1914, commonly known as the Clayton Act (38 Stat. 730, c. 323). It is said to follow that, if doing this lawful act should produce restraint of trade, the later statute prevents the operation of the earlier.

"Whether the Clayton Act has to the extent indicated nullified the Sherman Act is a question that need not be discussed; but we do hold it as clear that no change has been wrought in the law of conspiracy as applicable to this case. It may be that, where the intent of those who foment strikes or themselves quit work after and as a result of agreement with their fellow workmen is to advance their own wage interests, or otherwise improve their conditions of life, the Clayton Act produces legality by forbidding legal interference with their doings. This may be admitted for argument's sake, without expressing opinion. But we do hold that where it is charged (as here) that the intent was solely to restrain foreign trade, and where it is proved (as here) that the proposed instigation of strikes bore no relation whatever to the welfare of the strikers, then at most and best the strike becomes nothing more than an instrument or means, legal in itself, but used only for an illegal end.

"The argument for plaintiffs in error confounds the means with the end. The end or object of the proven conspiracy was not to call strikes, but to restrain or rather suppress foreign trade. That object is as illegal as ever; the Clayton Act assuredly does not legalize it. If that be granted, the elementary rules of law apply, and legality of means cannot excuse illegality of purpose or object."

Fish dealers.—Where the result of the combined action of certain fish dealers in a city is that a large percentage of all the fish brought to the city is landed at a certain pier controlled by the dealers, which gives them the predominating control of all the fish dealt in throughout the adjacent states and renders it impossible for an outside dealer to build up a business in interstate trade, such combination is a violation of this section. U. S. v. New England Fish Exch., (D. C. Mass. 1919) 258 Fed. 732.

Tile dealers.—The conduct of members of a tile dealers' association, composed of nearly all the tile dealers in a certain city, in excluding trade competitors from membership in the association, in the refusal of association dealers to buy tiles from manufacturers that sold tiles to non-member dealers, and in entering into agreements with a tile setters' labor union, whereby association dealers obtained from the union, first, a preference over non-member dealers in the employment of union tile setters, and, second, a promise by the union to supply no tile setters to tile dealers outside of the association, thereby creating a boycott of non-member tile dealers by making it impossible for them to get materials for their business and labor with which to carry it on, constitutes a combination in restraint of interstate commerce in violation of this section. Belf v. U. S., (C. C. A. 3d Cir. 1919) 259 Fed. 822, 170 C. C. A. 622.

Plan by Department of Commerce for stabilizing prices in basic industries.—The proposed plan of the Industrial Board of the Department of Commerce to stabilize prices in the so-called basic industries by means of agreements with the leading manufacturers and producers, not being authorized by statute, would be in violation of the anti-trust laws. (1919) 31 Op. Atty-Gen. 411.

VI. PROCEEDINGS UNDER ACT

1. In General (p. 677)

Limitations.—While parties entering into an unlawful combination to restrain trade in violation of this section may withdraw from such combination and thereby relieve themselves from further liability, and the statute of limitations will begin to run from the time of such withdrawal, yet it requires some affirmative act on the part of the conspirators to avoid the liability which their entry into the combination created. Boyle v. U. S., (C. C. A. 7th Cir. 1919) 259 Fed. 803, 170 C. C. A. 603.

2. Indictments (p. 679)

Overt acts.—To same effect as original annotation, see Lamar v. U. S., (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1919) 260 Fed. 561, 171 C. C. A. 345.

Necessity of alleging means of accomplishing conspiracy.—Where the object of the conspiracy was unlawful, it is unnecessary in an indictment under this section to set forth the means by which the object was accomplished. Boyle v. U. S., (C. C. A. 7th Cir. 1919) 259 Fed. 803, 170 C. C. A. 603.

II. PARTICULAR INSTANCES (p. 694)

Advertising contracts in periodicals.—The merely incidental relation to interstate commerce of transactions concerning advertising in periodicals which are to be circulated and distributed throughout the United States will not support the federal jurisdiction of a suit brought under the provisions of section 7 of this Act, creating a cause of action in favor of any person to recover by suit in any federal District Court in the district in which the defendant resides or is found threefold damages for injury to his business or property by reason of anything forbidden and declared unlawful in the Act, on the theory that defendant's conduct in respect to such matters is forbidden by that Act as a monopoly or attempted monopoly of interstate commerce. Blumenstock Bros. Advertising Agency v. Curtis Pub. Co., (1920) 252 U. S. 436, 40 S. Ct. 385, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, wherein the court said:

"The Anti-Trust Act, it is hardly necessary to say, derives its authority from the power of Congress to regulate commerce among the states. It declares unlawful combinations, conspiracies, and contracts, and attempts to monopolize which concern such trade or commerce. It follows that if the dealings with the defendant, which form the subject-matter of complaint, were not transactions of interstate commerce, the declaration states no case within the terms of the act.

"Commerce, as defined in the often quoted definition of Chief Justice Marshall, in Gibbons v. Ogden, 9 Wheat. 1, 189, 6 L. ed. 23, 65, is not traffic alone, it is intercourse.—'It describes the commercial intercourse between nations and parts of nations in all its branches, and is regulated by prescribing rules for carrying on that intercourse.'

"In the present case, treating the allegations of the complaint as true, the subject-matter dealt with was the making of contracts for the insertion of advertising matter in certain periodicals belonging to the defendant. It may be conceded that the circulation and distribution of such publications throughout the country would amount to interstate commerce, but the circulation of these periodicals did not depend upon or have any direct relation to the advertising contracts which the plaintiff offered and the defendant refused to receive except upon the terms stated in the declaration. The advertising contracts did not involve any movement of goods or merchandise in interstate commerce, or any transmission of intelligence in such commerce.

"This case is wholly unlike International Text-book Co. v. Pigg, 217 U. S. 91, 54 L. ed. 678, 27 L. R. A. (N. S.) 493, 30 Sup. Ct. Rep. 481, 18 Ann. Cas. 1103, wherein there was a continuous interstate traffic in text-books and apparatus for a course of study pursued by means of correspondence, and the movements in interstate commerce were held to bring the subject-matter within the domain of Federal control, and to exempt it from the burden imposed by state legislation. This case is more nearly analogous to such cases as Ficklen v. Taxing Dist. 145 U. S. 1, 33 L. ed. 801, 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 79, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 810, wherein this court held that a broker engaged in negotiating sales between residents of Tennessee and nonresident merchants of goods situated in another state was not engaged in interstate commerce; and within that line of cases in which we have held that policies of insurance are not articles of commerce, and that the making of such contracts is a mere incident of commercial intercourse. Paul v. Virginia, 8 Wall. 168, 19 L. ed. 357; Hooper v. California, 155 U. S. 648, 39 L. ed. 297, 5 Inter. Com. Rep. 610, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 207; New York L. Ins. Co. v. Deer Lodge County, 231 U. S. 495, 58 L. ed. 332, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 167. We held in Hopkins v. United States, 171 U. S. 579, 43 L. ed. 290, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 40, that the buying and selling of live stock in the stockyards of a city by members of the stock exchange was not interstate commerce, although most of the live stock was sent from other states. In Williams v. Fears, 179 U. S. 270, 45 L. ed. 186, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 128, we held that labor agents engaged within the state of Georgia in hiring persons to be employed outside the state were not engaged in interstate commerce. In Ware v. Mobile Co. 209 U. S. 405, 52 L. ed. 855, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 526, 14 Ann. Cas. 1031, we held that brokers taking orders and transmitting them to other states for the purchase and sale of grain or cotton upon speculation were not engaged in interstate commerce; that such contracts for sale or purchase did not necessarily result in any movement of commodities in interstate traffic, and the contracts were not, therefore, the subjects of interstate commerce. In the recent case of United States Fidelity & G. Co. v. Kentucky, 231 U. S. 394, 58 L. ed. 283, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 122, we held that a tax upon a corporation engaged in the business of inquiring into and reporting upon the credit and standing of persons in the state was not unconstitutional as a burden upon interstate commerce as applied to a nonresident engaged in selecting and distributing a list of guaranteed attorneys in the United States, and having a representative in the state. The contention in that case, which this court denied, was that the service rendered through the representatives in Kentucky, and other representatives of the same kind, acting as agents of merchants engaged in interstate commerce, to furnish them with information through the mails, or by telegraph, or telephone, as a result of which merchandise might be transported in interstate commerce, or withheld from such transportation, according to the character of the information reported, was so connected with interstate commerce as to preclude the state of Kentucky from imposing a privilege tax upon such business.

"Applying the principles of these cases, it is abundantly established that there is no ground for claiming that the transactions which are the basis of the present suit, concerning advertising in journals to be subsequently distributed in interstate commerce, are contracts which directly affect such commerce. Their incidental relation thereto cannot lay the groundwork for such contentions as are undertaken to be here maintained under § 7 of the Sherman Anti-trust Act. The court was right in dismissing the suit."

IV. REMEDIES AND RELIEF (p. 704)

Dissolution of combination.—Where a majority of the individual defendants in a suit to dissolve a combination found to contravene the Sherman Anti-trust Act have died since the suit was instituted, and their successors in office have not been made parties, and the conclusion to be announced can be given full effect by an appropriate decree against the corporate defendants, the case as against the remaining individual defendants need not be considered, and as to them the bill will be dismissed without prejudice. U. S. v. Reading Co., (1920) 253 U. S. 26, 40 S. Ct. 425, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming in part and reversing in part (E. D. Pa. 1915) 226 Fed. 229.

A combination of competing interstate railway carriers and competing coal companies, found to violate both this section and the commodities clause of the Act of June 29, 1906 (see vol. IV, p. 363), must be so dissolved as to give each of such companies its entire independence, free from stock or other control. U. S. v. Reading Co., (1920) 253 U. S. 26, 40 S. Ct. 425, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming in part and reversing in part (E. D. Pa. 1915) 226 Fed. 229.

III. Pleading, practice and procedure.

IV. Evidence.

III. PLEADING, PRACTICE AND PROCEDURE (p. 719)

Pleading in general.—In Blumenstock Bros. Advertising Agency v. Curtis Pub. Co., (1920) 252 U. S. 436, 40 S. Ct. 385, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, the court said:

"The Sherman Anti-Trust Act (section 7) created a cause of action in favor of any person to recover by suit in any District Court of the United States, in the district in which the defendant resides or is found, threefold damages for injury to his business or property by reason of anything forbidden and declared unlawful in the act. In order to maintain a suit under this act the complaint must state a substantial case arising thereunder. The action is wholly statutory, and can only be brought in a District Court of the United States, and it is essential to the jurisdiction of the court in such cases that a substantial cause of action within the statute be set up.

"In some cases it is difficult to determine whether a ruling dismissing the complaint involves the merits of the cause of action attempted to be pleaded, or only a question of the jurisdiction of the court. In any case alleged to come within the Federal jurisdiction it is not enough to allege that questions of a Federal character arise in the case, it must plainly appear that the averments attempting to bring the case within Federal jurisdiction are real and substantial. Newburyport Water Co. v. Newburyport, 193 U. S. 562, 576, 48 L. ed. 795, 799, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 553.

"In cases where, as here, the controversy concerns a subject-matter limited by a Federal law, for which recovery can be had only in the Federal courts, the jurisdiction attaches only when the suit presents a substantial claim under an act of Congress."

IV. EVIDENCE (p. 724)

Value of plaintiffs' property.—In an action under this section evidence of the value of leases held by the plaintiffs, and which, by reason of the unlawful acts of the defendants, are shown to have been forfeited, is clearly a part of the damage sustained, and admissible for the purpose of enabling the jury to determine the losses and damages of the plaintiffs. United Mine Workers v. Coronado Coal Co., (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1919) 258 Fed. 829, 169 C. C. A. 549. The court said:

"Section 7 of the Sherman Act provides for threefold damages sustained by reason of violations of the provisions of that act. A lease may be as valuable as any other species of property, and they are sold and transferred for valuable considerations in the same manner as any other species of property. It is almost an everyday occurrence that oil, coal, and other mining leases are sold for large sums of money. The court in its charge to the jury submitted that question fairly, and no exceptions were taken to that part of the charge. All damages which are the natural and proximate results of a tort are recoverable."

Construction.—"The mere fact that Congress enacted the Clayton Act after numerous courts had held similar or analogous restrictions not obnoxious to the Sherman Act July 2, 1890, c. 647, 26 Stat. 209, or invalid at common law, or under state anti-trust statutes, grounds an inference that the Legislature intended in the light of actual experience to change the law." Standard Fashion Co. v. Magrane Houston Co., (C. C. A. 1st Cir. 1919) 259 Fed. 798, 170 C. C. A. 593, affirming on rehearing (C. C. A. 1st Cir. 1918) 251 Fed. 559, 163 C. C. A. 553, which affirmed (D. C. Mass. 1918) 254 Fed. 493.

Acquiring stock of competing corporations.—Where a company acquires the stock and business of various corporations and partnerships engaged in interstate commerce in a certain business and stifles competition between them, it is guilty of a violation of this section. And the fact that certain of the corporations whose stock is taken over were organized under the laws of one state, to whom corporations organized in another state and bearing the same names conveyed their businesses and assets, does not change the situation. U. S. v. New England Fish Exch., (D. C. Mass. 1919) 258 Fed. 732.

Vol. IX, p. 739, sec. 8. [First ed., 1916 Supp., p. 273.]

State banks do not by joining the Federal Reserve System become subject to this section which imposes restrictions relating to interlocking directorates. (1917) 31 Op. Atty.-Gen. 153, wherein it was said:

"The prohibitions of this section relate to banks which are 'organized or operating under the laws of the United States.' Obviously, the section does not apply to state banks merely as state banks, but applies to them, if at all, only in consequence of membership in the Federal Reserve System. . . .

"State banks which join the Federal Reserve System do not, however, operate under the laws of the United States as the laws of their existence, nor in territory over which the United States exercises exclusive legislation. These banks have merely voluntarily accepted the terms and provisions of the Federal Reserve Act (including regulations made pursuant thereto) in becoming members of the Federal Reserve System, from which they are at liberty to withdraw. Yet, since upon being admitted they become subject to the terms and provisions of the Federal Reserve Act, they may also be aptly described as 'operating under the laws of the United States.' Accordingly, section 8 of the Clayton Act standing alone might reasonably be construed to include state member banks within its prohibitions.

"Section 8 of the Clayton Act must be considered, however, in the light of the provisions of section 9 of the Federal Reserve Act relating to membership of state banks. Unlike national banks, state banks are not compelled, but in effect are invited, to join the Federal Reserve System. In section 9 as originally enacted Congress specified the provisions of law to which state banks must conform as conditions of membership, including in the specification certain provisions of pre-existing law. The conditions of membership for state banks having thus been specified it could be argued not without reason that if Congress had intended by section 8 of the Clayton Act to prescribe further conditions of membership it would have affirmatively expressed that intention, which it has not done.

"But, whatever the original intention of Congress may have been in this respect, the present intention seems plainly to appear from the following provisions of section 9 of the Federal Reserve Act as amended and re-enacted by the act of June 21, 1917 (40 Stat. 232, 234), after the passage of the Clayton Act. . . . As thus amended, state member banks are made 'subject to the provisions of this section and to those of this act which relate specifically to member banks.' Accordingly, they would appear not to be subject to the prohibitions of section 8 of the Clayton Act under the rule of construction embodied in the maxim, 'The express mention of one thing impliedly excludes all others.'

"The intention of Congress, however, is not left to appear by implication alone. Section 9 as amended goes further, and by positive provision declares that state member banks shall retain their 'full charter and statutory rights' as state banks, 'subject to the provisions of this act and to the regulations of the board made pursuant thereto.' Since the rights existing under state laws as to selection of directors seem clearly among the 'charter and statutory rights' thus retained in full by state member banks, they must be held free in that regard from the restrictions imposed by section 8 of the Clayton Act."

TRADEMARKS

Vol. IX, p. 747, sec. 1. [First ed., 1909 Supp., p. 676.]

Purpose and effect of act.—"The Registration Act of 1905 . . . without changing the substantive law of trademarks, provided, in the manner prescribed, for the registration of marks (subject to special exceptions) which without the statute would be entitled to legal and equitable protection." Beckwith v. Commissioner of Patents, (1920) 252 U. S. 538, 40 S. Ct. 414, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, reversing (1918) 48 App. Cas. (D. C.) 110.

Rights conferred by trademark.—"A trade-mark confers no monopoly whatever in a proper sense, but is merely a convenient means for facilitating the protection of one's good will in trade by placing a distinguishing mark or symbol—a commercial signature—upon the merchandise or the package in which it is sold.

"It results that the adoption of a trade-mark does not, at least in the absence of some valid legislation enacted for the purpose, project the right of protection in advance of the extension of the trade, or operate as a claim of territorial rights over areas into which it thereafter may be deemed desirable to extend the trade." Ammon v. Narragansett Dairy Co., (C. C. A. 1st Cir. 1919) 262 Fed. 880, following United Drug Co. v. Theodore Rectanus Co., (1918) 248 U. S. 90, 39 S. Ct. 48, 63 U. S. (L. ed.) 141, affirming (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1915) 226 Fed. 545, 141 C. C. A. 301.

"Owner."—One who has the exclusive right to use a trademark in the United States has such a special ownership therein as entitles him to its registration during the period of his exclusive use. Scandinavia Belting Co. v. Asbestos, etc., Works, (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1919) 257 Fed. 937, 169 C. C. A. 87, wherein the court, in holding that an agent who had the exclusive sale in the United States of the products of an English company, had the right to register the trademark of the company, said:

"Ownership" is the right by which a thing belongs to some one in particular to the exclusion of all others. And the right to the exclusive use of this trade-mark in this country was in this plaintiff for a period of 27 years or 7 years beyond the registration period fixed by the statute. To say that the relation which existed between the English and the American company was that of agency does not help the defendant, for if it be conceded that the relation is that of agency it must also be conceded that it is an agency coupled with an interest, and the right to the exclusive use is one which cannot be withdrawn, and an interest sufficient to prevent revocation is sufficient to make the plaintiff such a special 'owner' of the trade-mark as entitled it to register the same under the provisions of the act. To hold that one who has the exclusive right to use a trade-mark has no right to have it registered under the act would be, in our opinion, subversive of the policy and intent of the statute."

Territorial extent of trademark rights.—To same effect as original annotation, see Scandinavia Belting Co. v. Asbestos, etc., Works, (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1919) 257 Fed. 937, 169 C. C. A. 87.

Where two companies selling the same product under similar trademarks do not invade each other's commercial territory to any substantial degree, one company may not enjoin the other from using the trademark in its own territory. Ammon v. Narragansett Dairy Co., (C. C. A. 1st Cir. 1919) 262 Fed. 880.

Disclaimer.—"While there is no specific provision for disclaimers in the trademark statute, the practice of using them is commended to our judgment by the statement of the Commissioner of Patents that, so far as known, no harm came to the public from the practice of distinguishing, without deleting, nonregisterable matter in the drawing of the mark as registered, when a statement, forming a part of the record, was required, that the applicant was not making claim to an exclusive appropriation of such matter except in the precise relation and association in which it appeared in the drawing and description.

"It seems obvious that no one could be deceived as to the scope of such a mark, and that the registrant would be precluded by his disclaimer from setting up in the future any exclusive right to the disclaimed part of it. It seems obvious also that to require the deletion of descriptive words must result often in so changing the trademark sought to be registered from the form in which it had been used in actual trade that it would not be recognized as the same mark as that shown in the drawing, which the statute requires to be filed with the application, or in the specimens produced as actually used, and therefore registration would lose much, if not all, of its value. The required omission might so change the mark that in an infringement suit it could be successfully urged that the registered mark had not been used,—and user is the foundation of registry (§ 2)." Beckwith v. Commissioner of Patents, (1920) 252 U. S. 538, 40 S. Ct. 414, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, reversing (1918) 48 App. Cas. (D. C.) 110.

Reissuance or amendment.—There is no provision in this Act for the reissuance of trademarks or their amendment after issuance. L. P. Larson, Jr., Co. v. Lamont, (C. C. A. 7th Cir. 1919) 257 Fed. 270, 168 C. C. A. 354.

Effect of proviso.—To same effect as second paragraph of original annotation, see Scandinavia Belting Co. v. Asbestos, etc., Works, (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1919) 257 Fed. 937, 169 C. C. A. 87, holding that the plaintiff and its predecessors from whom it derived title made actual and exclusive use of the word "Scandinavia" as a trademark, in regard to belting sold by it in this country, for ten years next preceding the enactment of this section, and was entitled to have the word protected under this section as a valid trademark.

Effect of abandonment.—Where two companies are using the same trademark on their products in separate commercial territories, and one of them abandons it, such abandonment does not justify a third company in using the trademark in the abandoned territory when it is in part occupied by the other one of the original companies and the latter's business is expanding. *Ammon v. 1. Arbitrary or Fanciful Names (p. 758)

Illustrations.—In Scandinavia Belting Co. v. Asbestos, etc., Works, (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1919) 257 Fed. 937, 169 C. C. A. 87, the court held that the term "Scandinavia" was not entitled to protection as a trademark as having been used in a fanciful sense, even though it should appear from the evidence that the word was not adopted to signify the place of manufacture, or the place from which the materials were brought, or any process of manufacture peculiar to Scandinavian countries.

In Alaska Packers' Assoc. v. Getz, (App. Cas. D. C. 1919) 258 Fed. 527, it was held that the fact a company used several different flags as trademarks on canned salmon packed by it, did not prevent another company engaged in the same business from registering the words "Our Flag" as a trademark for canned salmon and canned oysters. The court said:

"In Alaska Packers' Association v. Admiralty Trading Co., 43 App. D. C. 199, the Trading Company applied for registration of a flag 'having a blue background,' etc., with the red monogram 'A. T. Co.' to be used as a mark on canned salmon, and was opposed by the Packing Association, appellant herein, on the ground that the use of the flag by the Trading Company would be likely to produce confusion in trade. We ruled that since the Packing Association used several different flags in the sale of different brands of its goods it was hardly in a position 'to contend that the mark of the applicant will be likely to cause confusion in trade, since that mark differs from each of its marks as much as they differ from one another.' Applying this decision to the case at bar when it was before him, the Commissioner said:

"I do not see why this holding does not apply in the present case. It certainly decided that the Admiralty Trading Company could not be stopped by the Alaska Packers' Association, the present opposer, in its use of a flag as a trade-mark. If, then, the Admiralty Trading Company can use its flags as a trade-mark, it is drawing pretty fine distinctions to say that the present applicant is not entitled to use the words "Our Flag" as its mark. The distinction is entirely too fine to be noticed by the purchasing public."

"We believe that the Commissioner was right, and for that reason his decision is affirmed."

2. Personal and Corporate Names (p. 759)

Individual name.—While a person has a right to use his surname as a trademark, without being guilty of an infringement he must use it in a manner which does not tend to mislead and must make it appear clearly that the goods are his own and not those of a prior registrant of the same name. In such case it is immaterial that he does not use the registrant's trademark in its entirety, if what he does use is misleading and likely to cause confusion. Stark v. Stark Bros. Nurseries, etc., Co., (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1919) 257 Fed. 9, 168 C. C. A. 221, modifying (W. D. Mo. 1918) 248 Fed. 154. The court said: "If, however, the name has previously become well-known in trade, the second comer uses it subject to three important restrictions: (1) He may not affirmatively do anything to cause the public to believe that his article is made by the first manufacturer. (2) He must exercise reasonable care to prevent the public from so believing. (3) He must exercise reasonable care to prevent the public from believing that he is the successor in business of the first manufacturer."

Corporate name—Generally.—To same effect as original annotation, see In re American Steel Foundries, (App. Cas. D. C. 1919) 258 Fed. 160, wherein the word "Simplex" was refused registration as a trade-mark for brake rigging, on the ground that it was the name of a corporation.

3. Descriptive Words (p. 762)

Descriptive words part of fanciful design.—The words "Moistair Heating System," though descriptive, may not be denied registration when combined with the words "Round Oak" as a part of a purely fanciful and arbitrary trademark design, where claim to exclusive use of these descriptive words apart from the mark shown in the drawing filed is disclaimed on the record. Such a case does not fall within the prohibition of the proviso in the Trademark Registration Act against the registration of any mark which consists merely in words or devices which are descriptive of the goods with which they are used, or of the character or quality of such goods, but is governed by the equally imperative language of the statute that no mark not within its prohibitions or provisos shall be denied registration. Beckwith v. Commissioner of Patents, (1920) 252 U. S. 538, 40 S. Ct. 414, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, (reversing (1918) 48 App. Cas. (D. C.) 110) wherein the court said: "It was settled long prior to the Trademark Registration Act that the law would not secure to any person the exclusive use of a trademark consisting merely of words descriptive of the qualities, ingredients, or characteristics of an article of trade. This for the reason that the function of a trademark is to point distinctively, either by its own meaning or by association, to the origin or ownership of the wares to which it is applied, and words merely descriptive of qualities, ingredients, or characteristics, when used alone, do not do this. Other like goods, equal to them in all respects, may be manufactured or dealt in by others, who, with equal truth, may use, and must be left free to use, the same language of description in placing their goods before the public. . . .

"Thus the proviso quoted, being simply an expression in statutory form of the prior general rule of law that words merely descriptive are not a proper subject for exclusive trademark appropriation, if the application in this case had been to register only the words 'Moistair Heating System,' plainly it would have fallen within the terms of the prohibition, for they are merely descriptive of a claimed property or quality of the petitioner's heating system,—that by it moisture is imparted to the air in the process of heating. But the application was not to register these descriptive words 'merely,' alone and apart from the mark shown in the drawing, but in a described manner of association with other words, 'Round Oak' which are not descriptive of any quality of applicant's heating system, and as a definitely positioned part of an entirely fanciful and arbitrary design or seal, to which the Commissioner found the applicant had the exclusive right.

"Since the proviso prohibits the registration not of merely descriptive words, but of a trademark which consists . . . merely' (only) of such words,—the distinction is substantial and plain,—we think it sufficiently clear that such a composite mark as we have here does not fall within its terms. In this connection it must be noted that the requirement of the statute that no trademark shall be refused registration, except in designated cases, is just as imperative as the prohibition of the proviso against registration in cases specified."

Generic name.—The word "Vogue," in the name of a magazine, see infra, this annotation, "8. Name of Periodical," p. 800.

"Lava," as applied to soap, is not descriptive. Waltke v. Schafer, (App. Cas. D. C. 1920) 263 Fed. 650.

The word "Unit," as applied to roller brackets for belt conveyors, is not descriptive and is entitled to registration as a trademark. Stephens-Adamson Mfg. Co.'s Application, (App. Cas. D. C. 1920) 262 Fed. 635.

The words "Safe T Seal" as applied to envelopes, are descriptive, and are not, therefore, a proper subject of a valid trademark. In re Alvah Bushnell Co., (App. Cas. D. C. 1919) 261 Fed. 1013.

The words "Slo Flo" may not be registered as a trademark for lubricating grease for high speed machines, since they are descriptive of character or quality. In re Swan, etc., Co., (App. Cas. D. C. 1919) 259 Fed. 991.

The word "Textul" as a trademark for oil for cleaning textiles is descriptive and not registrable. In re Swan, etc., Co., (App. Cas. D. C. 1919) 259 Fed. 990.

The word "Service" as applied to rubber and fabric belts, is descriptive and not entitled to registration as a trademark under this section. In re Link-Belt Co., (App. Cas. D. C. 1919) 258 Fed. 987.

5. Geographical Names (p. 764)

General rule.—To same effect as original annotation, see Scandinavia Belting Co. v. Asbestos, etc., Works, (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1919) 257 Fed. 937, 169 C. C. A. 87, wherein it was held that the geographical term "Scandinavia" was an invalid trademark. The court said:

"The objection to the use of a geographical name as a trade-mark is twofold:

"(1) It does not indicate the origin, manufacture, or ownership of the goods.

"(2) There can be no exclusive right to make use of it, as any other manufacturer or trader from the same country or section of the country has an equal right to use it.

"Thus in the English Court of Chancery Vice Chancellor Wood declared that if the first importer of wine from Burgundy called it 'Burgundy,' he could not prevent anybody else from calling a wine produced in Burgundy by the name of the place from which it was imported, although he had stamped 'Burgundy' on his corks for 20 years. McAndrew v. Bassett, 4 De G. J. & S., 380. This rests upon the principle that no person has the right to the exclusive use of a mark which is of such a character that others may employ it with equal truth. It was for that reason that the word 'Lackawanna' as applied to coal was not a good trade-mark, for any one whose coal came from the 'Lackawanna Valley' could truthfully designate and sell his coal as 'Lackawanna coal.'

"That there may be exceptions to the rule that a geographical word cannot be a valid trade-mark is conceded. If one should own the only coal mine situated in a place and should give his coal the name of that place, there is no reason why the name should not be recognized as a valid trade-mark. Newman v. Alvord, 51 N. Y. 189, 193, 10 Am. Rep. 588. Upon that principle was decided Congress & Empire Spring Co. v. High Rock Congress Spring Co., 45 N. Y. 291, 6 Am. Rep. 82, as the plaintiff owned the sole place where the water was found so that none other could use the trade-mark with truth. And this doctrine was recently recognized in Manitou Spring Mineral Water Co. v. Schueler, 239 Fed. 593, 152 C. C. A. 427 (1917).

"The courts, too, have sometimes justified a purely arbitrary use of a geographical name where such use could not possibly mislead or deceive any one. Thus in Fleischman v. Shuckmann, 62 How. Prac. (N. Y.) 92 (1881) Judge Van Vorst sitting in the Supreme Court of New York, Special Term, held that a manufacturer of bread in New York City had clearly a right to call it by way of distinction 'Vienna Bread' and an injunction was ordered restraining the defendant from applying the word 'Vienna' to baked articles. The argument was advanced by the defendant that the plaintiff could have no exclusive right to the use of the name of the capital of Austria, as a trade-mark. But the court rejected it, saying that as a mark for bread it was purely arbitrary and in no manner descriptive either of the ingredients or quality of the article. . . . That geographical names, primarily indicative of place, often acquire a secondary signification indicative of the name of the manufacturer or seller, and the excellence of the thing manufactured or sold, and which enables the manufacturer or seller to assert an exclusive right, is familiar learning supported by a long line of decisions. And that the trade-mark herein involved has acquired such a secondary meaning cannot be disputed upon this record. But the fact that the geographical term has come to have a secondary meaning does not, in the opinion of the court, constitute it a valid trade-mark at common law. The writer understands the law to be that geographical names do not constitute a valid trade-mark at common law unless they have been selected, used, and appropriated under such special circumstances as to point distinctively to origin or ownership. In Baglin v. Cusenier Co., supra, the trade-mark 'Chartreuse' was not merely a regional name, but it was peculiarly the designation of the monks (221 U. S. 592, 31 Sup. Ct. 669, 55 L. Ed. 863), and the term pointed to the liqueur manufactured by the monks. This led the court to say that the term as applied to the liqueur could not be regarded in a proper sense as geographical. We may observe in passing that the court in its opinion, written by Mr. Justice Hughes, mentions the fact that it was insisted at the argument that the word did not constitute a valid trade-mark so that at the most the question could be one only of unfair competition. The court did not say that such a conclusion would not follow from such a premise, but denied the premise. If it had denied the conclusion, the claim that a geographical term becomes a valid technical trade-mark at common law when it acquires a secondary meaning indicating origin or ownership would have become the established law as far as the federal courts are concerned, but we are unable to find any such doctrine enunciated in any decision that court has made. In the absence of any such authoritative statement, the court holds that the geographical term 'Scandinavia' is an invalid trade-mark at common law as indicating the notion of place and not that of origin and ownership. And see Manitou Springs Mineral Water Co. v. Schueler, 239 Fed. 593, 601, 152 C. C. A. 427."

When name has secondary meaning.—To same effect as original annotation, see Scandinavia Belting Co. v. Asbestos, etc., Works, (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1919) 257 Fed. 937, 169 C. C. A. 87.

7. Similar Names (p. 766)

Similarity — Illustrations. — "Lava" and "U Lavo" as applied to soap held so similar that registration of the latter term will be denied because of prior use of the former. Waltke v. Schafer, (App. Cas. D. C. 1920) 263 Fed. 650.

So in American Feed Milling Co. v. M. C. Peters Mills Co., (App. Cas. D. C. 1919) 261 Fed. 1011, an application to register the words "Big Chief," associated with the representation of a man on horseback, as a trademark on burlap sacks containing horse feed, was denied because of the prior use by another company of a similar trademark and the word "Arab" for the same purpose.

Likewise in Getz v. Alaska Packers' Assoc., (App. Cas. D. C. 1919) 258 Fed. 526, registration of the word "Premium" as a trademark for canned salmon was denied because of its similarity to word "Premier," used as a registered trademark by another company in the same business.

And in La re Maclin, etc., Co., (App. Cas. D. C. 1920) 262 Fed. 636, registration of the words "El Gallo," as a trademark for tobacco was denied because it was the Spanish translation for "The Rooster," and the words "Our Rooster" had previously been registered as a trademark by another firm in the same business.

But in Paul F. Beich Co. v. Kellogg Toasted Corn Flakes Co., (App. Cas. D. C. 1920) 262 Fed. 640, it was held that the trademark "Golden Crumbles," applied to candy, was not subject to cancellation because of its similarity to the word "Krumbles," used by another firm as a trademark for a cereal breakfast food.

And in Otzen v. J. K. Armsby Co., (App. Cas. D. C. 1919) 261 Fed. 1014, it was held that the trademarks "From the Land of Sunshine" and "Blossom and Sunshine," used on identical goods, were not so similar as to justify the cancellation of the former, especially where the registrant thereof showed a prior use of the word "Sunshine" alone.

8. Name of Periodical (p. 774)

The word "Vogue" as applied to the name of a magazine, and in view of the contents of the magazine offered in evidence, was held not to be so descriptive as to preclude its use as a trademark at common law. Vogue Co. v. Brentano's, (S. D. N. Y. 1919) 261 Fed. 420, granting a preliminary injunction against an infringing magazine.

Vol. IX, p. 775, sec. 6. [First ed., 1909 Supp.; p. 675.]

Amendment of application.—Where an application to have the words "Unit Carrier" registered as a trademark for roller brackets for belt conveyors was denied on the ground that the words were descriptive, it was held that the denial of a motion for leave to strike out the word "Carrier" while the application was pending, was error. Stephens-Adamson Mfg. Co.'s Application, (App. Cas. D. C. 1920) 262 Fed. 635.

Recovery of profits.—Generally.—Where it appears that the defendants infringed the plaintiff's trademark, by refilling tanks bearing such trademark with acetylene gas manufactured by them, and selling them to automobile supply dealers, the plaintiff is entitled to an accounting of the profits realized by the defendants. Prest-O-Lite Co. v. Bournonville, (D. C. N. J. 1915) 260 Fed. 442.

Burden of proof.—In an action for infringement of a trademark the burden is upon the plaintiff to prove that the defendant has made profits attributable, in whole or in part, to its trademark. Ammon v.

Narragansett Dairy Co., (C. C. A. 1st Cir. 1919) 262 Fed. 880.

Where in an infringement suit the profits on infringing sales is shown, and it is inherently impossible for the plaintiff to show what part of them was attributable to the use of the trademark, and what part, if any, to other causes, the burden is then cast upon the defendants to show what part, if any, was due to causes other than the use of the trademark. Prest-O-Lite Co. v. Bournonville, (D. C. N. J. 1916) 260 Fed. 446.

Liability of stockholders for profits.—In a suit against a corporation for infringement, stockholders are liable to account for such profits only as have accrued to themselves, and not for those which have accrued to another, and in which they have had no participation. Prest-O-Lite Co. v. Bournonville, (D. C. N. J. 1916) 260 Fed. 446.

Power of court to grant injunctions.—In Scandinavia Belting Co. v. Asbestos, etc., Works, (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1919) 257 Fed. 937, 169 C. C. A. 87, regarding the power of federal courts to issue injunctions in trademark cases, the court said:

"It is now and for many years has been well-established doctrine that the exclusive property of a proprietor of a trade-mark by virtue of the manufacture or offering for sale of his goods is entitled to the protection which the highest powers of the courts can afford. And the power of the court in such cases is exercised, not only to do individual justice, but to safeguard the interests of the public by preventing one's passing off his goods as the goods of another. The right of property in trade-marks has come to be recognized as of immense and incalculable value. Trade-marks, it has been truthfully said, are the only means by which the manufacturer and the merchant are enabled to inspire and retain public confidence in the quality and integrity of things made and sold, and the only means by which the public is protected against the frauds and impositions of the crafty and designing who are always alert to appropriate to themselves the fruits of the reputation of others.

"The jurisdiction of an equity court to restrain by injunction the passing off by A. of his own goods as being the goods of B. is in aid of the legal right and is founded on the equity of protecting property from irreparable damage. In such a case, the court acts on the same principles upon which it interferes in other cases in protecting legal rights to property."

Effect of failure to give notice.—Where, in an action for infringement, no notice is given by the plaintiff to the defendants of the infringement until a few days before the institution of the action, this section prohibits the recovery of damages for infringement before that date. Stark v. Stark Bros. Nurseries, etc., Co., (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1919) 257 Fed. 9, 168 C. C. A. 221, modifying (W. D. Mo. 1918) 248 Fed. 154.

TRADING WITH THE ENEMY

1918 Supp., p. 847, sec. 1.

Purpose of act.—The Trading with the Enemy Act was not for confiscation of property. It was rather for conservation of property. While if the President so directed, the money or property of an alien enemy might be taken by the government for its own purposes the owner did not part absolutely with it, for after the end of the war his claim to it was in accordance with section 12 to be settled as Congress should direct. In re Gregg, (1920) 266 Pa. 189, 109 Atl. 777.

Constitutionality of Act.—In Fischer v. Palmer, (M. D. Pa. 1919) 259 Fed. 355, the court, in holding this act constitutional, said:

"Without regard to complainant's ability or standing to question, it is not doubted that the action of Congress enacting the Trading with the Enemy Act was a legitimate exercise of its war power. The declaration of war placed the nations concerned in a state of hostility, producing a state of war, and conferred those rights which war confers; some of them being, as conferred by the Constitution upon Congress, to make rules respecting capture on land and water. As was said by Justice Strong, in Miller v. United States, 78 U. S. (11 Wall.) 306, 20 L. Ed. 135, speaking of the power 'to declare war, grant letters of marque and reprisal, and make rules respecting captures on land and water':

"Upon the exercise of these powers no restrictions are imposed. Of course the power to declare war involves the power to prosecute it by all means and in any manner in which war may be legitimately prosecuted. It therefore includes the right to seize and confiscate all property of an enemy, and to dispose of it at the will of the captor. This is and always has been an undoubted belligerent right. If there were any uncertainty respecting the existence of such a right it would be set at rest by the express grant of power to make rules respecting captures on land and water."

"The subject does not call for argument. It seems sufficient to observe that the exercise of the power assumed by Congress is sanctioned by practice, dating from the American Revolution, and has been upheld by a long line of decisions, as disclosed in Brown v. United States, 8 Cranch, 110, 3 L. Ed. 504; Miller v. United States, 11 Wall. 268, 20 L. Ed. 135, and Salamandra Ins. Co. v. N. Y. Life Ins. & Trust Co. (D. C.) 254 Fed. 852."

In Kahn v. Garvan, (S. D. N. Y. 1920) 263 Fed. 909, in upholding the constitutionality of the Act, the court said:

"There remains only the question of the constitutionality of the act, about which I shall say little. As between the Custodian and citizens, section 9 is enough, for the reasons I have given; so far as they may suffer injury, which that section does not meet, it is a loss that cannot be cured without undue impediment to the national power. As between enemies and the Custodian, if in fact enemies, they are subject to the exercise of that power without any legal limitations. Up to the present time in any case it has not been exercised to the full extent of confiscation, as might have been done. Miller v. U. S., 11 Wall. 268, 20 L. Ed. 135. It is urged, however, that under McVeigh v. U. S., 11 Wall. 259, 20 L. Ed. 80, they are constitutionally entitled to a hearing, and that this is the only one possible, since section 9 does not cover them. The effect of that decision has been misunderstood; it proceeded upon the ground that the claimant in a proceeding in rem had under the statute a right to appear. No one can question that necessity under that statute, since only by appearance could the claimant show that his goods were not forfeit.

"But the Trading with the Enemy Act provides an adequate remedy in section 9 to those who can maintain that they are not enemies, and who can therefore have any rights to object to the capture; under the Civil War Confiscation Act, its equivalent was included in the claimant's right to appear and contest condemnation. It is, indeed, a question whether, after peace is declared, a former enemy, then an alien friend, might not bring a suit under section 9, at least as amended on July 11, 1919; but I do not press that point. My reliance is upon the fact that it covers all who do not come in the avowed status of enemies, and that those who do can have no rights arising from capture. Theoretically it may be possible to conceive of cases, though I have not been able to imagine any, of avowed enemies who might still protest on the ground, as I have already suggested, that the property captured was not within the act, or that the formalities of capture were not observed.

"Such supposed protests can arise, I think, only from too narrow an understanding of the scope of the act, and leave the rights denied to enemies too tenuous to impose any constitutional limitation on the powers of Congress. The purpose was to accomplish a swift, certain, and final reduction to possession of vast quantities of property involved in incredible complication of ownership and interest. That purpose could be accomplished only at the sacrifice of much that custom had made sacred; with its propriety courts have nothing to do; they may only learn what it was, and consider whether the constitutional limitations were observed. In the latter consideration it is legitimate to remember that any initial hearing of an enemy would have been a fatuous procedural requirement in practice. That the statute is invalid, because there was no eventual equivalent, seems to me a contention which subjects the nation's powers to unreal and scholastic limitation."

Void marriage to enemy.—A woman who has contracted a void marriage with an alien enemy, he having another wife then living, is not within the Act. Beyerle v. Bartsch, (Wash. 1920) 190 Pac. 239.

Power of Circuit Court of Appeals to require sum recovered on affirmed money judgment to be paid over to alien property custodian.—Birge-Forbes Co. v. Heye, (1920) 251 U. S. 317, 40 S. Ct. 160, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) — (affirming (C. C. A. 5th Cir. 1918) 248 Fed. 636, 160 C. C. A. 536), wherein the court said: "The plaintiff had got his judgment before war was declared, and the defendant, the petitioner, had delayed the collection of it by taking the case up. Such a case was disposed of without discussion by Chief Justice Marshall, speaking for the court in Owens v. Hanney, 9 Cranch 180, 3 L. ed. 697; Kershaw v. Kelsey, 100 Mass. 561, 564, 97 Am. Dec. 124, 1 Am. Rep. 142. There is nothing 'mysteriously noxious' (Coolidge v. Inglee, 13 Mass. 26, 37) in a judgment for an alien enemy. Objection to it in these days goes only so far as it would give aid and comfort to the other side. Hanger v. Abbott, 6 Wall. 532, 536, 18 L. ed. 939, 941; McConnell v. Hector, 3 Bos. & P. 113, 114, 127 Eng. Reprint, 61, 6 Revised Rep. 724. Such aid and comfort were prevented by the provision that the sum recovered should be paid over to the Alien Property Custodian, and the judgment in this respect was correct."

1918 Supp., p. 856, sec. 7 (c).

Bequests to an alien enemy which accrued during the war were properly paid over to the Alien Property Custodian. The effect of war was not to make the bequests void thereby enhancing the estate of the residuary legatee. In re Gregg, (1920) 266 Pa. St. 189, 109 Atl. 777.

Property held by a trustee under a will for the benefit of an alien enemy comes within the purview of this paragraph. Keppelmann v. Palmer, (N. J. 1919) 108 Atl. 432 (reversing (1918) 89 N. J. Eq. 390, 105 Atl. 140) wherein the court said: "The manifest purpose of Congress was that the statute should operate, not only upon property the legal title to which is in the alien, but on all property held for him, or for his benefit, whether the legal title be in him or in the person who holds it for his benefit. In the present case the property is held in trust by the complainants solely for the benefit of these three daughters of the testator, and comes within the very words of the statute, for although they are not the holders of the legal title to the trust estate, they are the equitable owners thereof; the whole beneficial interest being lodged in them."

1918 Supp., p. 856, sec. 7 (e).

Duty of Alien Property Custodian to give refunding bond.—A trustee under a will required by the terms of the "Trading with the Enemy Act" to turn over to an Alien Enemy Custodian property held for the benefit of an alien enemy could not require as a condition precedent to such delivery a refunding bond even though a state statute required such a bond in other cases, for the state statute could not limit the scope and effect of the federal statute. Keppelmann v. Palmer, (N. J. 1919) 108 Atl. 432.

1918 Supp., p. 858, sec. 9.

Venue of suits against Alien Property Custodian.—A suit by an alien enemy against the Alien Property Custodian for an alleged illegal seizure of certain property belonging to the plaintiff, may be prosecuted only in the district where the plaintiff resides. Fischer v. Palmer, (M. D. Pa. 1919) 259 Fed. 355, wherein it was said:

"The act of Congress creating the office of Alien Property Custodian, in defining, regulating, and punishing trading with the enemy, and providing for the seizure and administration of such alien property, affords those aggrieved thereby a full and complete remedy and opportunity to have such grievances adjudicated. If the President, who is, by the act, invested with power over all alien enemy property, does not afford relief to a claimant, such claimant may prosecute his suits at law or in equity to establish any right, title, or interest which he may have in such money or property in the District Court of the United States for the district in which such claimant resides, or, if a corporation, where it has its principal place of business, and if suit shall be so instituted then the money or other property of the enemy, or ally of enemy, against whom such interest, right, or title is asserted, or debt claimed, shall be retained in the custody of the Alien Property Custodian, or in the treasury of the United States, etc. That the provisions of the act were intended to afford adequate protection to the property of deserting alien enemies residing in this country, and corresponding relief when erroneously seized, is apparent, and it is not doubted but that such protection and relief is to be sought and obtained exclusively in the District Court of the habitat of the claimant.

"In the case of United States v. Congress Construction Co., 222 U. S. 199, 32 Sup. Ct. 44, 50 L. Ed. 163, wherein the question was presented to court whether or not exclusive power was vested in the court designated, under Materialmen Act Aug. 13, 1894, c. 280, 28 Stat. 278, as amended by Act Feb. 24, 1905, c. 778, 33 Stat. 811, providing action on the bond should be brought in the court of the district in which said contract was to be performed, and not elsewhere, the court held that the provision restricting the place of suit operates pro tanto to displace the provision upon that subject in General Jurisdictional Act Aug. 13, 1888, c. 866, § 1, 25 Stat. 433. The United States having provided a remedy for violated rights likely to occur in the enforcement of the provisions of the act, relative to the property of alien enemies, and having consented to be sued in a designated court, to the end that injustice may not be done, the remedy provided and the court designated must be regarded as exclusive of all others."

Parties defendant.—In a suit under this section by a trustee of the property of non-resident alien enemy heirs of a decedent to obtain reimbursement from accumulated income for advances made to them, neither the heirs nor the Secretary of the Treasury need be made parties defendants. Spiegelberg v. Garvan, (S. D. N. Y. 1919) 260 Fed. 302. Regarding the necessity of making the heirs parties defendant, the court said:

"In the case at bar plaintiff, prior to the enactment of the Trading with the Enemy Act, could have begun in the state court, an appropriate suit or action against the non-resident alien enemies, could have attached funds in the hands of the trustees, and could have obtained jurisdiction through the medium of an order of publication. If the nonresident defendants failed to appear, the state court would, nevertheless, have acquired jurisdiction and could have rendered its appropriate judgment or decree.

"When, however, a claimant such as plaintiff was remitted to the remedy under section 9, he lost the opportunity to begin his suit or action in a court where jurisdiction of the absent defendant could be obtained. When plaintiff was thus compelled by virtue of section 9 to bring his suit in this court, he at once found himself in a position where jurisdiction could not be obtained; for the reason that the United States courts, at common law and in equity, cannot obtain jurisdiction by means of either attachment or publication over a defendant who is without the jurisdiction. Big Vein Coal Co. v. Read, 229 U. S. 31, 33 Sup. Ct. 694, 57 L. Ed. 1053; Judicial Code, § 50 (Act March 3, 1911, c. 231, 36 Stat. 1101).

"There is not any process nor order by which this court can bring in the nonresident alien enemy as a party defendant.

"Under section 50 of the Judicial Code and Equity Rule 39, the rights of such absent defendant are safeguarded; but both section 50, supra, and equity rule 39 make clear that the court may proceed in the absence of a person who is a proper party to the suit.

"In a proceeding in the state court before the act, defendants would have been necessary parties to the suits; but by requiring plaintiff to go into one of the United States District Courts, and providing that the Alien Property Custodian should be a party defendant, it is quite plain that Congress intended that the Alien Property Custodian was the only necessary party defendant, because it must be assumed that Congress would not legislate in a futile way so as to require a person to be a party defendant over whom the United States courts could not acquire jurisdiction.

"In view of the foregoing, it may be repeated that, if Congress had intended that the alien enemy should be made a party defendant, it would have so stated in clear language, in view of the fact that such language would be necessary in order (if it had the power so to do) to confer jurisdiction over an absent defendant, where no such jurisdiction had ever been conferred before."

With reference to the necessity of joining the Secretary of the Treasury, as a party, it was said:

"It is, of course, presumed that public officers do their duty, and no doubt the Custodian was obligated to deposit the money forthwith in the Treasury of the United States. 'Forthwith,' however, is an elastic expression, and it is conceivable that the Alien Property Custodian may be doing his full duty, and yet for some proper reason may not immediately deposit the money with the Treasurer. On the bill as framed, the money is in the custody of defendant. If, in point of fact, it is not in his custody, then that fact should be alleged in the answer and set up by way of defense."

1918 Supp., p. 859, sec. 10 (c).

Licensing use of American patents.—The Federal Trade Commission has power, by virtue of the authority delegated to it under this section, to issue licenses to use American patents where the record title to such patents is in an enemy but the equitable title thereto rests in an American citizen. 31 Op. Atty.-Gen. 352.

1918 Supp., p. 862, sec. 12.

Sale of property to United States.—The Alien Property Custodian can, for a fair and substantial consideration, sell any property, of which he becomes possessed, to the United States, but he can not sell such property for a merely nominal consideration. The sale of an enemy-owned patent by the Alien Property Custodian to the War Department acting for the United States could hardly affect an existing claim on account of the owner of the patent against the United States for past infringements, and the matter would not seem to be one considered in computing the fair value of the patent which it is proposed shall be sold. If the United States becomes the owner of a patent it can exercise the usual proprietary rights of such an owner and can, therefore, enforce its rights against unlicensed users; can grant licenses; and can make assignments which carry with them full domination of the patent so far as rights thereunder are conveyed. (1919) 31 Op. Atty-Gen. 463.

Alien Property Custodian as "adverse party" in proceedings by nonresident alien enemies under Workmen's Compensation Acts.—In proceedings under a Workmen's Compensation Act by a widow, a nonresident alien enemy, for the death of her husband, it was held that the Alien Property Custodian was a necessary party defendant in an action by the employer to set aside an award of the Industrial Commission, which was made payable to the Custodian, since he was an "adverse party" within the meaning of the statute which provided that awards of the Commission were reviewable by action against it "in which action the adverse party shall also be made defendant." Youghieny, etc., Coal Co. v. Lasevich, (Wis. 1920) 176 N. W. 855.

Payment of expenses incurred in securing possession of enemy property.—The Secretary of the Treasury may lawfully comply with the request of the Alien Property Custodian for the payment of the commission and fees incurred in securing possession of certain enemy trusts herein set forth, to the extent that money has been deposited in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the respective trusts. (1919) 31 Op. Atty-Gen. 438.

1918 Supp., p. 865, sec. 17.

Bill by trustee of seized property.—Whatever may be the right of the trustee of property seized because the beneficiaries are alien enemies to sue under this section on the theory that the Alien Property Custodian has become beneficiary of the trust, there is no jurisdiction under this section of a bill by such a trustee against the Custodian based on a claim that the seizure was invalid. Kahn v. Garvin, (S. D. N. Y. 1920) 263 Fed. 909. As to the right to maintain the bill as an interpleader the court said: "There are but two grounds upon which a bill of interpleader might conceivably rest: (1) That the capture was not within the scope of the act; (2) that the statute is void. Ignoring the more fundamental question whether this court has jurisdiction in any case to entertain such a bill under section 17, I think that neither ground is good. There can be not the least doubt that the capture was within the act, because section 7 (a), third paragraph, and section 7 (c), and section 7 (d) all very clearly include equitable interests in any kind of property. The language of 7 (c) and 7 (d) is as follows:

"Property . . . held for . . . or on behalf of or for the benefit of an enemy."

"The third paragraph of 7 (a) includes all kinds of trusts, and is not limited by the language of the first paragraph:

"Trustees . . . issuing shares or certificates representing beneficial interests."

"The general terms were used to include all kinds of property, and it is scarcely likely that so common a form as trusts should have been excluded. Section 8 (a) covers only property held as security."

Statute as providing for "continuance in office" of officers under Treasury Department.—In (1919) 31 Op. Atty-Gen. 401, Attorney General Palmer commenting on this statute said:

"This statute was construed by Mr. Attorney General Moody in an opinion rendered June 27, 1906 (25 Op. 636). In his view the statute provided for the 'continuance in office' of officers under the Treasury Department. I have no reason to question this conclusion which is reinforced by the consideration that under such circumstances the officer continues obviously to act under and by virtue of his original appointment or commission. In other words, the language must be taken to be equivalent to the phraseology of many state statutes which provide that a term of office shall continue for a specified time and thereafter until the officeholder's successor shall have been appointed and qualified."

Vol. IX, p. 845, sec. 305. [First ed., vol. VII, p. 394.]

Suit against Treasury official to establish equitable lien to fund in Treasury.—A suit against Treasury officials to establish an equitable lien for attorney's fees upon a fund in the United States Treasury appropriated by Congress for payment to a specified person, also made a party defendant, in satisfaction of a finding of the Court of Claims, is not one against the United States, since the suit is one to compel the performance of a ministerial duty in which the party complainant has a particular interest. Houston v. Ormes, (1920) 252 U. S. 469, 40 S. Ct. 369, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) — (affirming (1918) 47 App. Cas. (D. C.) 364), wherein the court said: "The principal contention is that, because the object of the suit and the effect of the decree were to control the action of the appellants in the performance of their official duties, the suit was in effect one against the United States. But since the fund in question has been appropriated by act of Congress for payment to a specified person in satisfaction of a finding of the Court of Claims, it is clear that the officials of the Treasury are charged with the ministerial duty to make payment on demand to the person designated. It is settled that in such a case a suit brought by the person entitled to the performance of the duty against the official charged with its performance is not a suit against the government. So it has been declared by this court in many cases relating to state officers. Board of Liquidation v. McComb, 92 U. S. 531, 541, 23 L. Ed. 623; Louisiana v. Jumel, 107 U. S. 711, 727, 2 Sup. Ct. 128, 27 L. Ed. 448; In re Ayres, 123 U. S. 443, 506, 8 Sup. Ct. 164, 31 L. Ed. 216. In Minnesota v. Hitchcock, 185 U. S. 373, 386 22 Sup. Ct. 650, 655 (46 L. Ed. 954), while holding that a suit against officers of the United States might be in effect a suit against the United States, the court said:

"Of course, this statement has no reference to and does not include those cases in which officers of the United States are sued, in appropriate form, to compel them to perform some ministerial duty imposed upon them by law, and which they wrongfully neglect or refuse to perform. Such suits would not be deemed suits against the United States within the rule that the government cannot be sued except by its consent, nor within the rule established in the Ayers Case."

"And in Parish v. MacVeagh, 214 U. S.

124, 29 Sup. Ct. 556, 53 L. Ed. 936, the court upheld the right of a claimant, in whose favor an appropriation had been made by Congress, to have a mandamus against the Secretary of the Treasury requiring him to pay the claim. To the same effect. Roberts, Treasurer, v. United States, 176 U. S. 221, 231, 20 Sup. Ct. 376, 44 L. Ed. 443.

"In the present case it is conceded, and properly conceded, that payment of the fund in question to the defendant Sanders is a ministerial duty, the performance of which could be compelled by mandamus. But from this it is a necessary consequence that one who has an equitable right in the fund as against Sanders may have relief against the officials of the Treasury through a mandatory writ of injunction, or a receivership which is its equivalent, making Sanders a party so as to bind her and so that the decree may afford a proper acquittance to the government. The practice of bringing suits in equity for this purpose is well established in the courts of the District. Sanborn v. Maxwell, 18 App. D. C. 245; Roberts v. Consaul, 24 App. D. C. 551, 562; Jones v. Rutherford, 26 App. D. C. 114; Parish v. McGowan, 39 App. D. C. 184, s. c. on appeal McGowan v. Parish, 237 U. S. 285, 295, 35 Sup. Ct. 543, 59 L. Ed. 955. Confined, as it necessarily must be, to cases where the officials of the government have only a ministerial duty to perform, and one in which the party complainant has a particular interest, the practice is a convenient one, well supported by both principle and precedent."

Treasury officials joined with a non-resident claimant as defendants in a suit to establish an equitable lien for attorney's fees upon a fund in the United States Treasury appropriated by Congress to pay claimant, conformably to a finding of the Court of Claims, may not successfully challenge the jurisdiction of the District of Columbia courts on the ground that debts due from the United States have no situs in the District, where claimant voluntarily appeared and answered the bill without objection, since the decree will bind her, and constitute a good acquittance to the government. Houston v. Ormes, (1920) 252 U. S. 469, 40 S. Ct. 369, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (1918) 47 App. Cas. (D. C.) 364.

Not applicable to state adjutant general.—The National Defense Act is not applicable to a state adjutant general, he not being a commissioned officer of the National Guard. State v. Ingalls, (Ariz. 1920) 189 Pac. 430.

Appointment of officers of grades of colonel and lieutenant colonel.—The Selective Service Act of May 18, 1917 (see vol. IX, p. 1136), authorized the President to appoint officers of the grades of colonel and lieutenant colonel in the Veterinary Corps, United States Army. 31 Op. Atty.-Gen. 367.

Promotions.—This section does not provide for the promotion of any person then in the Army but merely renders certain veterinarians in the service eligible for appointment to a commissioned rank; a person appointed pursuant to its provisions was originally appointed and not promoted and could not have the rank and pay from the date of the approval of said act. Jefferis v. U. S., (1919) 54 Ct. Cl. 177.

Vol. IX, p. 966, sec. 1. [Field clerks.] [First ed., 1918 Supp., p. 972.]

General construction.—This act changed the designation of clerk, Quartermaster Corps, to field clerk. No new office was created by the act and executive action was unnecessary to determine the status of its beneficiaries. It was intended that the clerks named should receive the allowances from the date of the approval of the act. Charlebois v. U. S., (1919) 54 Ct. Cl. 183.

Regulations of Civil Service Commission as governing appointment of army field clerks.—Army field clerks may be appointed by the Adjutant General, without respect to the rules and regulations of the Civil Service Commission, and from the date of their appointment they are solely within the control of the Rules and Articles of War and not subject to the rules and regulations of the Civil Service Commission. Appropriation of private property for army post as constituting implied promise by government to pay therefor.—When the government, without instituting condemnation proceedings, appropriates for an army post under legislative authority private property to which it asserts no title, it impliedly promises to pay therefor. U. S. v. North American Transp., etc., Co., (1920) 253 U. S. 330, 40 S. Ct. 518, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) — (affirming (1918) 53 Ct. Cl. 424), wherein it was held that the continued holding possession of a placer mining claim as part of an army post after the announcement by the Secretary of War that the tract of which it formed a part was a public reservation under control of the War Department, and the erection of buildings thereon by his authority, is such an appropriation as gives a right of action to the owner against the United States to recover compensation as upon implied contract.

I. CONSTRUCTION OF SELECTIVE SERVICE ACT

4. Determination of Liability to Conscription (p. 1141)

Review by courts—Generally.—To same effect as original annotation, see Arbitman v. Woodside, (C. C. A. 4th Cir. 1919) 258 Fed. 441, 169 C. C. A. 457.

Claim of alienage.—Although the action of local and district boards within the scope of their authority is final, and not subject to judicial review, when the investigation has been fair and the finding supported by substantial evidence, yet where there is proof that the investigation has not been fair, or that the board has abused its discretion by a finding contrary to all the substantial evidence, relief should be given by the courts under the writ of habeas corpus. Thus, where it appeared that a local board rejected a registrant's claim of alienage, which was supported by affidavits, without making an investigation, for the reason that the members of the board believed the affidavits to be false, the sole basis of such belief being the ease with which members of the board had found that such affidavits could be obtained, the rejection was held to be arbitrary and unfair, and the registrant entitled to a writ of habeas corpus. Arbitman v. Woodside, (C. C. A. 4th Cir. 1919) 258 Fed. 441, 169 C. C. A. 457.

Estoppel of United States to exercise jurisdiction over registrant.—Where an alien who has registered and has been exempted under this Act is caused by the acts of a member of his local board and a commissioner of immigration to leave the United States to escape deportation, their acts do not estop the United States from inducting him into military service under the provisions of the Canadian-American Convention, if he later returns to this country from Canada under a permit from the immigration authorities. Morris v. Johnston (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1919) 260 Fed. 821, wherein the court said:

"Tested even by the principles of estoppel which apply between individuals, the facts set up by petitioner fall short of showing a case in his favor. First, Whitney had neither authority nor duty to deport him. He was powerless as chairman of the local board to order his deportation. Neither he nor the board had any power or duty in regard to enforcement of the immigration laws, and their jurisdiction was complete under the Draft Act. The petitioner had voluntarily put himself within its influence, and his rights and his duties, so far as military service due the United States are concerned, were to be weighed and determined by the terms of that act and the instrumentalities created by it."

Misconduct of attorney in soliciting compensated employment in filling out questionnaires involves moral turpitude and is ground for disbarment. In re Wiltse, (Wash. 1920) 186 Pac. 848. Vol. IX, p. 1159, sec. 6. [First ed., 1918 Supp., p. 1019.]

Conspiracy of nonofficial persons to violate section.—Nonofficial persons may be convicted of a conspiracy to violate the provisions of this section, that any person who shall make or be a party to the making of any false statement or certificate as to the fitness or liability of himself or any other person for service under the provisions of this act, or regulations made by the President thereunder, or otherwise evades or aids another to evade the requirements of this act or of said regulations, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor. O'Connell v. U. S., (1920) 253 U. S. 142, 40 S. Ct. 444, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —.

Failure to register—Persons absent from country.—A defendant in a prosecution under this Act for failure to register cannot be regarded as residing abroad and therefore not required to register, where it appears that his father had two farms, one in Montana and one in Canada, a short distance across the border; that the defendant spent a portion of his time in Montana, where he maintained a room and received some of his mail, and the remainder of his time on his father's farm in Canada; that he admitted he was not a citizen of Canada, had taken no steps to become such and was in Montana on registration day. Brown v. U. S., (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1919) 257 Fed. 703, 168 C. C. A. 653.

Failure to answer questionnaire.—It is a violation of the act for a registrant instead of answering the questions pertaining to exemption to write across the sheet:

"I hereby claim my exemption given me under the Constitution of the United States from any and all military service, except for the purpose of executing the laws of the Union, suppress insurrection, and repel invasions." Uhl v. U. S., (C. C. A. 5th Cir. 1920) 263 Fed. 79.

Effect of acquittal by court-martial.—A registrant who has been tried and acquitted by a court-martial on the charges of failing to answer his questionnaire and of desertion, may not thereafter be tried by a federal court under this section on the same charges. U. S. v. Block, (D. C. Ind. 1920) 262 Fed. 205. The court said:

"The plea of the defendant is based upon the theory that he has been once placed in jeopardy and acquitted of the offense charged against him in the indictment. The Selective Service Law provides, in section 6, for the punishment of a registrant failing or neglecting to answer his questionnaire. The section, so far as it is applicable to this case, reads as follows:

"... Or who, in any manner shall fail or neglect fully to perform any duty required of him in the execution of this act, shall, if not subject to military law, be guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction in the district court of the United States having jurisdiction thereof, be punished by imprisonment for not more than one year or, if subject to military law, shall be tried by court-martial and suffer such punishment as a court-martial may direct."

"The Supreme Court of the United States in Grafton v. United States, 206 U. S. 333, 27 Sup. Ct. 749, 51 L. Ed. 1084, 11 Ann. Cas. 640, held that a soldier in the army, having been acquitted of the crime of homicide, alleged to have been committed by him in the Philippine Islands, by a military court-martial of competent jurisdiction proceeding under authority of the United States, cannot be subsequently tried for the same offense in a civil court exercising authority in that territory. In the course of its opinion the court said (206 U. S. on page

"We assume as indisputable, on principle and authority, that before a person can be said to have been put in jeopardy of life or limb the court in which he was acquitted or convicted must have had jurisdiction to try him for the offense charged. It is alike indisputable that if a court-martial has jurisdiction to try an officer or soldier for a crime, its judgment will be accorded the finality and conclusiveness as to the issues involved which attend the judgments of a civil court in a case of which it may legally take cognizance."

"Grafton having been acquitted of the crime of homicide by a court-martial, and having thereafter been convicted in the civil courts, the Supreme Court reversed the case and ordered that the complaint of the United States against Grafton be dismissed, and that he be discharged. This principle, that a man shall not be placed in jeopardy twice for the same offense, applies to misdemeanors as well as to graver crimes. Ex parte Lange, 85 U. S. (8 Wall.) 163, 21 L. Ed. 872.

"In that part of section 6 of the Selective Service Law above quoted, Congress provided that whoever violated such section, 'if not subject to military law,' should be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction in the District Court of the United States having jurisdiction thereof, be punished by imprisonment for not more than one year, and provided further, in the alternative, that 'if subject to military law' he should be tried by court-martial and suffer such punishment as a court-martial may direct, thus recognizing the legal principle that a man may not be subjected to trial or punishment twice for the same offense.

"This is not the case of a plea setting up the former conviction or acquittal of the defendant in a court of another sovereignty. It is well settled that an acquittal or conviction in a state court is not a good defense in this court; but the rule is different where both courts derive their powers from the same sovereignty. In this case the court-martial and the District Court of the United States sitting in this district both derive their powers from the government of the United States."

Indictment—Sufficiency.—In Kreibich v. U. S., (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1919) 261 Fed. 168, an indictment for violation of this section was held to be sufficient which alleged in substance, (1) that defendant was a male person of 28 years of age, a resident of St. Louis, Mo., a registrant and subject to the jurisdiction of the local board for division 13 of said city, (2) that he was before that board pursuant to said act and the acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto, and the regulations promulgated by the President, for the purpose of being classified for service under said acts and regulations, and (3) that "for the purpose of obtaining a more deferred classification than that to which he was rightfully entitled" he willfully, feloniously, and corruptly made the statements set out in the indictment, which were to the effect that his father was dependent upon him for support.

Information—Allegations.—An information charging the defendant with failure to register as required by this Act, need not allege that he is a citizen of the United States. Brown v. U. S., (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1919) 257 Fed. 703, 168 C. C. A. 653.

Verification.—An information alleging a violation of this Act may be verified by an assistant United States district attorney, for R. S. sec. 363 (4 Fed. Stat. Ann. (2d ed.) 620) gives the Attorney General power to employ attorneys "to assist the district attorneys in the discharge of their duties" and places no restriction upon the powers of such assistant district attorneys. Such verification may be made on information and belief, since there is no statute which requires any verification of an information. Brown v. U. S., (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1919) 257 Fed. 703, 168 C. C. A. 653.

Evidence—Admissibility.—In a prosecution for failure to register in accordance with the provisions of this Act, vouchers given to the defendant in February, 1917, which upon their face indicate that at that time he was acting as deputy sheriff of a county in the district in which the prosecution was brought, are admissible as public records, and may be taken into consideration by the jury in connection with other evidence as to the actual residence of the defendant on June 5, 1917. Brown v. U. S., (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1919) 257 Fed. 703, 168 C. C. A. 653, wherein it was further held that evidence that the defendant had been furnished with an opinion from the local advisory board to the effect that he was not required to register was held to have been properly excluded, where there was no offer to show that the opinion had been given on or prior to June 5, 1917.

In a prosecution under this section for failure to register, affidavits made by the defendant several years previous regarding other matters and in which he stated that he was of a certain age at that time, are inadmissible in evidence against him. Gordnier v. U. S., (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1920) 261 Fed. 910, wherein the court said:

"The affidavits which were introduced in evidence against the plaintiff in error were not confessions, and they can hardly be said to be admissions, not having been against interest at the time when they were made. Nor are they judicial admissions. They stand only as declarations of the accused made under oath at a time long prior to the enactment of the law under which he is here prosecuted. They would undoubtedly have been admissible in evidence if there had been some proof tending to show that the plaintiff in error was in fact of the age which he represented himself to be at the time when they were made. In brief, the whole case against the plaintiff in error rests upon his affidavits. Unless he was within the prescribed age, he committed no crime by failing to register. The fact that he was subject to registration cannot be established beyond a reasonable doubt by the contents of the affidavits."

Vcl. IX, p. 1162, sec. 12. [First ed., 1918 Supp., p. 1022.]

Extent of zone.—This section and the Presidential regulations promulgated thereunder provide "for a zone five miles wide around every military camp, and if any such zone takes in any portion of an incorporated city or town within which the sale of alcoholic liquor is not prohibited by state or local law, then only so much of the territory of such city or town can be included in the prohibited zone as lies within one-half mile from the nearest boundary of the camp." Evans v. U. S., (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1919) 261 Fed. 902.

Measurement of distance from camp to place of sale.—In determining whether the place of business of a defendant in a prosecution under this section is within a prohibited zone around a camp, the distance is to be measured in a straight line rather by measuring the distance an automobile would travel in going from the camp to the defendant's place of business. Evans v. U. S., (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1919) 261 Fed. 902.

Transportation of liquor in prohibited zones as offense.—While this section does not designate the "transportation" of liquor as an offense, it does provide for regulations to be promulgated by the President, and section 1 of the regulations promulgated June 27, 1918, specifically prohibits that any liquor be "transported to any place within any such zone." Robertson v. U. S., (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1919) 262 Fed. 948.

Transportation to private home for use of family.—The regulation promulgated pursuant to this section by the President July 3, 1918, prohibiting the carrying of liquors into any place within five miles of a military camp and containing a proviso excluding from its operation the carrying of such liquor to a private home for use of members of the family or bona fide guests, is not violated by one who carries such liquor to his home for the use of his wife in cooking and for use medicinally by an aged relative, who from time to time stopped at his home. Leitch v. U. S., (App. Cas. D. C. 1919) 261 Fed. 456.

"Newbro's Herpicide" was held to be an alcoholic liquor within the meaning of this section in U. S. v. Kinsel, (W. D. Wash. 1918) 263 Fed. 141.

Ending of war as affecting prosecution for violation.—This section remained in force after the passing of the emergency existing at the time of its enactment, for it contains no such limitation or restriction as appears in other parts of the act which are in terms made effective "for the period of the present emergency" or "during the present war," and it is therefore unnecessary to determine whether, at the time the acts were done which were alleged to constitute a violation of this section, the war had or had not ended. Laughter v. U. S., (C. C. A. 5th Cir. 1919) 261 Fed. 68, 171 C. C. A. 664, affirming a conviction for violation of this section and also for conspiracy to violate it.

Prosecution by information.—In Robertson v. U. S., (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1919) 262 Fed. 948, it was contended that a person violating section 12 could be proceeded against only by indictment. Answering this contention, the court said:

"The next proposition is that the accused could be proceeded against only by indictment. The argument advanced is that, although the statute did not provide for imprisonment beyond one year, and made no provision for jail sentence to be at 'hard labor,' and although the sentence was for less than a year, and no requirement therein of hard labor, yet that the sentence might have required such hard labor, and therefore might have been an 'infamous punishment.' No hard labor requirement could have been attached to this sentence, because the maximum imprisonment permitted was one year, and hard labor was not expressly permitted by the statute. Ex parte Karstendick, 93 U. S. 396, 23 L. Ed. 889; In re Mills, 135 U. S. 263, 10 Sup. Ct. 762, 34 L. Ed. 107. The reliance placed by the counsel of accused upon the provision in section 338 of the Criminal Code (Act March 4, 1909, 35 Stat. p. 1088), that the omission of the words 'hard labor' from the provisions of the Criminal Code should not deprive the court of the power to impose such, is not well founded. That provision referred to that statute alone, and has no application to this one, subsequently enacted."

Allegations in information.—An information under this section is not defective because it fails to allege that the offense charged was not punishable under the Articles of War. Robertson v. U. S., (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1919) 262 Fed. 948. Regarding the necessity of such an allegation, the court said:

"Such exception in the statute was no part of the definition of the offense, and was a matter of defense, rather than one necessary to be alleged in the information."

It was also contended that the President had no authority to prohibit the "transportation" of liquor within the camp zone, but if he had such authority, the information was fatally defective in failing to state that such regulations had been made. Concerning such contention, the court said:

"The statute gave the President power to make regulations 'governing the prohibition of alcoholic liquors in or near military camps,' and prescribed the punishment for violation of such regulations. Congress, having declared the purpose of the regulations and the punishment for violation of them, could and did leave the definition of those regulations to the Executive. The regulation prohibiting the transportation of liquor within certain reasonable limits 'near' the camps was well within the authority granted. Such a regulation has the effect of law, and it was not necessary to plead its existence in the information. The information properly covered this phase of the accusation, by alleging facts which would bring the acts charged within the regulations."

Evidence—Admissibility.—In a prosecution under this section for selling alcoholic liquors to a seaman of the United States navy while in uniform, evidence on behalf of one of the defendants that he believed the liquors were ordered by a woman accompanying the seaman, were intended for her own use and that he charged them to her, is admissible. Fetters v. U. S., (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1919) 260 Fed. 142, 171 C. C. A. 178. Regarding the admissibility of such evidence, the court said:

"There was testimony to the effect that George Fetters, who, it is admitted, was not in the dance hall, had some communication with his wife, and that he gave her a package which subsequently turned out to be liquor. Mrs. Fetters did not testify. Fetters testified that he got the order for the liquor, wine, and beer from Mrs. Lewis, and that Mrs. Fetters told him in the barroom that Mrs. Lewis wanted the 'stuff' packed in a box, that he charged Mrs. Lewis for it all. Thereupon the court struck out the testimony 'with reference to the whole thing,' meaning, we take it, the statements of Mrs. Fetters to Fetters; the judge stating that he thought the witness was telling about Mrs. Lewis making application for the liquor and wine. Defendants' counsel objected to striking out the testimony, whereupon the court asked Fetters if all that he knew about the person the liquors 'were ordered for was what Mrs. Fetters came and told' him. Fetters replied, 'Yes.' Thereupon the court struck out the testimony on that subject, and defendants' counsel saved an exception. Fetters said that a few days afterwards Mrs. Lewis promised to pay the bill.

"Inasmuch as it was not contended that Fetters was present with Cranfill or the party at the time the liquors were ordered, the principal circumstances relied upon by the prosecution were that Mrs. Fetters went to the barroom and got a package from her husband, and that the package contained liquor. Fetters denied having sold liquor to men in uniform, and said that he had issued orders to his employes that no liquors were to be sold to men in uniform.

"As against George Fetters we think it was prejudicial error to strike out his testimony as to what Mrs. Fetters told him when she went for the liquors. As the case developed, the effect of the ruling deprived him of his main defense, an honest belief on his part that the liquors were bought by order of Mrs. Lewis for her own use. Intrinsically the delivery of the liquors would have only an ambiguous significance, and he had a right to explain the transaction, and in so doing could testify to what was then and there said to him by the person who, according to his story, was the only one present when he packed or delivered the liquors. Whether such testimony was true or false is not for us to say; but that it was competent is clear to us."

Constitutionality.—To same effect as second paragraph of 1919 Supplement annotation, see Blanc v. U. S., (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1919) 258 Fed. 921, 169 C. C. A. 641.

This section was enacted pursuant to the authority conferred on Congress by section 8 of article 1 of the Constitution of the United States "to raise and support armies" and "to make all laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into execution the foregoing powers, and all other powers vested by this Constitution in the government of the United States, or in any department or officer thereof."

It is not the exercise of the police power of the state, but the constitutional authority of the United States. Grancourt v. U. S., (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1919) 258 Fed. 25, 169 C. C. A. 163.

Amendment of this section by Act of July 9, 1918, c. 143, subc. xiv, 1918 Supp. p. 896, did not have the effect of relieving from liability to prosecution and punishment an offender against this section, in view of the saving provisions in R. S. sec. 13 (9 Fed. Stat. Ann. (2d ed.) 393), which section is still in force. Goublin v. U. S., (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1919) 261 Fed. 5, 171 C. C. A. 601; De Four v. U. S., (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1919) 260 Fed. 596, 171 C. C. A. 360.

"House of ill fame, brothel or bawdyhouse."—In Thaler v. U. S., (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1919) 261 Fed. 746, the court, in discussing the terms "house of ill fame, brothel or bawdyhouse," as used in this section, said:

"To constitute a place a bawdyhouse, it is not necessary that such house supply the prostitutes, nor that it cater only to the lecherously disposed. A house is bawdy, if persons are knowingly permitted to frequent it for the purpose of unlawful sexual intercourse (see People v. Gastro, 75 Mich. 127, 133, 42 N. W. 937), although such character is not generally known, save to the lasciviously inclined and to panders. If prostitution, in the sense of involving pecuniary reward, is thought essential (there are authorities both ways), it is enough to say that the testimony in the instant case would support an inference of prostitution, although the record is silent as to money payment, as such, to the women.

"Although in one or more jurisdictions proof of reputation seems to be necessary to constitute a 'house of ill fame,' and while in some jurisdictions proof of general reputation is permitted in support of a charge of keeping a house of that character (although in others it is not), yet in general popular acceptation the terms 'bawdyhouse,' 'brothel,' and 'house of ill fame' are synonymous (see Century Dictionary); and in many jurisdictions they are held to be such (4 Words and Phrases, title 'House of Ill Fame'; 1 Words and Phrases, title 'Bawdyhouse,' and cases cited; State v. Boardman, 64 Me. 523, 529; State v. Keithley, 142 Mo. App. 417, 423, 127 S. W. 406). In the statute here involved, the words are, 'house of ill fame, brothel or bawdyhouse.' An allegation that the hotel was a 'bawdyhouse' would thus have been sufficient, and the indictment as drawn was satisfied, so far as the description of the house is concerned, by proof that it was a 'bawdyhouse'; a finding to that effect being necessarily covered by the verdict.

"The statute makes it an offense 'to aid or abet prostitution,' even though there is no resort to a bawdyhouse, brothel, or house of ill fame. The gist of the offense charged is the assisting of the four persons in question to find (and be received in) a house of such character that their lustful purposes could therein be carried out. The three characterizations used in the indictment were merely descriptive of one and the same offense, and defendant could not have been prejudiced by the inclusion of the words 'house of ill fame,' even were the proof thought to be lacking as to such character, if to be distinguished from the other character assigned. Bennett v. United States (C. C. A. 6) 194 Fed. 630, 633, 114 C. C. A. 402; Daniels v. United States (C. C. A. 6) 196 Fed. 459, 464, 116 C. C. A. 233."

Necessity of district attorney signing indictment.—An indictment for a violation of this section is not defective because of the failure of the district attorney to attach his signature thereto. Nakano v. U. S., (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1920) 262 Fed. 761.

Information.—Keeping a house of ill-fame in violation of this section is not an infamous crime, but a misdemeanor both by the terms of the section and under Penal Laws, sec. 335, 7 Fed. Stat. Ann. (2d ed.) 987, and may be prosecuted by information. Pollard v. U. S., (C. C. A. 5th Cir. 1919) 261 Fed. 336; Blanc v. U. S., (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1919) 258 Fed. 921, 169 C. C. A. 641; De Four v. U. S., (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1919) 260 Fed. 596, 171 C. C. A. 360; Brown v. U. S., (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1919) 260 Fed. 752, 171 C. C. A. 490. In the last case the court said:

"The contention on the part of the plaintiff in error that the offense charged against her could only be prosecuted by indictment is wholly without merit, since the punishment prescribed by law for a conviction thereof is a fine or imprisonment not exceeding one year, or both, in the discretion of the court.

"By act of Congress a sentence to imprisonment for a period longer than one year, or to imprisonment and confinement at hard labor, may be ordered to be executed in a state prison or penitentiary, and such imprisonment, whether with or without hard labor, is an infamous punishment. Mackin v. United States, 117 U. S. 348, 352, 6 Sup. Ct. 777, 29 L. Ed. 909. But that a crime the punishment for which is confined to imprisonment in a county jail is but a misdemeanor, and may be prosecuted by information, has long been settled. United States v. Waller, Fed. Cas. No. 16,634, 1 Sawy. 701; United States v. J. Lindsay Wells Co. (D. C.) 186 Fed. 248; In re Bonner, 151 U. S. 242, 14 Sup. Ct. 323, 39 L. Ed. 149, and cases there cited; Ex parte Wilson, 114 U. S. 417, 425, 5 Sup. Ct. 935, 29 L. Ed. 89."

Sufficiency.—An information for a violation of this section need not allege that the offense was committed knowingly. De Four v. U. S., (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1919) 260 Fed. 596, 171 C. C. A. 360.

A count is sufficient which charges the defendant with unlawfully, knowingly and willfully receiving and permitting to be received and to remain for immoral purposes—i. e., for the purpose of assignation and prostitution—a woman into a structure, etc., then and there used for the purpose of lewdness, assignation and prostitution, within the prohibited zone of a cantonment used for military purposes. It is not necessary to charge the defendant with having been the owner of or in control of the premises. If he knowingly aided and abetted the owner or proprietor by giving a woman entrance to the premises for such purposes, his guilt is that of a principal and may be so charged. Pollard v. U. S., (C. C. A. 5th Cir. 1919) 261 Fed. 336.

Judicial notice of location of house.—In a prosecution for a violation of this section, the court may properly take judicial notice of the fact the defendant's house was less than five miles from a United States military encampment. Anzine v. U. S., (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1919) 260 Fed. 827, 171 C. C. A. 553.

Evidence—Admissibility.—In a prosecution for a violation of this section, evidence of the general reputation of the house maintained by the defendant is admissible for the value which it may have in determining the question of the defendant's guilt or innocence where there is other evidence tending to establish that the house was a house of ill-fame. Anzine v. U. S., (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1919) 260 Fed. 827, 171 C. C. A. 553.

On the same principle, evidence that a woman living on the premises was soliciting prostitution there, when arrested, is admissible. Nakano v. U. S., (1920) 262 Fed. 761.

Evidence of a physician of the city board of health as to the diseased physical condition of certain women found on the premises of the defendant, is admissible in a prosecution under this section, as evidence tending to prove the character of the house. Anzine v. U. S., (C. C. A. 1919) 260 Fed. 827, 171 C. C. A. 553; Nakano v. U. S., (1920) 262 Fed. 761.

In a prosecution for a violation of this section, testimony of certain police officers repeating questions asked of the defendant by certain soldiers as to whether there were any women in the house conducted by the defendant, transactions of an immoral character with such women, and testimony of the policemen that the occupation of the women in the house was that of prostitution, was held to have been properly admitted as relevant, material and competent. Gran-court v. U. S., (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1919) 258 Fed. 25, 169 C. C. A. 163.

In a prosecution for a violation of this section evidence that the defendant had previously conducted houses of ill-fame, is admissible to rebut an inference of mistake, want of guilty knowledge, wrongful purpose or innocent intent. De Four v. U. S., (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1919) 260 Fed. 596, 171 C. C. A. 360.

In a prosecution under this section for assisting certain persons to find and be received in a hotel of such character that their lustful purposes could therein be carried out, evidence that they were served with liquor while in their rooms is relevant and admissible. Thaler v. U. S., (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1919) 261 Fed. 746, wherein it was said: "There was no error in refusing to strike out the testimony that liquor was furnished the party, notwithstanding defendant was not present at that time. While neither he nor the hotel men were on trial for selling liquor (it was an offense to sell liquor to a soldier in uniform), the testimony that liquor was furnished was a natural part of the narrative of the entire occurrence; it bore upon the credibility of the story of the transaction in the vital respects involved; that the proof was strong enough without it did not render it irrelevant, and we cannot say that the furnishing of several orders of liquor to a party so composed, in a private room, had no tendency to support a conclusion that rooms were being let for purposes of illicit sexual relation. The fact that the liquor was ordered from and paid for to the bell boy did not necessarily destroy the relevancy of the testimony."

Sufficiency.—In De Four v. U. S., (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1919) 260 Fed. 596, 171 C. C. A. 360, it was held that the evidence was sufficient to sustain a conviction for a violation of this section.

Sentence.—Where a defendant is found guilty of a violation of this section, he may be sentenced to consecutive terms of imprisonment on the various counts and to pay a fine on each count, despite the fact that the offenses charged constitute but one continuous offense, if the aggregate of the sentences and fines are less than the maximum punishment fixed by this section. Anzine v. U. S., (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1919) 260 Fed. 827, 171 C. C. A. 553.

Re-enlistment in naval service.—An enlisted man who in time of peace has incurred the penalties for desertion prescribed by this section and R. S. sec. 1996 (see same page of vol. IX), and who has received an unconditional pardon for such offense, is eligible for re-entry into the naval service. (1918) 31 Op. Atty-Gen. 225.

Vol. IX, p. 1254, art. 2. [First ed., 1918 Supp., p. 977.]

The acceptance by an officer of a captain's commission, carrying the privileges and pay of the office, is amply sufficient proof that he is subject to military law. Ex p. Givins, (N. D. Ga. 1920) 262 Fed. 702.

"In the field."—In Ex p. Jochen, (S. D. Tex. 1919) 257 Fed. 200, it was held that a superintendent of the quartermaster corps, serving with the army on the Mexican border during the war between the United States and Germany, and at a time when there were frequent disturbances on the border, was serving with the army "in the field" within the meaning of paragraph (d) of this section. In defining the term "in the field," Hutcheson, J., said:

"I hold that the terms 'in the field' were used by Congress in the meaning and sense given to them in the general orders of the War Department, as follows:

"'Field service is defined to be service in mobilization, concentration, instruction or maneuver camps as well as service in campaign, simulated campaign or on the march.'"

"And, second, that if in this I am mistaken, and the words are not broad enough to embrace armies in concentration, maneuver, and mobilization camps, but must have application only where the armies are in or expecting actual conflict, that the conditions on the border during the period of Jochen's service were such as that, in the more limited sense as well, the armies with which he was serving were 'in the field.'"

A cantonment in the United States where during a war troops are trained for overseas service in the theater of operations is a place where troops may be said to be "in the field" within the meaning of this section. Consequently, a civilian employee at such a cantonment charged with rendering false claims against the United States is subject to military law and may be tried by a court-martial. Hines v. Mikell, (C. C. A. 4th Cir. 1919) 259 Fed. 28, 170 C. C. A. 28, reversing (E. D. S. C. 1918) 253 Fed. 817, in 1919 Supplement annotation. In passing upon this question, the court said: "In time of war, with some exceptions, practically the entire army is 'in the field,' but not necessarily 'in the theater of operations.' This would be undoubtedly true in case of war within our borders, and we can conceive of no reason why the army in America engaged in training and preparing for service on the firing line overseas should not be considered and treated as a component part of the entire army, the majority of whom were actually engaged on the firing line. To maintain those who were 'over there,' it was necessary to have a reserve force located so near thereto as to be available in the case of an emergency, and during the war just ended it was very essential that they should continue to increase such reserve force under the selective draft, and in order to do this the individual had to be mustered into the service and undergo strict discipline and training so that he might render efficient service under the modern mode of warfare. It seems perfectly clear that from the moment he entered the service he was in every sense of the word a part of the army, and when he was taken to the cantonment he thereby was serving with the army 'in the field,' doing practically everything required of a soldier save that of engaging in actual combat. All the training he received was for the purpose, as we have stated, or qualifying him for the contest that was going on, as we all know, at a fearful rate.

"If an individual during peace had enlisted at an army post he could not, so long as he remained there, in any sense of the word be deemed to be engaged in the service 'in the field.' However, those who entered the cantonment took the first step which was to lead them to the firing line, and they were then as much 'in the field' in pursuance of such training as those who were encamped on the fields of Flanders awaiting orders to enter the engagement."

Civilian employees.—It is not necessary that a person be in uniform in order to be a part of the land forces of the United States and subject to military jurisdiction. Thus, a civilian serving as superintendent of the quartermaster corps with troops on the Mexican border during the war between the United States and Germany, is a part of the land forces of the United States and may be tried by a military tribunal for offenses committed by him while with the army. Ex p. Jochen, (S. D. Tex. 1919) 257 Fed. 200.

Vol. IX, p. 1259, art. 8. [First ed., 1918 Supp., p. 978.]

The term "district" used in this section has no technical military meaning, but includes the territory occupied by a permanent military camp. Ex p. Givins, (N. D. Ga. 1920) 262 Fed. 702.

The commander of a camp may appoint a general court-martial when authorized to do so by the President. Ex p. Givins, (N. D. Ga.) 1920) 262 Fed. 702.

Vol. IX, p. 1273, art. 50. [First ed., 1918 Supp., p. 986.]

Promotion of officer while awaiting trial by general court-martial as constructive pardon.—The promotion of an officer of the Navy while under charges awaiting trial by general court-martial does not operate as a constructive pardon of the offenses charged against him. Thus where an ensign in the Navy, while under charges general in their nature and not peculiar to his office of ensign, was commissioned a lieutenant, and was thereafter found guilty of such charges by a general court-martial and sentenced to be dismissed from the service, the Secretary of the Navy was authorized by the law in mitigating his sentence with reference to the grade in which he was permanently serving. Vol. IX, p. 1281, art. 74. [First ed., 1918 Supp., p. 991.]

Jurisdiction of civil courts.—Congress, by re-enacting in the Act of August 29, 1916, the Articles of War did not vest in the military courts in war time exclusive jurisdiction to try and punish a soldier for the murder of a civilian at a place within the jurisdiction of a state, and not within the confines of any camp or place subject to the control of the federal civil or military authorities, despite the words in Art. 74, "except in time of war," qualifying the duty of a military commander, imposed by that article, to respond to the demand by state authority for the surrender of military offenders against the state criminal laws, and the grant in Art. 92, expressed in the form of a negative pregnant, of authority to courts-martial to try capital crimes when committed by an officer or soldier within the geographical limits of the United States and the District of Columbia in time of war, both of which provisions take their origin in the Act of March 3, 1863, and were drawn from the terms of that act as re-expressed in the Revision of 1874. *Caldwell v. Time of war.—For military persons a time of war, within the meaning of this section, continues from the date of the declaration of war by Congress until some formal proclamation of peace by an authority competent to proclaim it. Ex p. Givins, (N. D. Ga. 1920) 262 Fed. 702.

Necessity of allegation in record of court-martial.—The failure of the record of a court-martial, held under the provisions of this section, to aver the crime to have been committed in a time of war is not fatal. Ex p. Givins, (N. D. Ga. 1920) 262 Fed. 702.

Vol. IX, p. 1286, art. 93. [First ed., 1918 Supp., p. 994.]

Sentence—Place of execution.—Since this article authorizes punishment "as the court-martial may direct," the court may properly prescribe the kind and duration of the punishment for a person found guilty of manslaughter. The place of the execution of the sentence, however, is under legislative control and must be designated in accordance with the provisions of article 42 and section 2 of the Act of March 4, 1915. Accordingly, a sentence of a court-martial, imposed on a person found guilty of manslaughter, is not defective because it does not include the place of confinement but leaves its designation to the reviewing authority. Ex p. Givins, (N. D. Ga. 1920) 262 Fed. 702.

Vol. IX, p. 1302, sec. 5. [First ed., 1918 Supp., p. 893.]

Right to sue government.—In Covey v. U. S., (N. D. Ia. 1920) 263 Fed. 768, the court, quoting this section, said: "It thus appears that the Director of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance, subject to the general direction of the Secretary of the Treasury is empowered and directed to administer and enforce the provisions of the War Risk Insurance Act, and for that purpose is given full power and authority to establish the right to benefits, compensation, or insurance provided for in this act, the form of applications therefor, the method of making investigations and medical examinations, and all other things necessary or proper to a full and final determination of the rights of all claimants to compensation, the manner and form of the adjudications and award, and it is only 'in the event of disagreement as to the claim for losses, or amount thereof, between the said bureau and the parties to such contract or policy,' that an action on the claim may be brought against the United States in the District Court, either in admiralty or otherwise, under the War Risk Insurance Act."

Vol. IX, p. 1319, sec. 302. [First ed., 1918 Supp., p. 910.]

"Injury" as including insanity.—In (1919) 31 Op. Atty.-Gen. 431, it was the opinion of the Attorney General that Curtis M. Berry, an enlisted man who had served some time in the United States army and who was discharged therefrom because of his insanity, was properly admitted to St. Elizabeth's Hospital upon the order of the Secretary of the Treasury as an insane patient of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance. It was said that the hospital service to which Berry was entitled was included in the purposes for which appropriations were made for the use of war risk insurance, and the cost of the same should be paid out of these appropriations. It was further said that the only provision for a judicial inquiry into the mental status of any persons previous to their admission to St. Elizabeth's Hospital was in the case of indigent persons residing in the District of Columbia, and as Berry did not come within this class, no such judicial inquiry was necessary in his case.

Effect of R. S. 4756.—See annotation under that section, ante, p. 718.

Vol. IX, p. 1325, sec. 400. [First ed., 1918 Supp., p. 916.]

Application by whom made.—The privilege of applying for insurance under this section is confined to persons in the military or naval service of the United States, including of course their duly authorized representatives. (1917) 31 Op. Atty.-Gen. 188.

Vol. IX, p. 1325, sec. 401. [First ed., 1918 Supp., p. 916.]

Total disability occurring before application thereof.—An enlisted man, who was in the active service at the time of the publication of the terms and conditions of the contract of insurance covering total permanent disability, and who sustained such disability before the expiration of 120 days from such publication, without having applied for such insurance, is entitled to be treated as having been automatically insured and to receive $25 per month. The Bureau of War Risk Insurance is unauthorized to grant insurance against total permanent disability upon an application made therefor after such disability has been sustained, and hence any premiums paid upon insurance thus applied for should be returned to the applicant. (1919) 31 Op. Atty-Gen. 534.

Vol. IX, p. 1326, sec. 402. [First ed., 1918 Supp., p. 917.]

Validity of provision in converted policy making commuted value payable to estate of insured.—Inclusion in the converted insurance policies proposed to be issued under the War Risk Insurance Act of a provision that the commuted value of the policy shall be payable to the estate of the insured, in the event of the failure of any person within the permitted classes to survive the insured, or in the event of the exhaustion by death of all persons within those classes before the payment of the full number of installments provided for, is authorized by the law and will be valid. (1919) 31 Op. Atty-Gen. 387, wherein it was said: "The form of policy submitted is one of the forms of insurance into which it is proposed to convert the term insurance heretofore issued. The precise question is whether the fact that section 402 does not expressly provide that, in any event, anything more than the reserve value of the policy shall be paid to the estate of the insured precludes authority to insert in the converted policy a provision making the commuted value of the insurance payable to the estate of the insured. This, as has been seen, it is proposed to do in two contingencies. In the case of a beneficiary or beneficiaries within the permitted classes surviving the insured, as stated above, the obligation of the United States to pay the full amount of the insurance accrues even in the case of the temporary insurance, and section 402 does not undertake to direct to whom any unpaid part of it shall go in the event of the death of the beneficiary. The result is that the Secretary of the Treasury was left free, in determining upon 'the full and exact terms and conditions of such contract,' to provide for the disposition of the unpaid part of the insurance in this contingency. I am of opinion, therefore, that he could lawfully have put into the policy of temporary insurance the last sentence of the paragraph quoted above from the proposed policy, and here can be no doubt about his right to insert this in the converted policy.

"The only remaining question is whether he is now authorized to insert in the converted policy a provision making payable to the estate of the insured the commuted value of the insurance in the event no beneficiary within the permitted classes survives the insured when, under section 402, the policy of temporary insurance was required to provide that, in that event, only the reserve value of the policy should be paid, . . . I am therefore of opinion that, in the event of the failure of any person within the permitted classes to survive the insured, or in the event of the exhaustion by death of all persons within those classes before the payment of the full number of installments provided for, there is ample authority to make the amount then and thereafter payable under the policy payable to the estate of the insured. This being true, there can be no legal objection to commuting future payments and discharging the obligation of the United States by paying the commuted value."

Vol. IX, p. 1328, sec. 404. [First ed., 1918 Supp., p. 919.]

Conversion of war time term insurance into other forms of insurance.—The Bureau of War Risk Insurance may, without awaiting the formal termination of the war as declared by proclamation of the President of the United States, convert war-time term insurance heretofore granted under the provisions of the War Risk Insurance Act into other forms of insurance authorized by said Act. 31 Op. Atty-Gen. 382.

1918 Supp., p. 887. [Medals of honor, etc.] [First ed., 1918 Supp., p. 1045.]

Acceptance by naval officers of medals and decorations conferred by allied nations in great war.—By virtue of this provision of the Army Appropriation Act, the Department of State is justified in delivering to naval officers of the United States medals and decorations heretofore tendered to such officers through said Department by the governments of nations concurrently engaged with the United States in the great war. The words "medal or decoration" appearing in the provision, are used in their usual meaning and do not include such articles as bowls, cups, and photographs. (1919) 31 Op. Atty-Gen. 445, wherein it was said: "The paragraph under consideration is one of twelve contained in the Army appropriation act of July 9, 1918, which deal with the subject of medals and decorations. The first nine paragraphs authorize the award of such medals and decorations by the United States to persons serving in any capacity with the Army. The tenth paragraph provides that American citizens who since August 1, 1914, have received 'decorations or medals for distinguished service in the armies or in connection with the field service of those nations engaged in war against the Imperial German Government, shall, on entering the military service of the United States, be permitted to wear such medals or decorations.' The eleventh paragraph is the one under consideration. The twelfth provides that the President 'is authorized, under regulations to be prescribed by him, to confer such medals and decorations as may be authorized in the military service of the United States upon officers and enlisted men of the military forces of the countries concurrently engaged with the United States in the present war' (40 Stat. 872).

"The repeated use in the last three paragraphs of such terms as 'military service' and 'military forces,' terms which may be construed as referring to the Navy as well as to the Army, in the place of expressions in the first nine paragraphs which unmistakably restrict the application of the latter to the Army could not have been inadvertent and is significant. It should be noted, also, as tending to show the intention of Congress that the provisions of the first nine paragraphs are substantially embraced in the act of February 4, 1919, authorizing the award of medals and decorations by the United States to persons in the naval service, and that a bill 'to permit American citizens to wear medals or decorations received from certain foreign countries on entering the military or naval service of the United States, and for other purposes,' was on July 15, 1918, tabled by the House without objection for the reason, as given by the member of the Military Affairs Committee in charge of the bill, that its provisions had been enacted in the Army appropriation act of July 9, 1918.

"For reasons growing out of the organization and jurisdiction of the respective congressional committees, there was a reason why the legislation relating to the award by the United States of decorations to the personnel of the two branches of the service, involving the necessity of appropriations, should take the form of separate bills. But in enacting the provisions authorizing the acceptance of medals from the allied governments, these considerations did not apply and so it was reasonable that broader language should be used, applicable alike to the Army and Navy."

1918 Supp., p. 896, ch. XIV. [First ed., 1918 Supp., p. 1023, note.]

Sec. 13 of Act of May 18, 1917, here amended remained in force as to prosecution and punishment of offenses already committed against it, in view of the saving provisions in R. S. sec. 13 (9 Fed. Stat. Ann. (2nd ed.) 393), which section is still in force. Goublin v. U. S., (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1919) 261 Fed. 5, 171 C. C. A. 601, Ross, J., dissenting.

WATERS

Vol. IX, p. 1349, sec. 2339. [First ed., vol. VII, p. 1090.]

- I. Construction in general.
- II. Appropriation of waters.

I. CONSTRUCTION IN GENERAL (p. 1349)

Nature of statute—Not a grant.—To the same effect as the original annotation, see Sarret v. Hunter, (1919) 32 Idaho 536, 185 Pac. 1072.

II. APPROPRIATION OF WATERS (p. 1351)

Riparian ownership unnecessary.—This section "was not intended to grant from the federal government to the people of the state the waters on the public domain, but to confirm the rights of those who have acquired, under certain conditions, the use of the water, and calls that right a vested one, even though the waters are taken from streams upon the public domain and without the assent of the government. The right to appropriate water exists without private ownership in the soil or without perfect title thereto, as against all persons except the government or its grantees." Laurance v. Brown, (1919) 94 Ore. 387, 185 Pac. 761.

Vol. IX, p. 1366, sec. 3. [First ed., vol. VII, p. 1099.]

Withdrawal under the first clause.—"A withdrawal under the first form—that is, a withdrawal of lands required for 'irrigation works'—is intended as a permanent reservation for governmental use. It amounts to a legislative withdrawal, and is absolute. United States v. Hanson, 167 Fed. 881, 93 C. C. A. 371. Until its restoration to entry, land withdrawn under the first form of withdrawal is not subject to entry, and no right thereto can be initiated by any settler thereon. By its withdrawal the land is segregated from the public domain, and is excepted from the operation of the public land laws. No right of a private settler attaches to, or hangs over, the land so withdrawn, to interfere with such action as the government may thereafter see fit to take in respect to it." Donley v. West, (Cal. App. 1920) 189 Pac. 1052.

Effect of revocation of withdrawal.—"We can see no reason why this order revoking the previously made order of withdrawal should not, when noted on the records in the General Land Office and in the local land office, as directed by the Secretary's order, have the effect of an order of restoration, restoring the land again to settlement as public land subject to entry under the homestead laws of the United States." Donley v. West, (Cal. App. 1920) 189 Pac. 1052.

Vol. IX, p. 1367, sec. 4. [First ed., vol. VII, p. 1099.]

Increase of estimate by Secretary—Waiver of estimate.—"The primary purpose of the law, of course, is to secure the settlement and reclamation of arid public lands. In its administration the first step is an investigation for the purpose of determining the feasibility of a proposed project. Such investigation necessarily involves some consideration of the probable cost, but apparently Congress was not content to have the Secretary base his estimate upon the opinion of engineers alone; he is first to let contracts for construction, and then he is to estimate the probable cost, and equitably apportion it to the lands to be reclaimed. Of this estimate and apportionment he is to give public notice, and thereupon prospective settlers may determine for themselves whether they will or will not settle upon the lands, and thus bind themselves to pay the published price for water. In case of settlement under such conditions. it is incompetent for the Secretary to increase the price at a later date, even if it turns out that the published estimate is insufficient to cover the actual cost." Payette-Boise Water Users' Assoc. v. Cole, (D. C. Idaho 1919) 263 Fed. 734, holding, however, that the requirements of the section as to estimate may be waived by the settlers, in which event the actual cost only can be charged and this is a subject of judicial inquiry.

III. Elements of offense.

1. Debauchery.

IV. Indictment.

1. In general.

2. Purpose of transportation.

V. Evidence.

1. Admissibility.

2. Sufficiency.

III. ELEMENTS OF OFFENSE

1. Debauchery (p. 1410)

Immoral act committed on interstate journey.—The mere fact that an immoral act is committed on an interstate journey does not of itself constitute a violation of this section. Biggerstaff v. U. S., (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1919) 260 Fed. 926. Regarding the effect of the proof of such an act, the court said: "Its relevance in that respect is evidential, not substantive, and when relied on as evidence of a preconceived purpose care must be taken to regard it in a true perspective. The act may have been a casual incident in the journey, without forethought or anticipation at the time it was begun. Many things, good and bad, occur in that way."

IV. INDICTMENT

1. In General (p. 1411)

A count in an indictment which follows the language of the statute is sufficient. Huffman v. U. S., (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1919) 259 Fed. 35, 170 C. C. A. 35. The court said:

"This offense is statutory, and we must look to the language of the statute for the ingredients of the offense. The said first count of the indictment in the case at bar charges the offense in the language of the statute, and is therefore sufficient. U. S. v. Gooding, 12 Wheat. 460, 6 L. Ed. 693; Potter v. U. S., 155 U. S. 438, 15 Sup. Ct. 144, 39 L. Ed. 214; Burton v. U. S., 202 U. S. 344, 26 Sup. Ct. 688, 50 L. Ed. 1057, 6 Ann. Cas. 392.

"We think the count in question contained every element of the offense intended to be charged; that it was sufficient to notify the defendant of what he was charged with, and therefore what he must be prepared to meet; and upon its face accurately revealed to what extent an acquittal or conviction upon that count of the indictment might be pleaded, in the event of other proceedings for the same or a similar offense."

2. Purpose of Transportation (p. 1411)

An indictment under this section which charges that the transportation was unlawfully and feloniously made "for the purpose of debauchery," sufficiently alleges the necessary criminal intent. Ammerman v. U. S., (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1919) 262 Fed. 124.

V. EVIDENCE

1. Admissibility (p. 1412)

Similar offenses.—In a prosecution under this section evidence of prior illicit relations between the accused and the woman charged to have been transported are admissible, as bearing upon the element of the intent with which she was transported at the time specified in the indictment. Ammerman v. U. S., (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1919) 262 Fed. 124.

For evidence held admissible to show a violation of this Act, see Nokis v. U. S., (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1919) 257 Fed. 413, 168 C. C. A. 453.

2. Sufficiency (p. 1412)

For evidence held to be sufficient to show violation of this Act, see Nokis v. U. S., (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1919) 257 Fed. 413, 168 C. C. A. 453; Huffman v. U. S., (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1919) 259 Fed. 35, 170 C. C. A. 35; Blackstock v. U. S., (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1919) 261 Fed. 150.

Vol. IX, p. 1415, sec. 3. [First ed., 1912 Supp., p. 420.]

"Any other immoral purpose."—"Without deciding the proposition, it may be said to be at least doubtful whether the statute was intended to cover transportation for immoralities other than those of a sexual nature"—for instance, a purpose of robbery or blackmail. Per Alachuler, J., in Griffith v. U. S., (C. C. A. 7th Cir. 1919) 261 Fed. 159, affirming a conviction, however, on a record abundantly showing that the purpose of the transportation was that of illicit sexual intercourse, even if this did not, under the record, amount to debauchery or prostitution within contemplation of the statute.

WITNESSES

Vol. IX, p. 1421, sec. 858. [First ed., 1909 Supp., p. 708.]

I. GENERAL CONSIDERATIONS (p. 1422)

Effect of amendment.—The amendment of this section by the Act of June 29, 1906, ch. 3608, applies to civil cases only. Adams v. U. S., (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1919) 259 Fed. 214, 170 C. C. A. 282.

Vol. IX, p. 1434. [Defendants in criminal cases may be witnesses.] [First ed., vol. VII, p. 1120.]

An instruction in the language of this section that defendant's failure to testify creates no presumption against him, is not error. Robilio v. U. S., (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1919) 259 Fed. 101, 170 C. C. A. 169.

Comment on failure to testify.—In Robilio v. U. S., (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1919) 259 Fed. 101, 170 C. C. A. 169, regarding comments on the defendant's failure to testify, the court said:

"The additional remarks of the court to the jury, to the effect that the situation created by the government's proofs remained 'unexplained,' as such remarks would naturally be applied to the facts of this case, and as they were interpreted by the response of the court when his attention was called thereto, did not constitute that 'comment' condemned in Wilson v. United States, 149 U. S. 60, 13 Sup. Ct. 765, 37 L. Ed. 650. See Stout v. United States, supra, 227 Fed. at page 804, 142 C. C. A. 323, and Shea v. United States (C. C. A. 6) 251 Fed. 440, 163 C. C. A. 458."

II. WHAT CONSTITUTES INTERSTATE AND FOREIGN COMMERCE

3. Particular Transactions

a. Transportation of Persons and Property

- (1) In General (p. 435)

Transmission of electric current.—The transportation or transmission of electric current from state to state through appropriate instrumentalities is "commerce" between the states. Moreover, the transportation or transmission of electric current direct from the seller in one state to the consumer in another, for immediate or practically immediate use, subject only to a temporary stop en route for the purpose of reducing the current to a commercial voltage, remains "interstate commerce" until the commodity has reached its goal, unless theretofore sold to independent distributing companies in the latter state for resale to local consumers. Mill Creek Coal, etc., Co. v. Public Service.

Commission, (W. Va. 1919) 100 S. E. 557, 7 A. L. R. 1081.

(5) Local Part of Interstate Shipment
(p. 436)

In determining when commerce ceases to be interstate and becomes intrastate, the essential character of unity of the movement is decisive. Mill Creek Coal, etc., Co. v. Public Service Commission, (W. Va.) 1919) 100 S. E. 557, 7 A. L. R. 1081.

(10) Accommodations for Passengers of Different Races (p. 438)

A Kentucky street railway may be required by a statute of that state to furnish either separate cars or separate compartments in the same car for white and negro passengers, although its principal business is the carriage of passengers in interstate commerce between Cincinnati, Ohio, and Kentucky cities across the Ohio river. Such a requirement affects interstate commerce only incidentally, and does not subject it to unreasonable demands. South Covington, etc., St. R. Co. v. Kentucky, (1920) 252 U. S. 399, 40 S. Ct. 378, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) — (affirming (1918) 181 Ky. 449, 205 S. W. 603), wherein the court said: "There was a distinct operation in Kentucky, an operation authorized and required by the charters of the companies, and it is that operation the act in question regulates, and does no more, and therefore is not a regulation of interstate commerce. This is the effect of the ruling in South Covington & C. Street R. Co. v. Covington, 235 U. S. 537, 59 L. ed. 350, L. R. A. 1915F, 792, P. U. R. 1915A, 231, 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 158. The regulation of the act affects interstate business incidentally, and does not subject it to unreasonable demands.

"The cited case points out the equal necessity, under our system of government, to preserve the power of the states within their sovereignties as to prevent the power from intrusive exercise within the national sovereignty, and an interurban railroad company deriving its powers from the state, and subject to obligations under the law of the state, should not be permitted to exercise the powers given by the state, and escape its obligations to the state, under the circumstances presented by this record, by running its coaches beyond the state lines. But we need not extend the discussion. The cited case expresses the principle of decision, and marks the limitation upon the power of a state, and when its legislation is or is not an interference with interstate commerce. And regarding its principle, we think, as we have said, the act in controversy does not transcend that limitation."

Interstate traffic over a Kentucky interurban electric railway may be subjected to the operation of a statute of that state requiring separate coaches, or separate compartments in the same coach, for white and negro passengers, without unlawfully interfering with interstate commerce. Cincinnati, etc., R. Co. v. Kentucky, (1920) 252 U. S.

408, 40 S. Ct. 381, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (1918) 181 Ky. 449, 205 S. W. 603.

g. Manufacture and Sale of Goods

(1) In General (p. 442)

Where a company maintains its principal office within a state, and most of officers reside there, and the greater proportion of its business is transacted therein, it must be regarded as engaged in intrastate commerce, at least as to the business transacted within the state, and subject to a state tax thereon. Hayes Wheel Co. v. American Distributing Co., (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1919) 257 Fed. 881, 169 C. C. A. 31. In determining this question the court said:

"We are thus brought to the ultimately controlling question whether, as plaintiff urgently insists is the case, its business was solely interstate commerce, the local business being merely incidental thereto, or whether, on the other hand, plaintiff was engaged locally in both state and interstate commerce. In the former case it would not be subject to the tax; in the latter, it would be.

"Plaintiff's business embraced sales largely by way of orders taken by traveling solicitors from automobile manufacturers in several states lying generally, if not universally, north of the Ohio and east of the Mississippi rivers. Plaintiff seems to have had no office, at least for commercial business, anywhere except at Jackson, Mich. There its books and records of commercial transactions were kept; there a majority at least of its officers resided, and at or from that point all of its business seems to have been directed and conducted, excepting so far as concerns actual solicitation of orders by traveling salesmen. The business of at least one of these salesmen was confined to Michigan. Plaintiff was acting under similar contracts as sales agent for several manufacturers of automobile parts, other than defendant. So far as the record shows, all its tangible property was in Michigan. That state was and is the most prominent of the automobile manufacturing states.

"During the five-year contract period plaintiff's sales in Michigan amounted to 61.2 per cent. of its total sales, and for the last 1½ years of that period the Michigan sales were about 75 or 80 per cent. of the aggregate business. While the proportion of Michigan business increased during the contract period, and the proportion when the contract was made does not definitely appear, the natural inference from the record and the arguments would be, we think, that the Michigan sales were from the first approximately at least one-half of the total sales. Plaintiff's declaration, made September 29, 1913, for authority to do business in Michigan, gave the location of its principal office and of its principal place of business as Jackson, Mich., and two of its three officers as residing there, and the third as living at Detroit, Mich. Its authorized capital stock was reported at $4,000 [under the statute in question the tax would have been $25]; the total value of its property owned and used in its business as $23,538.98, all of which, with the exception of furniture and fixtures, represented cash and accounts and bills receivable. The value of the property owned and used in Michigan was given as 'furniture and fixtures $294.96,' the total amount of business transacted during the preceding year was stated (in the sixth item) to be $42,893.98, and the amount transacted in Michigan as 'all, as specified in sixth item.'

"It is difficult, if not impossible, to distinguish plaintiff's business in principle from that of the ordinary domestic mercantile corporation selling at wholesale, both in the state of its creation and business location as well as in other states. Assuming, as we do, for the purposes at least of this opinion, that plaintiff's business, so far as it related to business outside of Michigan, was in interstate commerce, it yet seems plain to us, not only that, independently of the question whether plaintiff's business was local or interstate, it was doing business in Michigan, and so within the statute of that state if it was doing a substantial Michigan business (International Text-Book Co. v. Pigg, supra, 217 U. S. at pages 104, 105, 30 Sup. Ct. 481, 54 L. Ed. 678, 27 L. R. A. [N. S.] 493, 18 Ann. Cas. 1103), but also that it was in fact doing a substantial local business in Michigan within the meaning of the law of interstate commerce. We think it a misnomer to characterize its business as essentially interstate. In our opinion it had a substantial local and domestic business, entirely separate from, and not merely incidental to, its interstate business. Baltic Mining Co. v. Massachusetts, supra, at page 86, 34 Sup. Ct. 15, 58 L. Ed. 127; Nernst Lamp Co. v. Conrad, supra; Lange v. Brace, supra, at page 462, 152 N. W. 1026; American, etc., Co. v. Griswold, 143 App. Div. 807, 128 N. Y. Supp. 208, affirmed 206 N. Y. 723, 100 N. E. 1124; Flint v. LeHeup, supra, at page 47, 165 N. W. 626; Loomis v. Construction Co. (C. C. A. 6) 211 Fed. 453, 456, 128 C. C. A. 125, and cases cited."

(3) Sale of Goods After Arrival in State

(a) In General (p. 445)

Auto trucks consigned to selling agents in another state to be sold direct by such consignees from their storage warehouses are after reaching such storehouses not a part of interstate commerce though incidentally used for demonstration purposes. Bethlehem Motors Corp. v. Flynt, (1919) 178 N. C. 399, 100 S. E. 693, wherein the court said: "Under such circumstances, the goods, after reaching the storage warehouse in this state, were not in interstate commerce. Sewing Machine Co. v. Brickell, 233 U. S. 304. Again, where coal was mined in Pennsylvania and sent by water to New Orleans, and sold on the open market on account of the mine owners in Pennsylvania; or even if the coal was not landed in New Orleans, but was sold and transferred there to another vessel bound to a foreign port, the coal was intermingled with property in Louisiana and the sale was not an interstate transaction. Brown v. Houston, 114 U. S. 622. There was no error in the exception that the judge did not find that this was interstate commerce."

III. EXCLUSIVENESS OF POWER

2. When State May Exercise Power

b. Police Power of the States

(1) In General (p. 451)

Prevention of fraud by use of trade name or good will of another.—A state may, in the exercise of its police power, prevent fraud upon its citizens by the use of the trade-name or good will of another, even though that trade-name and good will is attached to an article which prior to its being brought into this state for distribution has been a subject of interstate commerce. Ingersoll v. Hahne, (N. J. 1918) 108 Atl. 128.

d. Effect of Non-Action by Congress

(1) National Subjects to be Unobstructed by State Action (p. 459)

To the same effect as the original annotation, see Mill Creek Coal, etc., Co. v. Public Service Commission, (W. Va. 1919) 100 S. E. 557, 7 A. L. R. 1081.

(2) Local Subjects May Be Regulated by State Action (p. 460)

The regulation of the rates at which electric current transported or transmitted from one state to another shall be sold in the latter state is, so long as the rate fixed is not confiscatory or discriminatory against citizens of another state, a matter essentially local in its nature, and not of such national importance as to require a general system and uniformity of regulation. Mill Creek Coal, etc., Co. v. Public Service Commission, (W. Va. 1919) 100 S. E. 557, 7 A. L. R. 1081.

IV. POWER OF CONGRESS

16. Subjects of Regulation

g. Bridges

(2) Power to Construct or Authorize Construction (p. 490)

The concurrence and consent of the states.—To the same effect as the original annotation, see People v. Hudson River Connecting R. Corp., (1920) 228 N. Y. 203, 126 N. E. 801, wherein the court said:

"It is a comprehensive clause, including within its intent the instruments and means by which interstate commerce is or may be carried on, even if those means or instruments are such as are inherently within a single state, such as the wharf of a transatlantic line, or the tracks over which pass trains en route from state to state, or the engine used to draw those trains, be it used for ever so short a haul within the state, and if this authority extends to the tracks and the engine, though used wholly within the state, surely it also includes bridges over which both of these pass, and this is particularly true if that bridge cross a navigable stream, the first great recognized instrument of interstate commerce. Erie R. Co. v. New York, 233 U. S. 671, 34 Sup. Ct. 756, 58 L. Ed. 1149, 52 L. R. A. (N. S.) 266, Ann. Cas. 1915D, 138; Pennsylvania v. Wheeling & Belmont Bridge Co., 18 How. 421, 15 L. Ed. 435. The bridge in question, it is conceded, will be used for interstate commerce.

"The Constitution containing the authority, and the power of Congress being plenary, it only remains to consider whether in the instant case Congress has acted in authorizing this bridge, and by its action has excluded any further or other action by the state. An answer in the affirmative is conclusive."

IX. POWER OF STATES

2. State and Municipal Legislation Affecting Commerce

c. Discrimination Against Foreign Products

(1) In General (p. 522)

License tax.—A state statute imposing license taxes on the manufacturer or other person engaged in the business of selling automobiles in the state and reducing the rate if three-fourths of the entire assets of the manufacturer were invested and returned for taxes within the state, is not in violation of the interstate commerce clause. Bethlehem Motors Corp. v. Flynt, (1919) 178 N. C. 399, 100 S. E. 693.

d. Inspection Laws

(3) Inspection Fees (p. 530)

Gasoline.—See infra, p. 827, for a discussion of the question whether the taxing by a state of the business of selling gasoline is valid.

e. Quarantine and Health Laws

(6) Against Diseased Animals (p. 536)

Prohibiting importation of sheep from certain localities.—A state statute forbidding the importation of sheep from a state which has been designated by proclamation as a place where epidemic disease of sheep exists, is not invalid as an attempt to regulate interstate commerce. Ex p. Goddard, (Nev. 1920) 190 Pac. 916.

g. Telegraph and Telephone Companies

(7) "Mental Anguish" Statute (p. 584)

A telegraph company accepting a telegram to be transmitted between points in this state, where a recovery for mental anguish is allowed, may not avoid such liability under the federal decisions by unnecessarily sending the message through another state, when it could have reasonably been otherwise transmitted. Speight v. Western Union Tel. Co., (1919) 178 N. C. 146, 100 S. E. 351.

j. Ferries

(3) Exclusive Grant of Ferry (p. 604)

A town ordinance granting to a certain party an exclusive franchise to operate an interstate ferry, and penalizing all others who engage in the operation of a similar ferry, is void as being in violation of this article. Long v. Miller, (C. C. A. 5th Cir. 1919) 262 Fed. 362.

g1. Natural Gas

(2) Regulation of Rates (p. 646)

Until Congress acts under its superior authority by regulating the subject-matter for itself, the regulation by a state public service commission of rates for natural gas transmitted directly from the source of supply outside the state to local consumers in municipalities within the state does not offend against the commerce clause of the Constitution. Pennsylvania Gas Co. v. Public Service Commission, (1920) 252 U. S. 23, 40 S. Ct. 279, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) — (affirming (1919) 225 N. Y. 397, 122 N. E. 260), wherein the court said:

"The Federal question presented for our consideration involves the correctness of the contention of the plaintiff in error that the authority undertaken to be exercised by the Commission, and sustained by the court, was an attempt, under state authority, to regulate interstate commerce, and violative of the constitutional power granted to Congress over commerce among the states. The facts are undisputed. The plaintiff in error, the Pennsylvania Gas Company, is a corporation organized under the laws of the state of Pennsylvania, and engaged in transmitting and selling natural gas in the state of New York and Pennsylvania. It transports the gas by pipe lines about 50 miles in length from the source of supply in the state of Pennsylvania into the state of New York. It sells and delivers gas to consumers in the city of Jamestown, in the town of Endicott, and in the village of Falconer, all in Chautauqua county, New York. It also sells and delivers natural gas to consumers in the cities of Warren, Corry, and Erie, in Pennsylvania.

"We think that the transmission and sale of natural gas produced in one state, transported by means of pipe lines, and directly furnished to consumers in another state, is interstate commerce within the principles of the cases already determined by this court. West v. Kansas Natural Gas Co., 221 U. S. 229, 55 L. ed. 716, 35 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1193, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 564; Haskell v. Kansas Natural Gas Co., 224 U. S. 217, 56 L. ed. 738, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 442; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Foster, 247 U. S. 105, 62 L. ed. 1006, 1 A. L. R. 1278, P. U. R. 1918D, 865, 38 Sup. Ct. Rep. 438.

"This case differs from Public Utilities Commission v. Landon, 249 U. S. 236, 63 L. ed. 577, P. U. R. 1919C, 834, 30 Sup. Ct. Rep. 268, wherein we dealt with the piping of natural gas from one state to another, and its sale to independent local gas companies in the receiving state, and held that the retailing of gas by the local companies to their consumers was intrastate commerce, and not a continuation of interstate commerce, although the mains of the local companies receiving and distributing the gas to local consumers were connected permanently with those of the transmitting company. Under the circumstances set forth in that case we held that the interstate movement ended when the gas passed into the local mains; that the rates to be charged by the local companies had but an indirect effect upon interstate commerce, and, therefore, the matter was subject to local regulation.

"In the instant case the gas is transmitted directly from the source of supply in Pennsylvania to the consumers in the cities and towns of New York and Pennsylvania, above mentioned. Its transmission is direct, and without intervention of any sort between the seller and the buyer. The transmission is continuous and single, and is, in our opinion, a transmission in interstate commerce, and therefore subject to applicable constitutional limitations which govern the states in dealing with matters of the character of the one now before us.

"The general principle is well established and often asserted in the decisions of this court that the state may not directly regulate or burden interstate commerce. That subject, so far as legislative regulation is concerned, has been committed by the Constitution to the control of the Federal Congress. But while admitting this general principle, it, like others of a general nature, is subject to qualifications not inconsistent with the general rule, which now are as well established as the principle itself."

xI. State Taxation

(1) In General (p. 657)

Special assessment upon railway right of way.—A special assessment for a local drain upon a railway right of way if benefited is not violative of the commerce clause. Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Sargent County, (N. D. 1919) 174 N. W. 811, following Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Richland County, (1914) 28 N. D. 172, 148 N. W. 545, Ann. Cas. 1916E 574, L. R. A. 1915A 129.

(2) Separation of Interstate from Intrastate Commerce (p. 657)

To same effect as original annotation, see Hayes Wheel Co. v. American Distributing Co., (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1919) 257 Fed. 881, 169 C. C. A. 31. In passing upon this question, the court said:

"Does the Michigan statute impose or attempt to impose a tax upon all the capital of a foreign corporation whether employed in state or interstate commerce, or to tax property permanently without the state, or to impose a fee upon its business done in the state, without distinction between state and interstate? It seems to us clear that it neither does nor attempts to do either of these things. The language of the statute indicates, in our opinion, an intention to assess the franchise fee only upon domestic business, which is assumed to be capable of separation from interstate business. The tax is in terms limited to a percentage of 'the proportion of its authorized capital stock represented by the property owned and used and business transacted in Michigan, determined as above provided.' The secretary of state is to determine this proportion, not arbitrarily, as plaintiff charges, but 'from the papers so filed and the facts so reported [by the corporation] and any other facts coming to his knowledge bearing upon the question.' Nor is the corporation without remedy against unrestrained or mistaken determination of what such proportion amounts to, neither is it subject to the employment of secret or private information in reaching such determination. It is not only expressly given 'the right, on application, to be heard by the secretary of state touching the matter of the determination of the proportion of its capital stock represented by property used and business done in Michigan,' but, if dissatisfied with the result, it is in terms given the right of appeal to a 'board of appeal consisting of the auditor general, state treasurer and attorney general.' Due provision is thus, in our opinion, made for separating state from interstate business."

Gasoline.—A state tax which is in effect a privilege tax upon the business of selling gasoline in the tank cars or other original packages in which the gasoline was brought into the state, and which provides for the levy of fees in excess of the cost of inspection, is invalid, as amounting to a direct burden on interstate commerce. But the business of selling gasoline at retail in quantities to suit customers, but not in the original packages, is properly taxable by the laws of the state, although the state itself producing no gasoline, it must of necessity have been brought into the state in interstate commerce. Askren v. Continental Oil Co., (1920) 252 U. S. 444, 40 S. Ct. 355, 84 U. S. (L. ed.) —, wherein the court said:

"Plaintiffs are engaged in the business of buying and selling gasoline and other petroleum products. The bill states that they purchase gasoline in the state of Colorado, California, Oklahoma, Texas and Kansas, and ship it into the state of New Mexico, there to be sold and delivered. The bill describes two classes of business:

"First, that it purchases in the states mentioned, or in some one of said states, gasoline, and ships it in tank cars from the state in which purchased into the state of New Mexico, and there, according to its custom and the ordinary method in the conduct of its business, it sells in tank cars the whole of the contents thereof to a single customer, before the package or packages in which the gasoline was shipped have been broken. In the usual and regular course of its business it purchases gasoline in one of the states, other than the state of New Mexico, and ships it, so purchased from that state, in barrels and packages containing not less than two 5-gallon cans into the state of New Mexico, and there, in the usual and ordinary course of its business, without breaking the barrels and packages, containing the cans, it is its custom to sell the gasoline in the original packages and barrels. The gasoline is sold and delivered to the customers in precisely the same form and condition as when received in the state of New Mexico; that this manner of sale makes the plaintiffs distributors of gasoline as the term is defined in the statute, and they are required to pay the sum of $50 per annum for each of their stations as an annual license tax for purchasing, shipping and selling gasoline as aforesaid.

"A second method of dealing in gasoline is described in the bill: That the gasoline shipped to the plaintiffs from the other states, as aforesaid, is in tank cars, and plaintiff, or plaintiffs, sell such gasoline from such tank cars, barrels and packages in such quantities as the purchaser requires.

"As to the gasoline brought into the state in the tank cars, or in the original packages and so sold, we are unable to discover any difference in plan of importation and sale between the instant case and that before us in Standard Oil Co. v. Graves, 249 U. S. 389, 39 Sup. Ct. 320, 63 L. Ed. 662, in which we held that a tax, which was in effect a privilege tax, as is the one under consideration, providing for a levy of fees in excess of the cost of inspection, amounted to a direct burden on interstate commerce. In that case we reaffirmed, what had often been adjudicated heretofore in this court, that the direct and necessary effect of such legislation was to impose a burden upon interstate commerce; that under the Federal Constitution the importer of such products from another state into his own state for sale in the original packages, had a right to sell the same in such packages without being taxed for the privilege by taxation of the sort here involved. Upon this branch of the case we deem it only necessary to refer to that case, and the cases therein cited, as establishing the proposition that the license tax upon the sale of gasoline brought into the state in tank cars, or original packages, and thus sold, is beyond the taxing power of the state.

"The plaintiffs state in the bills that their business in part consists in selling gasoline in retail in quantities to suit purchasers. A business of this sort, although the gasoline was brought into the state in interstate commerce, is properly taxable by the laws of the state.

"Much is made of the fact that New Mexico does not produce gasoline, and all of it that is dealt in within that state must be brought in from other states. But, so long as there is no discrimination against the products of another state, and none is shown from the mere fact that the gasoline is produced in another state, the gasoline thus stored and dealt in is not beyond the taxing power of the state. W. F. Wagner & Sons v. City of Covington, 251 U. S. 95, 40 Sup. Ct. 93, 64 L. Ed. —, decided by this court December 8, 1919, and the cases from this court cited therein.

"Sales of the class last mentioned would be a subject of taxation within the legitimate power of the state. But from the averments of the bills it is impossible to determine the relative importance of this part of the business as compared with that which is non-taxable, and at this preliminary stage of the cases we will not go into the question whether the act is separable, and capable of being sustained so far as it imposes a tax upon business legitimately taxable. That question may be reserved for the final hearing. The District Court did not err in granting the temporary injunctions."

(4) Transportation, Telegraph, and Telephone Companies

(b) Tax on Instrumentalities of Commerce as Property

aa. In General (p. 667)

Bridge.—A bridge belonging to an interstate electric railway company and the appurtenances thereof are taxable by the state in which it is situated. State v. St. Louis, etc., Electric R. Co., (Mo. 1919) 216 S. W. 763.

(10) Privilege Taxes on Foreign Corporations (p. 698)

A tax in the form of a two per cent tax on the net income of corporations whether domestic or foreign carrying on business in the state, the net income taxed being that on which the corporation is required to pay a tax to the United States, is a privilege tax and not, as applied to a foreign corporation, in violation of the commerce clause of the Constitution. Underwood Typewriter Co. v. Chamberlain, (Conn. 1919) 108 Atl. 154, wherein the court said: "The fact that the tax is measured by a percentage of net income, or in the case of a corporation engaged in interstate commerce by a percentage of a part of its net income proportioned to the amount of its tangible property in this state, does not, of course, prevent it from being an excise or privilege tax. The next question is whether the tax, regarded as an excise or privilege tax, is, in its application to the plaintiff corporation, an unlawful restraint on interstate commerce. This question appears to us to have been answered in the negative by the recent case of United States Glue Co. v. Oak Creek, 247 U. S. 321, 38 Sup. Ct. 499, 62 L. Ed. 1135, Ann. Cas. 1918E 748, wherein the Supreme Court took occasion to point out some of the things which a state might lawfully do in levying taxes on the net incomes of corporation engaged in interstate commerce. We quote from page 326 of 247 U. S. (38 Sup. Ct. 500, 62 L. Ed. 1135, Ann. Cas. 1918E 748):

'But property in a state belonging to a corporation, whether foreign or domestic, engaged in foreign or interstate commerce, may be taxed, or a tax may be imposed on the corporation on account of its property within a state, and may take the form of a tax for the privilege of exercising its franchises within the state, if the ascertainment of the amount is 'made dependent in fact on the value of its property situated within the state (the exaction, therefore, not being susceptible of exceeding the sum which might be leviable directly thereon), and if payment be not made a condition precedent to the right to carry on business, but its enforcement left to the ordinary means devised for the collection of taxes.' And again (247 U. S. on pages 328, 329, 38 Sup. Ct. 501, 62 L. Ed. 1135, Ann. Cas. 1918E 748): 'A tax upon gross receipts affects each transaction in proportion to its magnitude and irrespective of whether it is profitable or otherwise. Conceivably it may be sufficient to make the difference between profit and loss, or to so diminish the profit as to impede or discourage the conduct of the commerce. A tax upon the net profits has not the same deterrent effect, since it does not arise at all unless a gain is shown over and above expenses and losses, and the tax cannot be heavy unless the profits are large. Such a tax, when imposed upon net incomes from whatever source arising, is but a method of distributing the cost of government, like a tax upon property, or upon franchises treated as property; and if there be no discrimination against interstate commerce, either in the admeasurement of the tax or in the means adopted for enforcing it, it constitutes one of the ordinary and general burdens of government, from which persons and corporations otherwise subject to the jurisdiction of the states are not exempted by the Federal Constitution because they happen to be engaged in commerce among the states.'

"The plaintiff contends that the Glue Company Case is authority for the taxation of net incomes of domestic corporations only. But this ignores the plain statement, above quoted, that a tax which is in form a tax for the privilege of exercising its franchises within the state may be levied upon a corporation, whether foreign or domestic, engaged in interstate commerce, if the ascertainment of its amount is made dependent in fact on the value of its property within the state, and if it does not exceed the sum which might be leviable directly thereon.

"Of course, no tax at all can be levied by any state which is in form or effect a direct tax on interstate commerce, and for the purposes of this case the significance of the quotation from pages 328 and 329 of the opinion is that the tax on net income—as distinguished from a tax on gross receipts, condemned in Oklahoma v. Wells Fargo Co., 223 U. S. 298, 32 Sup. Ct. 218, 56 L. Ed. 445, and in Levick Co. v. Pennsylvania, 245 U. S. 292, 38 Sup. Ct. 126, 62 L. Ed. 295—is not in form or effect a direct tax on interstate commerce. It is therefore a tax which a state may assess against persons or corporations engaged in interstate commerce, provided it keeps within its jurisdiction in other respects and within the limitations noted in the opinion.

"As we read the opinion in the Glue Company Case, it decides that within the limitation stated a state may tax the entire net income of a domestic corporation engaged in interstate commerce; and it points out as a logical consequence of this decision that a state may, under the form of a privilege tax, tax some fractional part of the net income of a foreign corporation engaged in interstate commerce, provided that the apportionment is made dependent in fact on the value of its property situated within the state, that the amount of the tax is not excessive regarded as a tax on property within the state, and that there is no discrimination against interstate commerce in the admeasurement or enforcement of the tax. The tax in question complies with every requisite pointed out."

(15) Tax on Merchants and Peddlers (p. 703)

Tax on wholesalers of soft drinks.—A nonresident manufacturer of "soft drinks" doing a business in a municipality in the state which largely consists in carrying a supply of such drinks from one retailer's place of business to another's upon the vehicle in which the goods were brought across the state line, exposing them for sale, soliciting and negotiating sales, and immediately delivering the goods sold in the original unbroken cases, may be required to take out the license required of all wholesalers in soft drinks without infringing the commerce clause of the Federal Constitution. Wagner v. Covington, (1919) 251 U. S. 95, 40 S. Ct. 93, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) — (affirming (1917) 177 Ky. 385, 197 S. W. 806) wherein the court said:

"The trial court, and, on appeal, the court of appeals of Kentucky gave judgment for defendant, overruling the contention of plaintiffs that the ordinances as carried into effect against them were repugnant to the 'commerce clause' (art. 1, § 8) of the Constitution of the United States (177 Ky. 385, 197 S. W. 806), and upon this Federal question the case is brought here by writ of error.

"It is important to observe the precise point that we have to determine. It is indisputable that, with respect to the goods occasionally carried upon plaintiff's wagon from one state to the other, in response to orders previously received at their place of business in Cincinnati, plaintiffs are engaged in interstate commerce, not subject to the licensing power of the Kentucky municipality. The court of appeals in the present case, in line with its previous decisions in Newport v. Wagner, 168 Ky. 641, 646, 182 S. W. 834, Ann. Cas. 1917A, 962, and Newport v. French Bros. Bauer Co. 169 Ky. 174, 183 S. W. 532, recognizing the authority of the decisions of this court bearing upon the subject, conceded that this part of plaintiff's business was not subject to state regulation (177 Ky. 388). At the same time the court held that, with respect to the remaining and principal part of the business conducted in Covington, that which consists in carrying a supply of goods from place to place upon wagons, exposing them for sale, soliciting and negotiating sales, and immediately delivering the goods sold, plaintiffs were subject to the licensing ordinances; and it is with this alone that we have to deal. If, with respect to this portion of their business, plaintiffs may be subject to the regulatory power of the state, acting through the municipality, we are not concerned with the question whether the general language of the ordinances, if applied with respect to some other method of dealing with goods brought from state to state, might be repugnant to the Federal Constitution.

"From the facts recited it is evident that, in essence, that part of plaintiffs' business which is subjected to regulation is the business of itinerant vender or peddler,—a traveling from place to place within the state, selling goods that are carried about with the seller for the purpose. Plaintiffs in error insist that this view of the matter is untenable because the courts of Kentucky have held that sales made to a retail merchant for resale do not constitute peddling within the meaning of the statutes of that state. Standard Oil Co. v. Com., 107 Ky. 606, 609, 55 S. W. 8; Newport v. French Bros. Bauer Co., 169 Ky. 174, 185, 183 S. W. 532. These decisions, however, deal merely with a question of statutory definitions; and it hardly is necessary to repeat that when this court is called upon to test a state tax by the provisions of the Constitution of the United States, our decision must depend not upon the form of the taxing scheme, or any characterization of it adopted by the courts of the state, but rather by the practical operation and effect of the tax as applied and enforced. The state court could not render valid, by misdescribing it, a tax law which in substance and effect was repugnant to the Federal Constitution; neither can it render unconstitutional a tax that, in its actual effect, violates no constitutional provision, by inaccurately defining it. St. Louis Southwestern R. Co. v. Arkansas, 235 U. S. 350, 362, 59 L. ed. 265, 271, 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 99.

"We have, then, a state tax upon the business of an itinerant vender of goods as carried on within the state,—a tax applicable alike to all such dealers, irrespective of where their goods are manufactured, and without discrimination against goods manufactured in other states. It is settled by repeated decisions of this court that a license regulation or tax of this nature, imposed by a state with respect to the making of such sales of goods within its borders, is not to be deemed a regulation of or direct burden upon interstate commerce, although enforced impartially with respect to goods manufactured without as well as within the state, and does not conflict with the 'commerce clause.' Woodruff v. Parham, 8 Wall. 123, 140, 19 L. ed. 382, 387; Howe Mach. Co. v. Gage, 100 U. S. 676, 25 L. ed. 754; Emert v. Missouri, 156 U. S. 296, 39 L. ed. 430, 5 Inters. Com. Rep. 68, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 367; Baccus v. Louisiana, 232 U. S. 334, 58 L. ed. 627, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 439."

(39) Tax on Income from Interstate Business (p. 726)

A state income tax upon the net income of a nonresident from the business carried on by him in the state is not a burden on interstate commerce merely because the products of the business are shipped out of the state, since the tax, not being upon gross receipts, but only upon the net proceeds, is plainly sustainable even if it includes net gains from interstate commerce. Shaffer v. Carter, (1920) 252 U. S. 37, 40 S. Ct. 221, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, wherein the court said: "It is urged that, regarding the tax as imposed upon the business conducted within the state, it amounts in the case of appellant's business to a burden upon interstate commerce, because the products of his oil operations are shipped out of the state. Assuming that it fairly appears that his method of business constitutes interstate commerce, it is sufficient to say that the tax is imposed not upon the gross receipts, as in Crew Levick Co. v. Pennsylvania, 245 U. S. 292, 62 L. ed. 295, 38 Sup. Ct. Rep. 126, but only upon the net proceeds, and is plainly sustainable even if it includes net gains from interstate commerce. United States Glue Co. v. Oak Creek, 247 U. S. 321, 62 L. ed. 1135, 38 Sup. Ct. Rep. 499, Ann. Cas. 1918E, 748. Compare William E. Peck & Co. v. Lowe, 247 U. S. 165, 62 L. ed. 1049, 38 Sup. Ct. Rep. 432."

VI. EXCLUSIVENESS OF POWER OF CONGRESS

2. As to Weights and Measures (p. 767)

Power of state.—The establishment of a uniform system of weights and measures is within the police power of a state. Dwight, etc., Sintering Co. v. American Ore Reclamation Co., (C. C. A. 2d Cir. 1920) 263 Fed. 315.

III. EFFECT OF DECLARATION OF WAR

1. In General (p. 808)

Volstead Act extending wartime prohibition.—The implied war power of Congress over intoxicating liquors extends to the enactment of laws which will not merely prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors, but will effectually prevent their sale. Thus Congress, in the exercise of the war power, could, in order to make effective the existing war-time prohibition against the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors, enact the provisions of the Volstead Act of October 28, 1919 (see 1919 Supp. p. —), extending such prohibition to malt liquors, whether in fact intoxicating or not, with alcoholic content of as much as $\frac{1}{2}$ of 1 per cent of alcohol by volume. Ruppert v. Caffey, (1920) 251 U. S. 264, 40 S. Ct. 141, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —.

Soldiers' and Sailors' Civil Relief Act (Fed. Stat. Ann. 1918 Supp. p. 810) is within the war power of Congress. Kuehn v. Neugebauer, (Tex. Civ. App. 1919) 218 S. W. 259.

IX. STATE BOUNTIES TO DRAFTED OR RECRUITED MEN (p. 819)

A state bounty law does not violate this paragraph of the Federal Constitution. State v. Johnson, (1919) 170 Wis. 218, 175 N. W. 589, 7 A. L. R. 1617. See also Gustafson v. Rhinow, (1920) 144 Minn. 415, 176 N. W. 903.

3. Taxation by States (p. 850)

Personal property on ceded land is not subject to state taxation. Concessions Co. v. Morris, (Wash. 1919) 186 Pac. 655.

Vol. X, p. 887, art. 1, sec. 9.

The sixteenth amendment (see vol. XI, p. 1110) qualifies this section on the subject of direct taxes by providing that "Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes on incomes, from whatever source derived, without . . . regard to any census or enumeration." But "incomes," as used in the sixteenth amendment does not include stock dividends and any taxation of them must be in accordance with this clause of sec. 9, and clause 3 of sec. 2 of art. 1. Eisner v. Macomber, (1920) 292 U. S. 189, 40 S. Ct. 189, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —.

V. CONTRACTS PROTECTED.

11. Contracts of States

b. Contracts for Purchase of Public Lands (p. 970)

A state land warrant is a contract giving a right to locate on land within the tract described in the warrant, despite the fact that the grant of the lands in question from the United States to the state was not formally complete when the warrant was issued. Rosenberg v. Bump, (Cal. App. 1919) 185 Pac. 218.

Statute creating state agency and investing it with authority to dispose of public lands as "contract."—A statute creating a state agency and investing it with authority to dispose of public lands is not a "contract" within the meaning of the clause forbidding the enactment of laws impairing the obligations of contracts. The only legislative grants that are protected by the clause forbidding the enactment of laws impairing the obligations of contracts are grants made to or for the benefit of individuals or private corporations, or grants on the faith of which and according to the terms of which an individual or private corporation has acquired title. Atchafalaya-Land Co. v. F. B. Williams Cypress Co., (1920) 146 La. 1047, 84 So. 361.

12. Contracts of Municipal Corporations

a. In General (p. 979)

A reservation of trees in a deed to a county of land for highway purposes is a contract which cannot be impaired by a city which took the highway over from the county, though the trees interfered with the drainage of the highway and prevented desired improvement thereof. Hill v. Oxnard, (Cal. App. 1920) 189 Pac. 825.

13. Charters of Municipal and Public Corporations as Contracts

b. Municipal Corporations (p. 990)

Regulation of municipal waterworks.—Chapter 47, Laws 1919, which limits and restricts the application of the revenue derived by municipalities from public utilities, and authorizes the appointment of a receiver for a public utility upon the failure of the municipal authorities to comply with the statute, does not impair the obligation of a contract, contrary to the provisions of section 10, art. 1, of the Constitution of the United States, and section 19, art. 2, of the state. Dreyfus v. Socorro, (N. M. 1920) 189 Pac. 878.

14. Charters of Private Corporations as Contracts

h. Power to Amend Charters

(1) In General (p. 1004)

A statute which permits life insurance corporations to amend their charters and reorganize, but expressly preserves existing contracts in full force and effect, does not violate this section. Richards v. Security Mut. L. Ins. Co., (N. D. N. Y. 1919) 259 Fed. 727.

17. Of Railroad Companies

c. Municipal Control (p. 1042)

Paving portion of streets occupied by tracks.—The terms and conditions in a street railway franchise which require the street railway company under certain conditions to pave or pay for paving certain portions of occupied streets do not amount to a contract which prevents, on constitutional grounds, the imposition by the municipality upon a central strip in the highway owned in fee by the street railway company of its fair share, according to benefits, of the expense of paving such street. Oklahoma R. Co. v. Severns Pav. Co., (1919) 251 U. S. 104, 40 S. Ct. 73, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, modifying and affirming (Okla. 1918) 170 Pac. 216.

Sprinkling portion of streets occupied by streets and beyond.—The obligation of the contract right which a street railway company has under its franchises to operate its railway in the streets of a municipality is not impaired by an ordinance enacted in the exercise of the police power, requiring the street railway company to sprinkle the surface of the streets occupied by its railway between the rails and tracks, and for a sufficient distance beyond the outer rails, so as effectually to lay the dust and prevent the same from arising when the cars are in operation. Pacific Gas, etc., Co. v. Police Ct., (1919) 251 U. S. 22, 40 S. Ct. 79, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (1915) 28 Cal. App. 412, 152 Pac. 928.

Regulations affecting railroad track laid in public street.—"A railroad track laid in a public street, though by express public grant, is subject to such regulations as are reasonably necessary to secure the public safety; for this power "is inalienable even by express grant," and its legitimate exertion contravenes neither the contract clause of the Constitution nor the due process clause of the Fourteenth Amendment. . . . Of course, all regulations of this class are subject to judicial scrutiny, and when they are found to be plainly unreasonable and arbitrary must be pronounced invalid, as transcending that power and falling within the condemnation of one or both, as the case may be, of those constitutional restrictions." Denver & R. G. R. Co. v. Denver, 250 U. S. 241, 243, 39 Sup. Ct. 450, 451 (63 (L. Ed. 958)). Connecticut Co. v. Stamford, (Conn. 1920) 110 Atl. 554.

d. Regulation of Railroad Rates

(2) When Subject to Legislative or Municipal Control (p. 1047)

To the same effect as the original annotation, see Black v. New Orleans Ry., etc., Co., (1919) 145 La. 180, 82 So. 81.

Municipal ordinance regulating fares to certain persons.—A provision in a franchise ordinance enacted by a municipality requiring a street railway to transport certain classes of persons for half fare during certain hours, is not a contract within the meaning of this article, and may be annulled by an act of the state legislature. Dubuque Electric Co. v. Dubuque (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1919) 260 Fed. 353, 171 C. C. A. 219, following Pawhuska v. Pawhuska Oil, etc., Co., (1919) 250 U. S. 394, 39 S. Ct. 526, 63 U. S. (L. ed.) 1054.

(3) When Not Subject to Legislative or Municipal Control (p. 1049)

When a rate of fare that may be charged by a street railway company is fixed by positive agreement.—To same effect as original annotation, see Michigan R. Co. v. Lansing, (E. D. Mich. 1919) 260 Fed. 322, holding that a franchise granted by a municipality to a street railway was a contract, and that neither the state nor any of its agencies might impair the obligations of it.

h. Invalidating Relief Department Contracts (p. 1052)

The freedom of contract guaranteed by the Constitution is not infringed by the provisions of sections 9012, 9013, and 9014, Ohio General Code, which prohibit a corporation from compelling employees to join any association, from withholding any part of the wages or salary of employees for the payment of dues therein, from requiring either as a condition of securing employment or being employed, or from making an agreement with a person about to enter employment whereby he agrees to waive any right to damages against a railroad company thereafter arising for personal injury or death, or whereby he agrees to surrender or waive, in case he asserts such right, any other right. Baltimore, etc., R. Co. v. Bailey, (1919) 99 Ohio St. 312, 124 N. E. 195, wherein the court said:

"It is also contended that these statutes violate the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States. It is sufficient as to this to say that a similar contract was under investigation by the Supreme Court of the United States in C., B. & Q. R. Co. v. McGuire, 219 U. S. 549, 31 Sup. Ct. 259, 55 L. Ed. 328. McGuire was an employe of the company and a member of its relief association. After his injuries he accepted benefits to the extent of $822. In reference to the Iowa statute concerning relief associations, which is similar to the Ohio statute, the federal Supreme Court held in the McGuire Case that a state has power to prohibit contracts limiting liability for injuries, made in advance of the injuries received, and to provide that the subsequent acceptance of benefits under such contracts shall not constitute satisfaction of the claim for injuries received after the contract, and that such a statute does not impair the liberty of contract guaranteed by the Fourteenth Amendment."

18. Of Waterworks Companies

e. Regulation of Water Rates (p. 1059)

The state, as an attribute of sovereignty, is endowed with authority, in the appropriate exercise of the police power, to regulate the charges of public utilities. Regulation in such cases is not an unwarranted interference with the right of contract which the constitutional guaranty of the enjoyment of liberty includes. Private contracts, concerning property rights, are inviolable, but no obligation of a contract can extend to the defeat of legitimate governmental power. Contract rights which affect the public safety and welfare must yield to that which is essential to the general good. The legislature, in the exercise of the police power, is unrestricted by the provisions of contracts between individuals or corporations, or between individuals and municipal corporations. The state may decrease or increase the contract specified rates for public utility services as justice and reasonableness may require. Underlying such right of regulation is the fundamental doctrine that the utility for the adequate doing of that which it was chartered to do, should receive tolls sufficient to enable it to meet the exacted requirement. Rates should be neither so low as to deprive the utility of means of appropriately discharging duty nor so high as to unduly burden the public. Safe and efficient service, with substantial equality of treatment in like situations, is the essential. In re Guilford Water Co., (1919) 118 Me. 367, 108 Atl. 446.

Municipality when bound by rate fixed in contract with utility company.—While all contracts by municipalities or by individuals with a utility company for any service are presumed to be entered into with the understanding that the state may at any time regulate the service and the rates to be charged therefor, the state may by appropriate legislation suspend its authority to exercise its power of regulation, and authorize a municipality to enter into an inviolable contract with a utility company for a reasonable period fixing the rates to be charged by such utility for the public service, which contract will be protected against impairment under the Federal and State Constitutions. The surrender by the state of this important governmental function, however, must be in terms so clear and unequivocal as to admit of no doubt of the intent to surrender. General authority to contract is not sufficient. Express terms are required. All doubts must be resolved in favor of the state. Unless such surrender is made, the rates for any public service such as the supplying of water or other utility for public or domestic uses are just as fully subject to regulation by the state under its police powers, when fixed by mutual consent in a contract, as when summarily determined by the utility company itself. All contracts relating to the public service must be understood as made in contemplation of the possible exercise at any time by the state of this legitimate governmental power. The duty, once undertaken, to serve the public in a reasonable manner cannot be avoided by a contract. In re Searsport Water Co., (1919) 118 Me. 382, 108 Atl. 452.

Increase of franchise rates by the public service commission does not impair the obligation of a contract. Hillsboro v. Public Service Commission, (Ore. 1920) 187 Pac. 617.

19. Of Lighting Companies

a. In General (p. 1060)

Regulation of poles and wires by municipality.—The obligation of a municipal electric light and power franchise covering public and private uses, granted when the applicable statute then in force gave the municipality a qualified control over the erection of electric light and power appliances in the streets, was not impaired by subsequent legislation giving the municipality exclusive control, under which the light and power company, having removed and dismantled its street lighting system upon the expiration of a street lighting contract, may be restrained from erecting any poles or wires in the street until the consent of the municipality shall have been obtained, without prejudice to the company's right to maintain, repair, or replace such poles and wires as it is then using for commercial lighting. Hardin-Wyandot Lighting Co. v. Upper Sandusky, (1919) 251 U. S. 173, 40 S. Ct. 104, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (1916) 93 Ohio St. 428, 113 N. E. 402.

20. Of Telegraph and Telephone Companies

Relinquishment by state of right to exercise regulatory power.—"When a state, either directly or through the action of a municipality having express delegated authority so to do, has agreed to relinquish its right to exercise its regulatory power as to rates, or as to other matters prescribed by the contract, such agreement is reciprocal and binding only as between the parties to the agreement. Neither party to the contract can change it without the consent of the other; but the parties to such a contract may agree by mutual consent to change the contract, or to release each other entirely from the obligations of the contract. Winfield v. Public Service Commission, (1918) 187 Ind. 53, 118 N. E. 531. In making the contract the state, or the city, as the case may be, represents the public as against the person or corporation with which the contract is made; and, in agreeing to a change of the contract or to its complete rescission, the city, or the state, as the case may be, acts for the public and binds it as effectively in the one case as in the other. An agreement with a public utility by which the state relinquishes its regulatory power in certain particulars affecting the contractual right of such utility does not create any such obligation on the part of the state in favor of the public. So far as the rights of the public are concerned, the state retains all of its regulatory powers. By making the contract the state relinquishes its regulatory power only to the extent expressed in the contract, and only so far as such exercise would affect the rights of the other contracting party. In conformity to the principle thus stated, the Supreme Court of the United States, in the case of Worcester v. Street Railway, 196 U. S. 539, 25 Sup. Ct. 327, 49 L. Ed. 591, held that the Legislature had power to relieve the street car company from the obligation to pave the streets between its tracks and 18 inches on each side thereof, as provided in some of its grants, and, as provided by other grants, to pave the streets on which its lines were located from curb to curb. All of these grants were accepted by the street car company, and for the purpose of the opinion the court assumed that the city in making the grants had power to impose such conditions, and that when accepted the grant with the conditions contained therein became a binding contract between the city and company. It was held that the city acted in behalf of the public in making grants, and that the Legislature had a right, with the consent of the street car company, to modify or abrogate the conditions under which the locations in the streets had been granted after such conditions had been imposed by the city. In the opinion of the court it is said:

"These restrictions and conditions were of a public nature, imposed as a means of collecting from the railroad company part, or possibly the whole, of the expenses of paving or repaving the streets in which the tracks were laid, and that method of collection did not become an absolute property right in favor of the city, as against the right of the Legislature to alter or abolish it, or substitute some other method with the consent of the company, even though as to the company itself there might be a contract not alterable except with its consent."

"In accordance with the same principle, the courts also hold that all contracts made for services to be furnished by public utilities must be regarded as made in contemplation of the regulatory power of the state, and that, when the state exercises such power by changing rates or conditions of services, such change does not impair the obligations of existing contracts, although such contracts must yield to the changes so made." Central Union Telephone Co. v. Indianapolis Telephone Co., (Ind. 1920) 126 N. E. 628.

22. Of Banking Companies

a. In General (p. 1067)

Providing for reasonable examinations and reports.—The obligation of the state's undertaking in a special act incorporating a bank, that "the business of said bank shall be confided to and controlled by its stockholders under such rules of law and regulations as said company may see fit to adopt, provided the same be not in conflict with the Constitution of the United States or of this state," was not unconstitutionally impaired by the subsequent enactment of legislation providing for reasonable examinations and reports by duly authorized officers of the state banking department created by such legislation, and for the enforced annual contribution to the expenses of such department of 1/40 of 1 per cent of the bank's total assets. Oxford Bank v. Love, (1919) 250 U. S. 603, 40 S. Ct. 22, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (1916) 111 Miss. 699, 72 So. 133, 8 A. L. R. 894.

40. Marriage (p. 1095)

Divorce.—Each state has the right to prescribe the conditions upon which the marital relations of its own citizens shall be created and the causes for and manner in which, by its laws, those relations may be dissolved; and that right extends to women who, having married in other states and having left their husbands for lawful causes, have, in good faith, established here such separate domiciles as entitle them to citizenship; hence statutes authorizing constructive service upon nonresident defendants, making it a cause for divorce that a married person bringing the suit has resided in this state continuously for seven years or more and lived continuously separate and apart from his or her spouse during that period, are competent statutes, as not being repugnant to the constitutional provisions relating to the impairment of the obligations of contracts, the divestiture of vested rights, or due process of law. Lepenser v. Griffin, (1920) 146 La. 584, 83 So. 839.

VII. LAWS AFFECTING CONTRACTS

4. Sources of Laws Affecting Contracts

a. Constitutions and Statutes (p. 1107)

Resolution of board of trade.—A resolution of an incorporated board of trade impairing a contract has been held not to be invalid under this section on the ground that it was not a "law" as that term was used in the constitution. Thomson v. Thomson, (1920) 293 Ill. 584, 127 N. E. 882, wherein the court said:

"Is the resolution a law within the meaning of the constitutional declaration that no law impairing the obligation of contracts shall ever be made? This prohibition is directed against the law-making power—the legislative department of the government. It is not applicable to the decisions of the courts in the construction of contracts, or the application of general principles of law to contract relations or obligations.

"The prohibition is aimed at the legislative power of the state, and not at the decisions of its courts, or the acts of administrative or executive boards or officers, or the doings of corporations or individuals." New Orleans Waterworks Co. v. Louisiana Sugar Refining Co., 125 U. S. 18, 8 Sup. Ct. 741, 31 L. Ed. 607.

"Though the prohibition is against the making of a law, it is not essential that the enactment, to be within the prohibition of the Constitution, shall be a statute enacted by the Legislature or a constitutional provision adopted by the people. Any enactment of a governmental agency to which the force of law is given by the state may be regarded as a law within the territory in which it is so enforced. Williams v. Bruffy, 98 U. S. 176, 24 L. Ed. 716. So an act of the Confederate congress sequestrating the property and credits within states in rebellion of loyal citizens of the United States, which was enforced by the state of Virginia as a valid law, was held to be an infringement of the prohibition of the Federal Constitution against any state passing any law impairing the obligation of contracts. The prohibition reaches every form in which the legislative power of the state is exerted, whether constitution, constitutional amendment, enactment of the Legislature, ordinance of a municipal corporation, or a regulation of some other instrumentality of the state exercising delegated legislative authority. Ross v. Oregon, 227 U. S. 150, 33 Sup. Ct. 220, 57 L. Ed. 458, Ann. Cas. 1914C, 224. In Grand Trunk Western Railway Co. v. Railroad Com., 221 U. S. 400, 31 Sup. Ct. 537, 55 L. Ed. 786, an order of the Railroad Commission of Indiana for the installation of an interlocking plant was held to be a legislative act by an instrumentality of the state exercising delegated legislative authority, and so a law of the state within the meaning of the constitutional provision; and the same view was taken of a resolution of a board of county commissioners terminating a grant of the right to locate, construct, maintain, and operate an electric railroad along a state highway, without specifying any limit of time. Northern Ohio Traction Co. v. State of Ohio, 245 U. S. 574, 38 Sup. Ct. 196, 62 L. Ed. 481, L. R. A. 1918E, 865. These were all cases of action taken by some governmental instrumentality to which some part of the legislative power had been delegated by an act of the Legislature.

"No political or governmental power has been delegated to the Chicago Board of Trade. The voluntary association of individuals composing that body at the time its charter was granted by the Legislature was incorporated with the ordinary powers and privileges of private corporations, with authority to make such rules, regulations, and by-laws from time to time as they might think proper or necessary for the government of the corporation not contrary to the laws of the land, and to establish such rules, regulations, and by-laws for the management of their business and the mode in which it should be transacted as they might think proper. There was no grant of any legislative power. The Board of Trade is merely a voluntary organization, although incorporated under an act of the General Assembly. People v. Board of Trade, 80 Ill. 134. The grant of the power to adopt by-laws, rules, and regulations for the government of the corporation and the management of its business is no more than a recognition of the inherent and implied power, which is a necessary and inseparable incident of its existence. 1 Blackstone's Com. 476; 2 Kent's Com. 278; People v. Live Stock Exchange, 170 Ill. 556, 48 N. E. 1062, 39 L. R. A. 373, 62 Am. St. Rep. 404. The persons becoming members of the corporation have voluntarily submitted themselves to the operation of all laws enacted for its government and agreed to be bound by them so far as within the corporate authority. Board of Trade v. Nelson, 162 Ill. 431, 44 N. E. 743, 53 Am. St. Rep. 312. Whether the contracts in question, made by members of the corporation in their own names but really for the appellant, were affected by the resolution of the board of directors is not a question of construction of the Constitution. If the resolution was inoperative against the appellant its invalidity arose, not from any constitutional prohibition against its adoption, but because of the lack of power by the board of directors, under the general principles of law in relation to contracts, to adopt it."

VIII. WHAT CONSTITUTES IMPAIRMENT

1. In General (p. 1113)

Incompleted contract.—A statute that has the effect of violating or repudiating an incompleted contract previously made with the state does not impair the obligation of a contract. The obligation remains as before and forms the measure of the contractor's right to recover from the state the damages sustained. Hays v. Seattle, (1920) 251 U. S. 233, 40 S. Ct. 125, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (W. D. Wash. 1915) 226 Fed. 287.

Paving contract with street railway.—A municipal ordinance requiring a street railway company to bear the cost of paving with asphalt upon a concrete foundation, like the rest of a newly paved street, that part of such street which lies between the tracks and for a distance of one foot outside, does not, although theretofore the street had been paved from curb to curb with macadam, impair the obligation of the street railway company's franchise contract under which its duty extends to keeping "in good repair the roadway between the rails and for one foot on the outside of each rail as laid, and the space between the two inside rails of its double tracks with the same material as the city shall have last used to pave or repave these spaces and the street previous to such repairs," unless the railway company and the city shall agree upon some other material. Milwaukee Electric R., etc., Co. v. Wisconsin, (1920) 252 U. S. 100, 40 S. Ct. 306, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (1917) 166 Wis. 163, 164 N. W. 844.

Passage of law as of what time.—The contract clause of the Federal Constitution applies only to legislation subsequent in time to the contract alleged to have been impaired. Munday v. Wisconsin Trust Co., (1920) 252 U. S. 499, 40 S. Ct. 365, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (1918) 168 Wis. 31, 168 N. W. 393, 169 N. W. 612.

Judicial action.—The contract clause is aimed at legislative, not judicial action, and the overruling by an appellate court of a previous decision under which an oil lease has been secured does not impair the obligation of a contract. McCray v. Miller, (1920) 78 Okla. 16, 184 Pac. 781, 186 Pac. 1089.

Escheat Act.—A state statute is constitutional which provides for the escheating of abandoned or unclaimed property in the hands of the bailee or depositary. German-town Trust Co. v. Powell, (1919) 265 Pa. St. 71, 108 Atl. 441, wherein the court said:

"There seems to be no room for doubt that the commonwealth, by virtue of its sovereign power, may take charge of property abandoned or unclaimed for a period of time, or which has no known owner. Com. v.

Dollar Savings Bank, 259 Pa. 138, 145, 102 Atl. 569, 1 A. L. R. 1048, and cases cited. This right is not seriously disputed; it is contended, however, in the first place, that the act in question violates article I, § 17, of the Constitution of Pennsylvania, and article I, § 10, of the Constitution of the United States, by impairing the obligation of the contract between the owner of the property and the depositary; the theory being that upon money being deposited in a bank, a contract attaches between the depositor and the bank under which the latter is bound to return to the former, on demand, the amount of the deposit, and that the provisions in the act for the taking of money or other property after the expiration of a specified time, if the owner has not been heard from, amounts to a violation of this contract. The agreement of the bank or depositary, however, is merely to keep the money of the depositor until it is demanded by the owner, or his duly authorized representatives. It agrees to pay on demand. When demand is made the contractual relation ceases, there being no vested right to continue the contract in force thereafter, or for any definite time. If the depositor should die or make an assignment, his personal representative or assignee succeeds to his right to make demand for the money and the bank is in duty bound to make payment. A statute of escheat, in effect, simply provides for a termination of the contract of deposit, at the instance of the commonwealth and by virtue of its sovereign power, where there are no heirs to claim the property after the death of a person, or after the expiration of such reasonable time as may be fixed by law to raise a presumption of death. While the act requires the filing of certain reports for the information of the commonwealth a considerable time before an escheat is declared, this provision is reasonable and enables the commonwealth to follow up property as to which there is no apparent claim of ownership. The right of escheat has been recognized under the English law from the earliest times, and has also been the subject of continuous statutory regulation in Pennsylvania from colonial days; the latest general enactment on the subject being the act of May 2, 1889 (P. L. 66). The validity of these acts has been sustained without suggestion that their enforcement violates any contract between the owner of the property and the person or institution in whose hands the property was deposited or placed for keeping."

A state "moratorium" law was held unconstitutional as impairing the obligation of a leasing contract in the case of Granger v. Luther, (S. D. 1920) 176 N. W. 1019, wherein the court said: "Following the action of the states during the Civil War, certain states enacted 'moratorium' laws during the late war. Some of these laws were before the courts in Thress v. Zemple, (N. D.) 174 N. W. 85, Klonkel v. State, 168 Wis. 335, 170 N. W. 715, and Pierrard v.

Hoch, (Or.) 184 Pac. 494. An examination of these laws, as well as the federal law, discloses that they merely suspend the ordinary legal remedies. Not so with the law of this state. Section 1 exempts the beneficiaries under such law, until one year after the termination of the war or of service therein from any obligation to pay moneys due on any contract except life insurance policies. Section 2 provides that 'the . . . enforcement of any . . . right of entry . . . which may hereafter . . . arise during the continuance of the present war shall be suspended or stayed' during the period above mentioned. The other provisions of this law are not material to the present discussion. The two provisions above referred to are the only ones that can give any support to the decision of the trial court.

"We are of the opinion, in view of the remainder of section 2, that the above provision as to enforcement of 'right of entry' relates only to enforcement by action and therefore pertains only to legal proceedings brought against the beneficiary under such law. We therefore think it has no application to the facts of this case. But if we were to hold that it denied to a party the contracted right of entry—the only ground upon which respondent can deny appellant's right of possession of said land—then we are presented with the question as to whether the provisions of sections 1 and 2 above referred to impair the obligation of the contract entered into between respondent and appellant's grantor.

"That they do impair the obligation of this contract is perfectly apparent. As said by the court in Edmonson v. Ferguson, [11 Mo. 344]:

"If the General Assembly were to pass an act declaring . . . that a contract for the payment of any stipulated sum of money within one year . . . should not be due and payable for five years, it would be readily seen that the obligation of the contract was impaired—the contract would be lessened in value."

"Here by section 1, our lawmakers have attempted to extend the time for payment of money due under contract. If A. enters into a contract whereby he leases land to B., B.'s right of entry to come into existence and the term of the lease to commence upon a certain date, any law that would take from B. the right to enter on said land or defer the exercise of such right impairs A.'s obligation under such contract and thereby diminishes the value of such contract to B. Here, upon the happening of either one of two events, the lessor or his grantee had, under the contract entered into by respondent, the right to enter upon and take possession of said premises. Both events happened; respondent defaulted in payment of rent and the lessor sold the premises."

A statute reducing the revenue of a highway district does not impair the obligation of bonds previously issued unless it appears that the bondholders will thereby be defeated or postponed in their right to the payment of the bonds when due. Highway Dist. No. 1 v. Fremont County, (1919) 32 Idaho 473, 185 Pac. 66.

2. Imposing Conditions on Foreign Corporations (p. 1115)

Requiring withholding of tax on salaries of employees.—A foreign corporation doing business within the state and elsewhere has no just ground of complaint against a state income tax, in the absence of any contract limiting the state's power of regulation, by reason of being required to adjust its system of accounting and paying salaries and wages to the extent required to fulfill the duty of deducting and withholding the tax from that part of the salaries and wages of its non-resident employees which was earned by them within the state, although the corporation asserts that the statute impairs the obligation of contracts between it and its employees, there being no averment, however, that any such contract, made before the passage of the statute, required the wages or salaries to be paid in the state of incorporation, where it has its principal place of business, or contained other provisions in anywise conflicting with the withholding requirement. Travis v. Yale, etc., Mfg. Co., (1920) 252 U. S. 60, 40 S. Ct. 228, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (S. D. N. Y. 1919) 262 Fed. 576.

Where interstate commerce is not directly affected a state may forbid a foreign corporation from doing business or acquiring property within her borders unless a copy of the charter is filed with the secretary of state. Munday v. Wisconsin Trust Co., (1920) 252 U. S. 499, 40 S. Ct. 365, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (1918) 168 Wis. 31, 168 N. W. 393, 169 N. W. 612.

4. Statute of Limitations (p. 1116)

Rule stated.—A statute cannot, under the guise of merely changing the remedy for asserting a right or for enforcing an obligation, immediately take away the right or materially impair the means of enforcing the obligation. The test of validity of a statute of limitation, under that doctrine, is whether it allows a reasonable time for the assertion of the right or the enforcement of the obligation; and the legislature is primarily the judge of the reasonableness of the time allowed. Atchafalaya Land Co. v. F. B. Williams Cypress Co., (1920) 146 La. 1047, 84 So. 351.

Vol. XI, p. 5, art. 2, sec. 1.

Discretion of state as to manner of appointing electors.—Under this section the power of determining in what manner presidential electors shall be chosen and of prescribing the qualifications of the voters thereof is in the states. In re Opinion of Justices, (1919) 118 Me. 552, 107 Atl. 705, 5 A. L. R. 1407, wherein the court said: "The language of sec. 2 [sec. 1, cl. 2] is clear and unambiguous. It admits of no doubt as to where the constitutional power of appointment is vested, namely, in the several states. 'Each state shall appoint in such manner as the Legislature thereof may direct' are the significant words of the section, and their plain meaning is that each state is thereby clothed with the absolute power to appoint electors in such manner as it may see fit, without any interference or control on the part of the federal government, except, of course, in case of attempted discrimination as to race, color, or previous condition of servitude under the fifteenth amendment. The clause, 'in such manner as the Legislature thereof may direct,' means simply that the state shall give expression to its will, as it must, of necessity, through its law-making body, the Legislature. The will of the state in this respect must be voiced in legislative acts or resolves, which shall prescribe in detail the manner of choosing electors, the qualifications of voters therefor, and the proceedings on the part of the electors when chosen.

"But these acts and resolves must be passed and become effective in accordance with and in subjection to the Constitution of the state, like all other acts and resolves having the force of law. The Legislature was not given in this respect any superiority over or independence from the organic law of the state in force at the time when a given law is passed. Nor was it designated by the Federal Constitution as a mere agency or representative of the people to perform a certain act, as it was under article 5 in ratifying a federal amendment, a point more fully discussed in the answer to the question concerning the federal prohibitory amendment. It is simply the ordinary instrumentality of the state, the legislative branch of the government, the lawmaking power, to put into words the will of the state in connection with the choice of presidential electors. The distinction between the function and power of the Legislature in the case under consideration and its function and power as a particular body designated by the Federal Constitution to ratify or reject a federal amendment is sharp and clear and must be borne in mind.

"It follows, therefore, that under the provisions of the Federal Constitution the state by its legislative direction may establish such a method of choosing its presidential electors as it may see fit, and may change that method from time to time as it may deem advisable; but the legislative acts both of establishment and of change must always be subject to the provisions of the Constitution of the state in force at the time such acts are passed and can be valid and effective only when enacted in compliance therewith.

"In the exercise of the power thus conferred by the Federal Constitution, various methods of electing presidential electors were adopted in the early days by the several states, as set forth in detail in Mc-Pherson v. Blacker, 146 U. S. at pages 29 to 35, 13 Sup. Ct. 3, 36 L. Ed. 869."

VIII. Diminution of compensation.

VI. EXERCISE OF JUDICIAL FUNCTIONS BY OTHER DEPARTMENTS

2. Imposed on Executive and Administrative Officers

a. In General (p. 89)

Right of Congress to confer judicial powers.—"The judicial power granted by section 1, art. 3, of the Constitution of the United States, is the power to try the ten classes of cases specified in section 2 of that article; but said sections neither expressly nor impliedly prohibit the Congress from conferring judicial power upon other courts, or upon executive or other officers, in other cases, where, in its opinion, the devolution of such power is either necessary or convenient in the execution of the authority granted to the legislative or to the executive department of the government through the Constitution. The congressional power to make such grant and to vest such power in state courts and officers, in such cases, exists by virtue of the established rule that the grant of a power to accomplish an object is a grant of the authority to select and use the appropriate means to attain it. Levin v. United States, 128 Fed. 826, 63 C. C. A. 476." State v. Huser, (1919) 76 Okla. 130, 184 Pac. 113.

Congress is not prohibited from conferring judicial power upon other courts or other agencies as to cases not covered by the classes specified in section 2 of this article where the exercise of such power is deemed necessary and convenient in the execution of the authority granted to it by the Constitution. In re Jessie, (E. D. Okla. 1919) 259 Fed. 694.

VIII. DIMINUTION OF COMPENSATION (p. 93)

Income tax.—A federal district judge cannot, consistently with the provision that all federal judges shall, at stated times, receive for their services a compensation "which shall not be diminished during their continuance in office," be subjected to an income tax imposed in respect of his salary as such judge. Evans v. Gore, (1920) 253 U. S. 245, 40 S. Ct. 550, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, (reversing W. D. Ky. 1919) 262 Fed. 550) wherein the court said: "Apart from his salary, a Federal judge is as much within the taxing power as other men are. If he has a home or other property, it may be taxed just as if it belonged to another. If he has an income other than his salary, it also may be taxed in the same way. And, speaking generally, his duties and obligations as a citizen are not different from those of his neighbors. But for the common good—to render him, in the words of John Marshall, 'perfectly and completely independent, with nothing to influence or control him but God and his conscience'—his compensation is protected from diminution in any form, whether by a tax or otherwise, and is assured to him in its entirety for his support.

"The court below concluded that the compensation was not diminished, and regarded this as inferable from our decisions in William E. Peck & Co. v. Lowe, 247 U. S. 165, 174, 175, 62 L. ed. 1049, 1051, 1052, 38 Sup. Ct. Rep. 432, and United States Glue Co. v. Oak Creek, 247 U. S. 321, 329, 62 L. ed. 1135, 1141, 38 Sup. Ct. Rep. 499, Ann. Cas. 1918E, 748. We think neither case tends to support that view. Each related to a business—one to exportation, the other to interstate commerce—which the taxing power—of Congress in one case, of a state in the other—was restrained from directly burdening; and the holding in both was that an income tax was laid, not on the gross receipts, but on the net proceeds remaining after all expenses were paid and losses adjusted, did not directly burden the business, but only indirectly and remotely affected it. Here the Constitution expressly forbids diminution of the judge's compensation, meaning, as we have shown, diminution by taxation as well as otherwise. The taxing act directs that the compensation—the full sum, with no deduction for expenses—be included in computing the net income, on which the tax is laid. If the compensation be the only income, the tax falls on it alone; and, if there be other income, the inclusion of the compensation augments the tax accordingly. In either event the compensation suffers a diminution to the extent that it is taxed."

7. Power of state to legislate over maritime law.

c. State Workmen's Compensation Act.

VII. "OF ADMIRALTY AND MARITIME JURISDICTION."

6. Power of Congress to Legislate Over Maritime Law

a. In General (p. 120)

The Federal Constitution itself adopted and established, as part of the laws of the United States, approved rules of the general maritime law, and empowered Congress to legislate in respect of them and other matters within the admiralty and maritime jurisdiction. Moreover, it took from the states all power, by legislation or judicial decision, to contravene the essential purposes of, or to work material injury to, characteristic features of such law, or to interfere with its proper harmony and uniformity in its international and interstate relations. To preserve adequate harmony and appropriate uniform rules relating to maritime matters, and bring them within control of the federal government, was the fundamental purpose; and to such definite end Congress was empowered to legislate within that sphere. Knickerbocker Ice Co. v. Stewart, (1920) 253 U. S. 149, 40 S. Ct. 438, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, reversing (1919) 226 N. Y. 302, 123 N. E. 382.

The mere reservation of partially concurrent cognizance to state courts by an act of Congress conferring an otherwise exclusive admiralty jurisdiction upon the federal courts could not create substantive rights or obligations, nor indicate assent to their creation by the states. Knickerbocker Ice Co. v. Stewart, (1920) 253 U. S. 149, 40 S. Ct. 438, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, reversing (1919) 226 N. Y. 302, 123 N. E. 382.

T. Power of State to Legislate Over Maritime Law

c. State Workmen's Compensation Act (p. 124)

Congress exceeded its constitutional power to legislate concerning rights and liabilities within the maritime jurisdiction, and remedies for their enforcement, by attempting, as it did in the Act of October 6, 1917 (see 1918 Supp. p. 414), to permit the application of Workmen's Compensation Laws of the several states to injuries within the admiralty and maritime jurisdiction, thus virtually destroying the harmony and uniformity which the Constitution not only contemplated, but actually established. Knickerbocker Ice Co. v. Stewart, (1920) 253 U. S. 149, 40 S. Ct. 438, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, reversing (1919) 226 N. Y. 302, 123 N. E. 382. See to the same effect Sudden v. Industrial Acc. Commission, (Cal. 1920). 188 Pac. 803.

Vol. XI, p. 153, art. 3, sec. 2.

I. ORIGINAL JURISDICTION OF SUPREME COURT

2. "In Which a State Shall Be Party"

a. Limited to Cases Enumerated in Preamble Clause (p. 154)

A suit brought by a citizen against his own state without its consent is not drawn within the original jurisdiction of the Supreme Court by the provision conferring original jurisdiction upon that court in all cases in which a state shall be a party, since this clause merely distributes into original and appellate jurisdiction the jurisdiction previously conferred, and does not itself grant any new jurisdiction. Duhne v. New Jersey, (1920) 251 U. S. 311, 40 S. Ct. 154, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, wherein the court said: "But it has been long since settled that the whole sum of the judicial power granted by the Constitution to the United States does not embrace the authority to entertain a suit brought by a citizen against his own state without its consent. Hans v. Louisiana, 134 U. S. 1, 10 Sup. Ct. 504, 33 L. Ed. 842; North Carolina v. Temple, 134 U. S. 22, 10 Sup. Ct. 509, 33 L. Ed. 849; California v. Southern Pacific Co., 157 U. S. 229, 15 Sup. Ct. 591, 39 L. Ed. 683; Fitts v. McGhee, 172 U. S. 516, 524, 19 Sup. Ct. 269, 43 L. Ed. 535.

"It is urged, however, that although this may be the general rule, it is not true as to the original jurisdiction of this court, since the second clause of section 2, article 3, of the Constitution, confers original jurisdiction upon this court 'in all cases affecting ambassadors, other public ministers and consuls, and those in which a state shall be party. . . .' In other words, the argument is that the effect of the clause referred to is to divest every state of an essential attribute of its sovereignty by subjecting it without its consent to be used in every case if only the suit is originally brought in this court. Here again the error arises from treating the language of the clause as creative of jurisdiction instead of confining it to its merely distributive significance according to the rule long since announced as follows:

"This second clause distributes the jurisdiction conferred in the previous one into original and appellate jurisdiction, but does not profess to confer any. The original jurisdiction depends solely on the character of the parties, and is confined to the cases in which are those enumerated parties and those only." Louisiana v. Texas, 176 U. S. 1, 16, 20 Sup. Ct. 251, 256 (44 L. Ed. 347).

"That is to say, the fallacy of the contention consists in overlooking the fact that the distribution which the clause makes relates solely to the grounds of federal jurisdiction previously conferred and hence solely deals with cases in which the original jurisdiction of this court may be resorted to in the exercise of the judicial power as previously given. In fact, in view of the rule now so well settled as to be elementary, that the federal jurisdiction does not embrace the power to entertain a suit brought against a state without its consent, the contention now insisted upon comes to the proposition that the clause relied upon provides for the exercise by this court of original jurisdiction in a case where no federal judicial power is conferred."

To the same effect as the original annotation, see Bruce v. Ackroyd, (Conn. 1920) 110 Atl. 835, and see further, annotations to R. S. sec. 905 set out in this volume under the title EVIDENCE, ante, p. 505.

Original cause of action not maintainable in courts of state as ground for refusal to enforce foreign judgment entered in such cause.—The fact that the original cause of action could not have been maintained in the courts of a state is not an answer to a suit upon a judgment rendered by a court of another state. There a state statute providing that no action shall be brought or prosecuted in that state for damages occasioned by death occurring in another state in consequence of wrongful conduct contravenes the full faith and credit clause of the Federal Constitution when construed by the state courts as forbidding the maintenance of an action upon a judgment recovered in a court of another state, in conformity with the laws of that state, for negligently causing the death of plaintiff's intestate in that state. Kenney v. Supreme Lodge, etc., (1920) 252 U. S. 411, 40 S. Ct. 371, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) — (reversing (1918) 285 Ill. 188, 120 N. E. 631, 4 A. L. R. 964), wherein the court said: "In the court below and in the argument before us reliance was placed upon Anglo-American Provision Co. v. Davis Provision Co., No. 1, 191 U. S. 373, 24 Sup. Ct. 92, 48 L. Ed. 225, and language in Wisconsin v. Pelican Insurance Co., 127 U. S. 265, 8 Sup. Ct. 1370, 32 L. Ed. 239, the former as showing that the clause requiring full faith and credit to be given to judgments of other states does not require a state to furnish a court, and the latter as sanctioning an inquiry into the nature of the original cause of action in order to determine the jurisdiction of a court to enforce a foreign judgment founded upon it. But we are of opinion that the conclusion sought to be built upon these premises in the present case cannot be sustained. Davis Provision Co. v. Anglo-American Provision Co. was a suit by a foreign corporation on a foreign judgment against a foreign corporation. The decision is sufficiently explained without more by the views about foreign corporations that had prevailed unquestioned since Bank of Augusta v. Earle, 13 Pet. 579, 589-591, 10 L. Ed. 274; cited 191 U. S. 375, 24 Sup. Ct. 92, 48 L. Ed. 225. Moreover no doubt there is truth in the proposition that the Constitution does not require the state to furnish a court. But it also is true that there are limits to the power of exclusion and to the power to consider the nature of the cause of action before the foreign judgment based upon it is given effect.

"In Fauntleroy v. Lum, 210 U. S. 230, 28 Sup. Ct. 641, 52 L. Ed. 1039, it was held that the courts of Mississippi were bound to enforce a judgment rendered in Missouri upon a cause of action arising in Mississippi and illegal and void there. The policy of Mississippi was more actively contravened in that case than the policy of Illinois is in this. Therefore the fact that here the original cause of action could not have been maintained in Illinois is not an answer to a suit upon the judgment. See Christmas v. Russell, 5 Wall. 290, 18 L. Ed. 475; Converse v. Hamilton, 224 U. S. 243, 32 Sup. Ct. 415, 56 L. Ed. 749, Ann. Cas. 1913D, 1292. But this being true, it is plain that a state cannot escape its constitutional obligations by the simple device of denying jurisdiction in such cases to courts otherwise competent. The assumption that it could not do so was the basis of the decision in International Text Book Co. v. Pigg, 217 U. S. 91, 111, 112, 30 Sup. Ct. 481, 54 L. Ed. 678, 27 L. R. A. (N. S.) 493, 18 Ann. Cas. 1103, and the same principle was foreshadowed in General Oil Co. v. Crain, 209 U. S. 211, 216, 220, 228, 28 Sup. Ct. 475, 52 L. Ed. 754, and in Fauntleroy v. Lum, 210 U. S. 230, 235, 236, 28 Sup. Ct. 641, 52 L. Ed. 1039. See Keyser v. Lowell, 117 Fed. 400, 54 C. C. A. 674; Chambers v. Baltimore & Ohio R. Co., 207 U. S. 142, 148, 28 Sup. Ct. 34, 52 L. Ed. 143, and cases cited. Whether the Illinois statute should be construed as the Mississippi Act was construed in Fauntleroy v. Lum was for the Supreme Court of the state to decide, but read as that court read it, it attempted to achieve a result that the Constitution of the United States forbade.

"Some argument was based upon the fact that the statute of Alabama allowed an action to be maintained in a court of competent jurisdiction within the state "and not elsewhere." But when the cause of action is created the invalidity of attempts to limit the jurisdiction of other states to enforce it has been established by the decisions of this court. Tennessee Coal, Iron & R. R. Co. v. George, 233 U. S. 354, 34 Sup. Ct. 587, 58 L. Ed. 997, L. R. A. 1916D, 685; Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fé Ry. Co. v. Sowers, 213 U. S. 55, 29 Sup. Ct. 397, 53 L. Ed. 695. And had these decisions been otherwise they would not have imported that a judgment rendered exactly as required by the Alabama statute was not to have the respect due to other judgments of a sister state."

a. Want of Jurisdiction

(3) Facts Necessary to Give Jurisdiction (p. 202)

"The record of a judgment rendered in another state may be contradicted as to the facts necessary to give the court jurisdiction, and, if it be shown that such facts did not exist, the record will be a nullity, notwithstanding it may recite that they did exist; that want of jurisdiction may be shown either as to the subject-matter or the person." Pemberton v. Illinois Commercial Men's Assoc., (1919) 289 Ill. 99, 124 N. E. 355.

(6) Service of Process

(f) Service on Foreign Corporations (p. 205)

"It has also been settled by the federal decisions that three conditions are necessary to give a court jurisdiction in personam over a foreign corporation: first, it must appear that the corporation was carrying on its business in the state where process was served on its agent; second, that the business was transacted or managed by some agent or officer appointed by or representing the corporation in such state; third, the existence of some local law making such corporation amenable to suit there as a condition, express or implied, of doing business in the state. 21 R. C. L. 1340; Connecticut Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Spratley, 172 U. S. 602, 19 Sup. Ct. 308, 43 L. Ed. 569; Armstrong Co. v. New York Central & Hudson River Railroad Co., 129 Minn. 104, 151 N. W. 917, L. R. A. 1916E 232, Ann. Cas. 1916E 335. It is also established that in order to render a corporation amenable to service of process in a foreign jurisdiction it must appear that the corporation is transacting business in that district to such an extent as to subject it to the jurisdiction and laws thereof. St. Clair v. Cox, 106 U. S. 350, 1 Sup. Ct. 364, 27 L. Ed. 222; Commercial Mutual Accident Co. v. Davis, 213 U. S. 245, 29 Sup. Ct. 445, 53 L. Ed. 782, and cases there cited.

"The courts have laid down no all-embracing rule by which it may be determined what constitutes the doing of business by a foreign corporation in such manner as to make it subject to jurisdiction. In general it may be said that the business must be of such a character and extent as to warrant the inference that the corporation has subjected itself to the jurisdiction and laws of the district in which it is served and in which it is bound to appear when a proper agent has been served with process. 21 R. C. L. 1341; Green v. Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railway Co., 205 U. S. 530, 27 Sup. Ct. 595, 51 L. Ed. 916; St. Louis Southwestern Railway Co. v. Alexander, 227 U. S. 218, 33 Sup. Ct. 245, 57 L. Ed. 486, Ann. Cas. 1915B, 77. The transaction of business must be such that the corporation is for the time being within the state in which it is sued. Armstrong Co. v. New York Central & Hudson River Railroad Co., supra. The general rule is that the mere solicitation of business by agents of a foreign corporation is not such 'doing business' within the state as to subject the foreign corporation to the jurisdiction of the courts of the state in which the business is solicited. The tendency of the courts, however, in recent years, seems to be toward considering agents engaged in soliciting business as the representatives of the corporation for the purpose of the service of process. 21 R. C. L. 1342. The rule has been laid down by the United States Supreme Court that where there is a continuous course of business in the state by the solicitation of orders which are sent to another state, in response to which the subject-matter thereof is delivered in the state where the order was taken and payment is received therein by money, notes, or checks, this constitutes doing business in such state, rendering the corporation subject to the process of its courts. International Harvester Co. v. Kentucky, 234 U. S. 579, 34 Sup. Ct. 944, 58 L. Ed. 1479. But so far as we are advised the federal courts have never laid down the rule that the mere solicitation of business by agents of a foreign corporation within the state was the doing of business in that state. Many decisions hold that the taking of orders for goods in a state by an ordinary agent or salesman is not doing business therein, where orders so taken are forwarded to the corporation at its domicile for its acceptance and the goods are sent directly to the purchasers. 12 R. C. L. 76." Pembleton v. Illinois Commercial Men's Assoc., (1919) 289 Ill. 99, 124 N. E. 355.

b. Fraud (p. 205)

By virtue of the full faith and credit provision of the Federal Constitution, the courts of this state are bound to give to the judgment of a sister state the same faith and credit, and only the same, which it has in the state where it was rendered; if re-examinable, or subject to defense on certain grounds there, it is open to the same inquiries and subject to the same defenses here. It follows that the requirement that full faith and credit shall be given in one state to the judgments obtained in another will not prevent the courts of this state, in which legal and equitable rights and remedies are administered in one court and in one form of action, from permitting an equitable defense to be interposed against a judgment obtained by fraud in another state, where the courts of the state where the judgment was rendered are authorized to vacate or enjoin the enforcement of a judgment obtained by fraud. Shary v. Eszlinger, (N. D. 1920), 176 N. W. 938.

Decree not final.—The full faith and credit clause does not apply to a foreign decree for alimony which is subject to modification by the court rendering it. Levine v. Levine, (1920) 95 Ore. 94, 187 Pac. 609, holding, however, that such a judgment is "at least prima facie final."

2. State Taxation

a. Discriminating Tax on Sales by Nonresident (p. 232)

A state statute imposing license taxes on the manufacturer or other person engaged in the business of selling automobiles in this state, reducing the rate if three-fourths of the entire assets of the manufacturer are invested and returned for taxes herein, applies indiscriminately to the manufacturers of every state, and being for the object of reducing the license tax for selling automobiles in this state when the seller is already paying a tax here on three-fourths of his assets, is not in violation of this section. Bethlehem Motors Corp. v. Flynt, (1919) 178 N. C. 399, 100 S. E. 693.

c. Taxation of Property of Nonresident (p. 237)

State law imposing income tax on nonresidents.—Nonresidents are not denied their constitutional privileges or immunities, nor the equal protection of the laws, by a state tax imposed upon the net income derived by them from property owned within the state, and from any business, trade, or profession carried on within its borders, either on the theory that, since the tax is, as to citizens of the state, a purely personal tax, measured by their incomes, while, as applied to a nonresident, it is essentially a tax upon his property and business within the state, to which the property and business of citizens and residents of the state are not subjected, there was a discrimination against the nonresident, or because the taxing statute permits residents to deduct from their gross income not only losses incurred within the state, but also those sustained elsewhere, while nonresidents may deduct only those incurred within the state. Shaffer v. Carter, (1920) 252 U. S. 37, 40 S. Ct. 221, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —.

So, there is no unconstitutional discrimination against citizens of other states in a state income tax law merely because it confines the deduction of expenses, losses, etc., in the case of nonresident taxpayers, to such as are connected with income arising from sources within the taxing state. Travis v. Yale, etc., Mfg. Co., (1920) 252 U. S. 60, 40 S. Ct. 228, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (S. D. N. Y. 1919) 262 Fed. 576.

Again a state income tax law does not unconstitutionally discriminate against noncitizens merely because it confines the withholding at source to the income of nonresidents, since such provision does not in any way increase the burden of the tax upon nonresidents, but merely recognizes the fact that, as to them, the state imposes no personal liability, and hence adopts a convenient substitute for it. Travis v. Yale, etc., Mfg. Co., (1920) 252 U. S. 60, 40 S. Ct.

228, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (S. D. N. Y. 1919) 262 Fed. 576.

But privileges and immunities of citizens of New York are unconstitutionally denied to citizens of Connecticut and New Jersey by the provision of the New York Income Tax Law which denies to all nonresidents, without special reference to citizenship, the exemptions accorded to residents, viz., $1,000 of the income of a single person, $2,000 in the case of a married person, and $200 additional for each dependent, although the nonresident, if liable to an income tax in his own state, including income derived from sources within New York, and subject to taxation under the New York act, is allowed a credit upon the income tax otherwise payable to New York by the same proportion of the tax payable to the state of his residence as his income subject to taxation by the New York act bears to his entire income taxed in his own state, provided that such credit shall be given only if the laws of said state grant a substantially similar credit to residents of New York subject to income tax under such laws, and although the New York act also excludes from the income of non-resident taxpayers annuities, interest on bank deposits, interest on bonds, notes, or other interest-bearing obligations, or dividends from corporations, except to the extent to which the same shall be a part of income from any business, trade, profession, or occupation carried on in the state, subject to taxation under that act. Travis v. Yale, etc., Mfg. Co., (1920) 252 U. S. 60, 40 S. Ct. 228, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (S. D. N. Y. 1919) 262 Fed. 576, wherein it was further held that the discrimination against citizens of Connecticut and New Jersey could not be upheld on the theory that nonresidents have untaxed income derived from sources in their home states or elsewhere outside of the state of New York, corresponding to the amount upon which residents of the latter state are exempt from taxation under the act. Moreover it was held that a discrimination by the state of New York in its income tax legislation against citizens of adjoining states would not be cured were those states to establish like discriminations against citizens of the state of New York.

d. Discrimination as to Collateral Inheritance Taxes (p. 238)

Privileges and immunities of New Jersey citizens are not denied to citizens of other states, nor are the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States abridged by the New Jersey Inheritance Tax Law under which the tax on the transfer by will or intestacy of the estate of a nonresident decedent, consisting of property both within and without the state, is first ascertained on the entire estate as though it were the estate of a resident with all the decedent's property, both real and personal, situated within the state, and is then apportioned and assessed in the proportion that the taxable estate within the state bears to the entire estate, wherever situated, although by reason of the graduation of the tax the application of the apportionment formula fixed by the statute may result in a greater tax on the transfer of the property of the estate subject to the state's jurisdiction than would be assessed for the transfer of an equal amount, in similar manner, of the property of a resident decedent. Maxwell v. Bugbee, (1919) 250 U. S. 525, 40 S. Ct. 2, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (1917) 90 N. J. L. 707, 101 Atl. 248; Hill v. Bugbee, (1919) 250 U. S. 525, 40 S. Ct. 2, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (1918) 92 N. J. L. 514, 105 Atl. 893.

11. Statute of Limitations (p. 247)

Constitutional privileges and immunities of a nonresident citizen are not denied by the exemption accorded to resident citizens by the provisions of a state statute, that "when a cause of action has arisen outside of this state and, by the laws of the place where it arose, an action thereon is there barred by lapse of time, no such action shall be maintained in this state unless the plaintiff be a citizen of the state who has owned the cause of action ever since it accrued," where the foreign limitation, though shorter than that of Minnesota, is not unduly short. Canadian Northern R. Co. v. Eggen, (1920) 252 U. S. 553, 40 S. Ct. 402, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, reversing (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1918) 255 Fed. 937, 167 C. C. A. 229, wherein the court said: "This court has never attempted to formulate a comprehensive list of the rights included within the 'privileges and immunities' clause of the Constitution (article 4, § 2), but it has repeatedly approved as authoritative the statement by Mr. Justice Washington, in 1825, in Corfield v. Coryell, 4 Wash. C. C. 371, 380, Fed. Cas. No. 3,230 (the first federal case in which this clause was considered), saying: 'We feel no hesitation in confining these expressions to those privileges and immunities which are, in their nature, fundamental.' Slaughter-House Cases, 16 Wall. 36, 75, 21 L. Ed. 394; Blake v. McClung, 172 U. S. 239, 248, 19 Sup. Ct. 165, 43 L. Ed. 432; Chambers v. Baltimore & Ohio R. R. Co., 207 U. S. 142, 155, 28 Sup. Ct. 34, 52 L. Ed. 143. In the Corfield Case the court included in a partial list of such fundamental privileges 'the right of a citizen of one state . . . to institute and maintain actions of any kind in the courts of' another. The state of Minnesota, in the statute we are considering, recognized this right of citizens of other states to institute and maintain suits in its courts as a fundamental right, protected by the Constitution, and for one year from the time his cause of action accrued the respondent was given all of the rights which citizens of Minnesota had under it. The discrimination of which he complains could arise only from his own neglect. This is not disputed, nor can it be fairly claimed that the limitation of one year is unduly short, having regard to the likelihood of the dispersing of witnesses to accidents such as that in which the respondent was injured, their exposure to injury and death, and the failure of memory as to the minute details of conduct on which questions of negligence so often turn. Thus, the holding of the Circuit Court of Appeals comes to this, that the privilege and immunity clause of the Constitution guarantees to a nonresident precisely the same rights in the courts of a state as resident citizens have, and that any statute which gives him a less, even though it be an adequate, remedy is unconstitutional and void.

"Such a literal interpretation of the clause cannot be accepted.

"From very early in our history, requirements have been imposed upon nonresidents in many, perhaps in all, of the states as a condition of resorting to other courts, which have not been imposed upon resident citizens. For instance, security for costs has very generally been required of a nonresident, but not of a resident citizen, and a nonresident's property in many states may be attached under conditions which would not justify the attaching of a resident citizen's property. This court has said of such requirements:

"Such a regulation of the internal affairs of a state cannot reasonably be characterized as hostile to the fundamental rights of citizens of other states. . . . It has never been supposed that regulations of that character materially interfered with the enjoyment by citizens of each state of the privileges and immunities secured by the Constitution to citizens of the several states." Blake v. McClung, 172 U. S. 239, 256, 19 Sup. Ct. 165, 172 (43 L. Ed. 432).

"The principle on which this holding rests is that the constitutional requirement is satisfied if the nonresident is given access to the courts of the state upon terms which in themselves are reasonable and adequate for the enforcing of any rights he may have, even though they may not be technically and precisely the same in extent as those accorded to resident citizens. The power is in the courts, ultimately in this court, to determine the adequacy and reasonableness of such terms. A man cannot be said to be denied, in a constitutional or in any rational sense, the privilege of resorting to courts to enforce his rights when he is given free access to them for a length of time reasonably sufficient to enable an ordinarily diligent man to institute proceedings for their protection.

"This is the principle on which this court has repeatedly ruled that contracts were not impaired in a constitutional sense by change in limitation statutes which reduced the time for commencing actions upon them, provided a reasonable time was given for commencing suit before the new bar took effect. Sohn v. Waterson, 17 Wall. 596, 21 L. Ed. 737; Terry v. Anderson, 95 U. S. 628, 632, 24 L. Ed. 365; Tennessee v. Sneed, 96 U. S. 69, 74, 24 L. Ed. 610; Antoni v. Green-

"A like result to that which we are announcing was reached with respect to similar statutes, in Chemung Canal Bank v. Lowery, 93 U. S. 72, 23 L. Ed. 806; by the Circuit Court of Appeals, Second Circuit, in Aultman & Taylor Co. v. Syme, 79 Fed. 238, 24 C. C. A. 539; in Klotz v. Angle, 220 N. Y. 347, 116 N. E. 24; and in Robinson v. Oceanic Steam Navigation Co., 112 N. Y. 315, 325, 19 N. E. 625, 627 (2 L. R. A. 636).

"In this last case the Court of Appeals of New York pertinently says:

"A construction of the constitutional limitation [the one we are considering] which would apply it to such a case as this would strike down a large body of laws which have existed in all the states from the foundation of the government, making some discrimination between residents and nonresidents in legal proceedings and other matters."

"The laws of Minnesota gave to the non-resident respondent free access to its courts, for the purpose of enforcing any right which he may have had, for a year—as long a time as was given him for that purpose by the laws under which he chose to live and work—and having neglected to avail himself of that law, he may not successfully complain because his expired right to maintain suit elsewhere is not revived for his benefit by the laws of the state to which he went for the sole purpose of prosecuting his suit. The privilege extended to him for enforcing his claim was reasonably sufficient and adequate and the statute is a valid law."

Methods of proposing amendments.—In In re Opinion of Justices, (1919) 118 Me. 544, 107 Atl. 673, 5 A. L. R. 1412, the court, commenting on the different methods authorized by this article for proposing amendments, said:

"It will be observed that there are two distinct stages in the process, the proposal and the ratification. The proposal may originate in either of two ways:

"First, from Congress, by joint resolution, whenever two-thirds of both Houses deem it necessary.

"Second, from the states, whenever two-thirds of the Legislatures of the several states may request that a national constitutional convention be called for that purpose, in which case Congress must call such a convention.

"All the federal amendments which have thus far been adopted have been proposed in compliance with the first method; that is, by a joint resolution of the two Houses of Congress. No national constitutional convention has ever been called or held. Such proposed amendment is a matter within the sole control of the two houses, and is independent of all executive action. The signature of the President is not necessary, and it need not be presented to him for approval or veto. Hollingsworth v. Virginia, 9 Dall. 378, 1 L. Ed. 644; State v. Dahl, 6 N. D. 81, 69 N. W. 418, 34 L. R. A. 97. Nor is Congress, in proposing constitutional amendments, strictly speaking, acting in the exercise of ordinary legislative power. It is acting in behalf of and as the representative of the people of the United States under the power expressly conferred by article 5, before quoted. The people, through their Constitution, might have designated some other body than the two houses or a national constitutional convention as the source of proposals. They might have given such power to the President, or to the Cabinet, or reserved it in themselves; but they expressly delegated it to Congress or to a constitutional convention."

Methods of adopting proposed amendments.—In In re Opinion of Justices, (1919) 118 Me. 544, 107 Atl. 673, 5 A. L. R. 1412, the court commenting on the different methods authorized by this article for adopting proposed amendments said:

"As there are two methods of proposal, so there are two methods of ratification. Whether an amendment is proposed by joint resolution or by a national constitutional convention, it must be ratified in one of two ways:

"First, by the Legislatures of three-fourths of the several states; or,

"Second, by constitutional conventions held in three-fourths thereof, and Congress is given the power to prescribe which mode of ratification shall be followed.

"Hitherto Congress has prescribed only the former method, and all amendments heretofore adopted have been ratified solely by the approving action of the Legislature in three-fourths of the states. That is the mode of ratification prescribed by Congress in case of the amendment now under consideration, and it was in pursuance of that prescribed mode that this ratifying resolve was passed by the Legislature of Maine.

"Here, again, the state Legislature in ratifying the amendment, as Congress in proposing it, is not, strictly speaking, acting in the discharge of legislative duties and functions as a law-making body, but is acting in behalf of and as representative of the people as a ratifying body, under the power expressly conferred upon it by article 5. The people, through their Constitution, might have clothed the Senate alone, or the House alone, or the Governor's Council, or the Governor, with the power of ratification, or might have reserved that power to themselves to be exercised by popular vote. But they did not. They retained no power of ratification in themselves, but conferred it completely upon the two houses of the Legislature; that is, the Legislative Assembly."

"Two-thirds of both houses."—The two-thirds vote in each House of Congress, which is required in proposing an amendment to the Constitution, is a vote of two-thirds of the members present—assuming the presence of a quorum—and not a two-thirds vote of the entire membership, present and absent. National Prohibition Cases, (1920) 253 U. S. 350, 40 S. Ct. 486, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming Feigenspan v. Bodine, (D. C. N. J. 1920) 264 Fed. 186.

In Ohio v. Cox, (S. D. Ohio 1919) 257 Fed. 334, an application was made for an injunction to restrain the governor of Ohio from submitting the Eighteenth Amendment (1919 Supp. Fed. Stat. Ann. 839) to the state legislature for ratification. It was contended that the proposed amendment had not been passed by two-thirds of both houses of Congress in accordance with this article. Answering this contention, the court said:

"The writ of injunction is an extraordinary remedy, to be issued only when the threatened injury, unless restrained, would be irreparable. If the proceedings in the Senate and in the House were not in accordance with the applicable provision of the Constitution, plaintiff, or any citizen of Ohio, by petition, if no member of the General Assembly acts, may show to the General Assembly, if it can be shown, in what respect they are violative of the Constitution. It cannot be assumed in advance that the General Assembly of Ohio will take any action violative of the Constitution of the United States. Moreover, if the two houses of the General Assembly should take a vote on the subject, one cannot say in advance what the result would be. The proposed amendment may be rejected, because the members of the General Assembly may think the proceedings at Washington were not in consonance with the Constitution, or because of insufficient votes in the affirmative. Indeed, the General Assembly may take no action at all. So far as one state in the Union is concerned, out of the three-fourths necessary for the adoption of the amendment, it may be that the affirmative action of the Ohio General Assembly would be an injury to the plaintiff, if he were otherwise in a position to claim injury; but the writ of injunction does not issue to restrain acts which may or may not be injurious.

"Moreover, if the plaintiff is injured, that injury does not arise until the proposed amendment is adopted by the respective Legislatures of three-fourths of the states. Who can say that that result will come to pass within the seven years the state Legislatures are given to act? The act of the Governor and the affirmative act of the General Assembly would not be an irreparable injury, or any injury, to the plaintiff, if the requisite number of states, by their Legislatures, did not adopt the amendment. However that may be, and whatever the extent of the injury to the plaintiff affirmative action by the General Assembly of Ohio might be, it cannot be said that the act of the Governor in transmitting this certified copy constitutes an irreparable injury to the plaintiff.

"Since restraint on the Governor is the only relief sought, injunction must be denied, because no irreparable injury will result from what he threatens to do. . . .

"What is meant in article 5 by the expression, 'Whenever two-thirds of both Houses shall deem it necessary'? It is argued that 'two-thirds of both houses' means two-thirds of the members elected to those houses, and not two-thirds of a quorum. If this is right, then the joint resolution did not receive the necessary two-thirds in either house. It is argued with much force that, when the framers of the Constitution required action by a fractional part of the members to be effective with respect to certain subjects-matter, the fraction always had coupled with it the 'members present.' Article 1, § 3, par. 6, provides, in the trial of impeachments by the Senate:

"... And no person shall be convicted without the concurrence of two-thirds of the members present."

"Article 1, § 5, par. 3, as to the demand for the ayes and nays:

"... And the yeas and nays of the members of either house on any question shall, at the desire of one-fifth of those present, be entered on the journal."

"As to making treaties, article 2, § 2, par. 2:

"... He [the President] shall have power, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to make treaties, provided two-thirds of the Senators present concur. . . ."

"But, when the subject-matter is an amendment of the Constitution, or the passing of an act over the President's veto, it is required that 'two-thirds of both houses' shall concur, as to one, and 'two-thirds of that house' in which the bill originated shall agree to pass the bill over the veto, as to the other. This, it is said, shows conclusively the purpose to require, in these especially important matters, the concurrence of two-thirds of the entire membership, as distinguished from two-thirds of a quorum or two-thirds of those present.

"What does 'house' mean? Webster says:

"One of the estates of a kingdom assembled in Parliament or Legislature; a body of men united in their legislative capacity; as the House of Lords, or Peers, of Great Britain, the House of Commons, the House of Representatives."

"So, when we speak of 'both houses,' we mean the members meeting in their legislative capacity. While passing such a resolution is not a legislative act, in the sense that it is the enactment of a law, yet it is action by the legislative bodies assembled in their legislative capacity. Indeed, a resolution is the first step in that which may result, as has often resulted, in establishing, and in that sense enacting, the fundamental law which is the supreme law of the land. In passing the resolution each house acts in the same capacity in which it enacts ordinary legislation; and when we say that a bill or resolution has passed the Senate or House, as the case may be, we mean that it has received the number of votes required for the transaction of business."

"Section 5 of article 1 provides:

"Each house shall be the judge of the elections, returns, and qualifications of its own members, and a majority of each shall constitute a quorum to do business. . . ."

"A part of the business of the Senate and of the House is to pass laws; a part of its business is to pass joint resolutions proposing amendments to the Constitution. If a quorum is present, they may transact that business. If a majority of a quorum in either house votes for a bill, it passes that house. If two-thirds of a quorum in each house votes for the resolution, it passes the house, in the ordinary course of the legislative business intrusted to it by the Constitution."

"In United States v. Ballin, 144 U. S. 1, 5, 12 Sup. Ct. 507, 509 (36 L. Ed. 321) the Supreme Court, speaking through Mr. Justice Brewer, said:

"The Constitution provides that 'a majority of each [house] shall constitute a quorum to do business.' . . . Its capacity to transact business is then established, created by the mere presence of a majority, and does not depend upon the disposition or assent of any single member or fraction of the majority present. All that the Constitution requires is the presence of a majority, and when that majority are present the power of the House arises."

"The general rule of all parliamentary bodies is that, when a quorum is present, the act of a majority of the quorum is the act of the body. This has been the rule for all time, except so far as in any given case the terms of the organic act under which the body is assembled have prescribed specific limitations; as, for instance, in those states where the Constitution provides that a majority of all the members elected to either house shall be necessary for the passage of any bill. No such limitation is found in the federal Constitution, and therefore the general law of such bodies obtains."

"Among the many cases cited is State v. Deliesseline, 1 McCord (S. C.) 43, 49, in which it is said:

"For, according to the principle of all the cases referred to, a quorum possesses all the powers of the whole body; a majority of which quorum must of course govern. . . . The Constitutions of this state and of the United States declare that a majority shall be a quorum to do business; but a majority of that quorum are sufficient to decide the most important question."

"Since the 'body' is the 'house,' and a majority of a quorum transact the business of the house in passing a bill, so two-thirds of a quorum passes a resolution proposing an amendment. So it seems to this court."

"Shall deem it necessary."—The adoption by both Houses of Congress, each by a two-thirds vote, of a joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution, sufficiently shows that the proposal was deemed necessary by all who voted for it. An express declaration that they regarded it as necessary is not essential. National Prohibition Cases, (1920) 253 U. S. 350, 40 S. Ct. 486, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming Feigenspan v. Bodine, (D. C. N. J. 1920) 264 Fed. 186.

Ratification of amendments by legislature as permitting referendum to people.—Referendum provisions of state constitution and statutes cannot be applied in the ratification or rejection of amendments to the Federal Constitution without violating the requirement of this article, that such ratification shall be by the legislatures of the several states, or by conventions therein, as Congress shall decide. Hawke v. Smith, (1920) 253 U. S. 221, 231, 40 S. Ct. 495, 498, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) — (reversing (1919) 100 Ohio St. 385, 540, 126 N. E. 400), wherein the court said: "The only question really for determination is: What did the framers of the Constitution mean in requiring ratification by 'legislatures'? That was not a term of uncertain meaning when incorporated into the Constitution. What it meant when adopted it still means for the purpose of interpretation. A legislature was then the representative body which made the laws of the people. The term is often used in the Constitution with this evident meaning. Article 1, § 2, prescribes the qualifications of electors of Congressmen as 'those requisite for electors of the most numerous branch of the state legislature.' Article 1, § 3, provided that Senators shall be chosen in each state by the legislature thereof, and this was the method of choosing Senators until the adoption of the 17th Amendment, which made provision for the election of Senators by vote of the people, the electors to have the qualifications requisite for electors of the most numerous branch of the state legislature. That Congress and the states understood that this election by the people was entirely distinct from legislative action is shown by the provision of the Amendment giving the legislature of any state the power to authorize the executive to make temporary appointments until the people shall fill the vacancies by election. It was never suggested, so far as we are aware, that the purpose of making the office of Senator elective by the people could be accomplished by a referendum vote. The necessity of the Amendment to accomplish the purpose of popular election is shown in the adoption of the Amendment. In article 4 the United States is required to protect every state against domestic violence upon application of the legislature, or of the executive when the legislature cannot be convened. Article 6 requires the members of the several legislatures to be bound by oath or affirmation, to support the Constitution of the United States. By article 1, § 8, Congress is given exclusive jurisdiction over all places purchased by the consent of the legislature of the state in which the same shall be. Article 4, § 3, provides that no new states shall be carved out of old states without the consent of the legislatures of the states concerned.

"There can be no question that the framers of the Constitution clearly understood and carefully used the terms in which that instrument referred to the action of the legislatures of the states. When they intended that direct action by the people should be had they were no less accurate in the use of apt phraseology to carry out such purpose. The members of the House of Representatives were required to be chosen by the people of the several states. Article 1, § 2.

"The Constitution of Ohio in its present form, although making provision for a referendum, vests the legislative power primarily in a general assembly consisting of a senate and house of representatives. Article 2, § 1, provides:

"The legislative power of the state shall be vested in a general assembly consisting of a senate and house of representatives, but the people reserve to themselves the power to propose to the general assembly, laws and amendments to the Constitution, and to adopt or reject the same at the polls on a referendum vote as hereinafter provided."

"The argument to support the power of the state to require the approval by the people of the state of the ratification of amendments to the Federal Constitution through the medium of a referendum rests upon the proposition that the Federal Constitution requires ratification by the legislative action of the states through the medium provided at the time of the proposed approval of an amendment. This argument is fallacious in this—ratification by a state of a constitutional amendment is not an act of legislation within the proper sense of the word. It is but the expression of the assent of the state to a proposed amendment.

"At an early day this court settled that the submission of a constitutional amendment did not require the action of the President. The question arose over the adoption of the 11th Amendment. Hollingsworth v. Virginia, 3 Dall. 378, 1 L. ed. 644. In that case it was contended that the amendment had not been proposed in the manner provided in the Constitution, as an inspection of the original roll showed that it had never been submitted to the President for his approval, in accordance with article 1, § 7, of the Constitution. The Attorney General answered that the case of amendments is a substantive act, unconnected with the ordinary business of legislation, and not within the policy or terms of the Constitution investing the President with a qualified negative on the acts and resolutions of Congress. In a footnote to this argument of the Attorney General, Justice Chase said: 'There can surely be no necessity to answer that argument. The negative of the President applies only to the ordinary cases of legislation. He has nothing to do with the proposition, or adoption, of amendments to the Constitution.' The court by a unanimous judgment held that the amendment was constitutionally adopted.

"It is true that the power to legislate in the enactment of the laws of a state is derived from the people of the state. But the power to ratify a proposed amendment to the Federal Constitution has its source in the Federal Constitution. The act of ratification by the state derives its authority from the Federal Constitution to which the state and its people have alike assented.

"This view of the amendment is confirmed in the history of its adoption found in 2 Watson on the Constitution, 1301 et seq. Any other view might lead to endless confusion in the manner of ratification of Federal amendments. The choice of means of ratification was wisely withheld from conflicting action in the several states."

See to the same effect National Prohibition Cases, (1920) 253 U. S. 350, 40 S. Ct. 486, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —; Ex p. Dillon, (N. D. Cal. 1920) 262 Fed. 563; Prior v. Noland, (Colo. 1920) 188 Pac. 729; Barlotti v. Lyons, (Cal. 1920) 189 Pac. 282.

The constitutional provision that the states shall ratify proposed amendments by their legislatures does not require or contemplate a submission of the proposed amendment to the voters under state referendum laws. In re Opinion of Justices, (1919) 118 Me. 544, 107 Atl. 673, 5 A. L. R. 1412, wherein the court said:

"It admits of no doubt that in the matter of amendment which is governed by article 5, the people divested themselves of all authority and conferred the power of proposal upon Congress or upon a national constitutional convention, and the power of ratification upon the state Legislature or upon state constitutional conventions. . . . It follows, from what has been said, that even if the people of Maine, by adopting in 1908 the initiative and referendum amendment of our state Constitution, had attempted to assume or regain the power of ratification of proposed amendments to the federal Constitution, by exercising a supervisory authority over the state Legislature in that respect, such attempt would have been futile. Their power over amendments had been completely and unreservedly lodged with the bodies designated by article 5, and so long as that article remains unmodified they have no power left in themselves either to propose or to ratify federal amendments. The authority is elsewhere.

"But the people, by the adoption of the initiative and referendum amendment, did not intend to assume or regain such power.

"The purpose and scope of that amendment were fully considered and discussed in the case of Moulton v. Scully, 111 Me. 428, 446, 80 Atl. 944, and it was there held that the design of the initiative and referendum was to make the law-making power of the Legislature, not final, but subject to the will of the people, and to confer that power in the last analysis upon the people themselves."

"Legislature" in this article means the legislative assembly and does not include a referendum to the people. Decher v. Vaughan, (Mich. 1920) 177 N. W. 388, wherein the court said:

"The purpose of the Constitution was to establish a representative form of government, not a pure democracy in which all power is exercised by the people acting as a whole. While it provides for a popular branch of the legislative department, to be elected at short intervals by the vote of those entitled to the elective franchise in the several states, it is suggestive that neither the President, Vice President, nor United States Senators are to be so elected. It is also significant that when there was a popular demand that Senators should be elected, it was not deemed sufficient to provide in the state Constitutions for a referendum in making the selection, although the Constitution provided that they 'should be chosen by the Legislature,' but an amendment to the federal Constitution, the seventeenth, was adopted therefor.

"The term 'legislature' is thus defined: 'That body of men which makes the laws for a state or nation' (Bouvier's Law Dict. (Rawle's Ed.) 17)—and 'legislative power' as: 'Authority exercised by that department of government which is charged with the enactment of law as distinguished from the executive and judicial functions. The law-making power of a sovereign state.'

"Counsel for the relators insist that under our state Constitution 'the power to legislate is vested in both the constituent assembly and the electors themselves'; that in writing article 5 of the federal Constitution its framers intended to submit an amendment to such legislative power for ratification, and not merely to the legislative body known as the Legislature. We cannot but think that such an interpretation does violence to the plain meaning of the word 'legislature' as understood at the time the federal Constitution was adopted. There were then lawmaking bodies, always referred to as 'legislatures,' in all of the colonies which under the Constitution afterwards became states. This term is frequently used in the Constitution, and an examination will reveal the fact that in most cases it could not be applied other than to such assemblies.

"It is suggested that the intent of the Constitution is simply 'to call the roll of states and get an expression from each state as to its will and desire.' In what way shall such expression be voiced? The Constitution says by the 'legislatures.' In making response, the members act collectively, and when a majority of those constituting such bodies respond in the affirmative, and such action is certified to the federal authorities by a sufficient number of states, the amendment is adopted, and is thereafter a part of the Constitution.

"The action of the Legislature in ratifying an amendment is not, strictly speaking, a legislative act. It is but one of several steps required to be taken to change the federal Constitution. The Congress, or the states by petition, must first propose an amendment. In order that it may become operative, it must receive the assent of the states by ratification in the manner provided in article 5. How shall such assent be expressed? By the adoption by the state Legislature of a joint resolution ratifying the amendment. The state thus participates in the making of a new law simply by expressing its assent thereto in the manner provided. It has not thereby enacted a law any more than the President or Governor does so by approving bills passed by the Congress or Legislature.

"The language of article 5 of our state Constitution negatives the claim of relators. It provides:

"The legislative power of the state of Michigan is vested in a Senate and House of Representatives."

"This is followed by the provisions relating to the referendum wherein the right 'to approve or reject at the polls any act passed by the Legislature' is reserved to the people. The framers of this instrument thus clearly distinguish between the legislative power vested in the Legislature and the Legislature itself. The former embraces the right to enact legislation, the latter the body in whom such right is primarily vested. Under the provisions which follow as to initiative and referendum, the people have no power to enact legislation until the proposal therefor has been submitted by petition to the Legislature for action thereon. The right of the people to thus legislate in no way makes them a part of the Legislature, or changes the well-recognized meaning of that term."

Power to amend Constitution as authorizing prohibition amendment.—The prohibition of the manufacture, sale, transportation, importation, and exportation of intoxicating liquors for beverage purposes, as embodied in the 18th Amendment to the Federal Constitution, is within the power to amend reserved by the 5th article of such Constitution. National Prohibition Cases, (1920) 253 U. State testamentary laws.—In Chryssikos v. Demarco, (1919) 134 Md. 533, 107 Atl. 358, it was held that there was no conflict between the Maryland testamentary laws and the "most-favored nation" clause of the treaty between Greece and the United States which made it necessary for the Maryland courts to appoint the Greek consul to administer the estate of a Greek citizen resident of Maryland at the time of his death rather than a person qualified under the Maryland laws for appointment. The court said: "There can, of course, be no question about the obligation of state courts to obey and respect treaties made under the authority of the United States, as the Constitution and the laws of the United States made in pursuance thereof and all treaties made under the authority of the United States are the supreme law of the land, 'and the judges in every state shall be bound thereby, anything in the Constitution or laws of any state to the contrary notwithstanding.' Article 6, Const. of U. S. Article 2 of the Declaration of Rights of this state is to the same effect, and for the most part in the same language. When, then, the rights of a party under a treaty are alleged to be involved, it behooves a court to give such a case its most thorough investigation and consideration, so that such rights as he has will be fully protected, and possible international controversies be avoided. We are not required, however, to give a strained construction to the language of a treaty, or place an unreasonable interpretation upon it, for the purpose of securing to foreigners privileges which are denied citizens of this country."

IV. STATE TAXATION

2. Of Federal Agencies

a. In General (p. 328)

Property of "Fleet Corporation."—Land standing in the name of the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation and improved by it by the erection thereon of a number of workmen's dwellings, for the use of persons employed in shipbuilding in the vicinity, and also certain ships and shipyard shops and appurtenances standing on land belonging to a private shipbuilding company, are not taxable by state authorities; since the Fleet Corporation is a governmental agency, exclusively employed in governmental work, and "the fact that the ships and shops are on land belonging to the shipbuilding company does not, so long as the things taxed are the property of an agency of the United States, and are used exclusively for governmental purposes, make them taxable." U. S. v. Coghlan, (D. C. Md. 1919) 261 Fed. 425.

Vol. XI, p. 345, amend. 1.

The Espionage Act of June 15, 1917 (see 1918 Supp. p. 118) does not fall within the language of this amendment. Abrams v. U. S., (1919) 250 U. S. 616, 40 S. Ct. 17, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —; Seebach v. U. S., (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1919) 262 Fed. 885.

Injunction against picketing.—The amendment is a restraint on congressional action, and has no application to an injunction to prevent the picketing of a business establishment by the members of a trade union. Hughes v. Kansas City Motion Picture Mach. Operators, (Mo. 1920) 221 S. W. 95.

4. Opening Letters and Papers in Mail (p. 355)

Letters written by prisoner and opened by prison officials.—The use in evidence in a criminal case of letters voluntarily written by the accused after the crime, while he was in prison, and which came into the possession of the prison officials under established practice reasonably demanded to promote discipline, did not infringe the constitutional safeguards against self-incrimination or unreasonable searches and seizures. *Stroud v. 11. Use of Papers or Property Illegally Obtained as Evidence (p. 359)

The knowledge gained by the federal government's own wrong in seizing papers in violation of the owners' constitutional protection against unlawful searches and seizures cannot be used by the government in a criminal prosecution by serving subpoenas upon such owners to produce the original papers, which it had returned after copies had been made, and by obtaining a court order commanding compliance with such subpoenas. Silverthorne Lumber Co. v. U. S., (1920) 251 U. S. 385, 40 S. Ct. 182, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, wherein the court said:

"The proposition could not be presented more nakedly. It is that, although of course its seizure was an outrage which the government now regrets, it may study the papers before it returns them, copy them, and then may use the knowledge that it has gained to call upon the owners in a more regular form to produce them; that the protection of the Constitution covers the physical possession, but not any advantages that the government can gain over the object of its pursuit by doing the forbidden act. Weeks v. United States, 232 U. S. 383, 58 L. ed. 652, L. R. A. 1915B, 834, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 341, Ann. Cas. 1915C, 1117, to be sure, had established that laying the papers directly before the grand jury was unwarranted, but it is taken to mean only that two steps are required instead of one. In our opinion such is not the law. It reduces the 4th Amendment to a form of words. 232 U. S. 393. The essence of a provision forbidding the acquisition of evidence in a certain way is that not merely evidence so acquired shall not be used before the court, but that it shall not be used at all. Of course this does not mean that the facts thus obtained become sacred and inaccessible. If knowledge of them is gained from an independent source they may be proved like many others, but the knowledge gained by the Government's own wrong cannot be used by it in the way proposed. The numerous decisions, like Adams v. New York, 192 U. S. 585, 24 Sup. Ct. 372, 48 L. Ed. 575, holding that a collateral inquiry into the mode in which evidence has been got will not be allowed when the question is raised for the first time at the trial, are no authority in the present proceeding, as is explained in Weeks v. United States, 232 U. S. 383, 394, 395, 34 Sup. Ct. 341, 58 L. Ed. 652, L. R. A. 1915B, 834, Ann. Cas. 1915C, 1177. Whether some of those decisions have gone too far or have given wrong reasons it is unnecessary to inquire; the principle applicable to the present case seems to us plain. It is stated satisfactorily in Flagg v. United States, 233 Fed. 481, 483, 147 C. C. A. 367. In Linn v. United States, 251 Fed. 476, 490, 163 C. C. A. 470, it was thought that a different rule applied to a corporation, on the ground that it was not privileged from producing its books and papers. But the rights of a corporation against unlawful search and seizure are to be protected even if the same result might have been achieved in a lawful way."

15. Limiting Compensation of Pension Agents and Attorneys (p. 431)

The limitation of the compensation of attorneys in the prosecution of claims against the United States to 20 per cent of the amount collected, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding, which was made by the Omnibus Claims Act of March 4, 1915, § 4, does not contravene this amendment, when applied to invalidate a contingent fee contract entered into and substantially performed before the passage of the statute—especially where, at the time the contract was made, there was no legislation, general or special, which conferred upon the claimant any right of recovery, even if he should establish to the satisfaction of Congress that his claim was equitable, and where the attorney accepted and received from the United States Treasury a warrant for 20 per cent of the amount appropriated, although this was not accepted by him as a full settlement of his rights against the client. Calhoun v. Massie, (1920) 253 U. S. 170, 40 S. Ct. 474, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (1918) 123 Va. 673, 97 S. E. 576.

An existing contract for the payment to an attorney for professional services to be rendered in the prosecution of a Civil War claim against the United States of a sum equal to 50 per cent of whatever might be collected was invalidated by the provision of the Omnibus Claims Act of March 4, 1915, which, after making an appropriation for payment of such claim, made it unlawful for any attorney to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum which, in the aggregate, exceeds 20 per cent of the amount of any item appropriated in that act, on account of services rendered or advances made in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Newman v. Moyers, (1920) 253 U. S. 182, 40 S. Ct. 478, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, reversing (1917) 47 App. Cas. (D. C.) 102, Ann. Cas. 1918E 528.

XI. DEPRIVATION OF PROPERTY

5. Extending Interstate Commerce Act to Private Oil Pipe Line Owners (p. 440)

Regulating oil pipe line as within power of state utility commission.—An oil pipe line constructed solely to carry oil for particular producers under strictly private contracts, and never devoted by its owner to public use, could not, by mere legislative fiat or by any regulating order of a state commission, be converted by a state into a public utility, nor its owner made a common carrier, since that would be taking private property for public use without just compensation, which no state can do consistently with the due process of law clause of the 14th Amendment. But a corporation which has voluntarily devoted its oil pipe line to the use of the public may, consistently with due process of law, be subjected by a state to the regulatory powers of a state commission over the rates and practices of public utilities. And a common carrier cannot, by making contracts for future transportation or business, mortgaging its property or pledging its income, prevent or postpone the exertion by a state of the power to regulate the carrier's rates and practices, nor does the contract clause of the Federal Constitution interpose any obstacle to the exertion of such power. Producers Transp. Co. v. California Commission, (1920) 251 U. S. 228, 40 S. Ct. 131, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (1917) 176 Cal. 499, 169 Pac. 59.

8. Webb-Kenyon Law (p. 441)

Volstead Act extending wartime prohibition.—Congress could, consistently with the due process of law clause of this amendment, make effective forthwith the provisions of the Volstead Act of October 28, 1919, extending the existing war-time prohibition against the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors to nonintoxicating malt liquors with alcoholic content of as much as one-half of one per cent by volume, without making any compensation to the owner of such intoxicating liquors acquired before the passage of the act, and which before that time he could lawfully have sold. Ruppert v. Caffey, (1920) 251 U. S. 264, 40 S. Ct. 141, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —.

14. Deprivation of Use of the Postal Service (p. 443)

The exclusion of a newspaper from transportation in the mails as second-class matter on the ground that it contains articles violating the Espionage Act (1918 Supp. Fed. Stat. Ann. 132) is not a denial of due process of law, where its publishers are accorded a hearing before an Assistant Postmaster General, and his decision is reviewed by the Postmaster General. U. S. v. Burleson, (App. Cas. D. C. 1919) 258 Fed. 282.

III. PRIVATE PROPERTY

1. No Distinction Between Real and Personal Property (p. 451)

Placer mining claim as property.—North American Transp., etc., Co. v. U. S., (1918) 53 Ct. Cl. 424, cited in the 1919 Supp. under this catchline, was affirmed in (1920) 253 U. S. 330, 40 S. Ct. 518, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —.

VI. WITHOUT JUST COMPENSATION

1. What Constitutes Just Compensation (p. 466)

"Just compensation rests on equitable principles, and it means substantially that the owner should be put in as good position pecuniarily as he would have had if his property had not been taken. United States v. Nohant, 82 C. C. A. 470, 153 Fed. 520. When in the exercise of its sovereign power the government actually appropriates and takes possession of private property in advance of proceedings in condemnation, interest from the time of taking is in a sense a convenient commutation of the value of the use of the property or the direct loss the owner sustains until the value of the property itself is paid by deposit in court or otherwise. Something of substance is lacking in an award that omits all consideration of the time of the prior actual taking. That would be obvious in the case of a completed office building, and the difference here is but in degree, not in principle. An instance in which interest was regarded as an integral part of the principal sum in issue, and not within the statutes and decisions exempting the government, may be found in United States v. New York, 160 U. S. 598.

619, 16 Sup. Ct. 402, 40 L. Ed. 551. That was not a case of appropriation of private property, but there is a relevant analogy. In United States v. Cress, 243 U. S. 316, 319, 37 Sup. Ct. 380, 61 L. Ed. 746, the judgment of the District Court, which was affirmed, embraced interest, but the period for which it was allowed does not definitely appear. United States v. First Nat. Bank (D. C.) 250 Fed. 299, Ann. Cas. 1918E 36, is in point. There the government took possession of property some months before commencing condemnation proceedings in the District Court. In instructing the commissioners respecting their duties the court said: "The sole question for you to determine, in each one of the cases, is the value of the lands and the property at the time of the actual taking and occupation by the United States, together with interest at the rate of 8 per cent. per annum, the legal rate in Alabama, on said sums so ascertained by you, from the date of such actual taking and occupation."

"The proceedings in that case were under Act July 2, 1917, c. 35, 40 Stat. 241, which provided that they should 'be prosecuted in accordance with the laws relating to suits for the condemnation of property of the states wherein the proceedings may be instituted.' But, as regards the essential elements of the just compensation to be paid, the requirement is not different from the conformity provisions of section 2 of the act of August 1, 1888, supra, applicable to the case at bar." U. S. v. Rogers, (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1919) 257 Fed. 397, 168 C. C. A. 437.

III. "IN ALL CRIMINAL PROSECUTIONS"

7. Deportation of Aliens (p. 478)

Dismissal of other proceedings against alien.—The fact that proceedings in a District Court of a territory against an alien for keeping and maintaining a house of ill fame are dismissed at the time deportation proceedings are begun against her under section 3 of the Act of Feb. 20, 1907 (3 Fed. Stat. Ann. (2d ed.) 649), does not deprive her of her constitutional right to trial by jury, since the dismissal of the proceedings was not necessary to give the immigration officials the right to proceed, and an acquittal of the alien by a jury, if she had been thus tried and acquitted, would have been no obstacle to the deportation proceeding. Tama Miyake v. U. S., (C. C. A. 9th Cir. 1919) 257 Fed. 732, 169 C. C. A. 20.

V. BY AN IMPARTIAL JURY

1. In General (p. 480)

Peremptory challenges—General defendants.—The constitutional right of defendants in criminal prosecutions to a trial by an impartial jury is not infringed by the requirement of Jud. Code sec. 287 (see vol. V, 2d ed., p. 1078) that in cases where there are several defendants they shall be treated as a single party for the purpose of peremptory challenges, since there is nothing in the Federal Constitution which requires Congress to grant peremptory challenges to defendants in criminal cases, and the privilege granted must be taken with the limitations placed upon its exercise. Stilson v. U. S., (1919) 250 U. S. 583, 40 S. Ct. 28, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (E. D. Pa. 1918) 254 Fed. 120.

VII. RIGHT TO BE INFORMED OF NATURE OF ACCUSATION

3. Indictment Must Set Out Particulars

a. In General (p. 486)

An indictment which fails to distinctly and specifically describe the offense with which the accused is charged so as to advise him clearly what he has to meet and give him a fair and reasonable opportunity to prepare his defense, is defective as violating this amendment. *Fontana v. 9. Proceeding in Rem for Forfeiture (p. 502)

Forfeiture of automobile for unlawful transporting of liquor without a jury trial of the question whether the machine was in fact unlawfully used is not a violation of the amendment. One Hudson Super-Six Automobile Model v. State, (1920) 77 Okla. 130, 187 Pac. 806.

22. Suit by Broker to Recover Commission [New]

In an action by brokers to recover commissions for the purchase and sale of cotton on the cotton exchange, the question of whether the transactions out of which the claim of the plaintiffs arose were gambling transactions, is one of fact which they are entitled to have tried by a jury. Thorn v. Browne, (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1919) 257 Fed. 519, 168 C. C. A. 469.

VI. RIGHT OF TRIAL BY JURY

5. Adoption of State Remedies

c. Compulsory References (p. 507)

Appointment of auditor.—The constitutional right to trial by jury is not infringed by the compulsory appointment of an auditor, in an action at law involving long accounts with many disputed items, to make a preliminary investigation as to the facts, hear the evidence, and report his findings, with a view to simplifying the issues for the jury, where the order of appointment, though directing the auditor to form and express an opinion upon facts and items in dispute, declares that he shall not finally determine any of the issues, and that the final determination of all issues of fact is to be made by the jury at the trial. Ex p. Peterson, (1920) 253 U. S. 300, 40 S. C. 543, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, wherein the court said:

"The command of the 7th Amendment that 'the right of trial by jury shall be preserved' does not require that old forms of practice and procedure be retained. Walker v. New Mexico & S. P. R. Co., 165 U. S. 593, 596, 41 L. ed. 837, 841, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 421, 1 Am. Neg. Rep. 768. Compare Twinning v. New Jersey, 211 U. S. 78, 101, 53 L. ed. 97, 107, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 14. It does not prohibit the introduction of new methods for determining what facts are actually in issue, nor does it prohibit the introduction of new rules of evidence. Changes in these may be made. New devices may be used to adapt the ancient institution to present needs and to make of it an efficient instrument in the administration of justice. Indeed, such changes are essential to the preservation of the right. The limitation imposed by the Amendment is merely that enjoyment of the right of trial by jury be not obstructed, and that the ultimate determination of issues of fact by the jury be not interfered with.

"In so far as the task of the auditor is to define and simplify the issues, his function is, in essence, the same as that of pleading. The object of each is to concentrate the controversy upon the questions which should control the result. United States v. Gilmore, 7 Wall. 491, 494, 19 L. ed. 282, 283; Tucker v. United States, 151 U. S. 164, 168, 38 L. ed. 112, 114, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 299. No one is entitled in a civil case to trial by jury unless and except so far as there are issues of fact to be determined. It does not infringe the constitutional right to a trial by jury, to require, with a view to formulating the issues, an oath by each party to the facts relied upon. Fidelity & D. Co. v. United States, 187 U. S. 315, 47 L. ed. 194, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 120. Nor does the requirement of a preliminary hearing infringe the constitutional right, either because it involves delay in reaching the jury trial or because it affords opportunity for exploring in advance the evidence which the adversary purposes to introduce before the jury. Capital Traction Co. v. Hof, 174 U. S. 1, 43 L. ed. 873, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 580. In view of these decisions it cannot be deemed an undue obstruction of the right to a jury trial to require a preliminary hearing before an auditor.

"Nor can the order be held unconstitutional as unduly interfering with the jury's determination of issues of fact, because it directs the auditor to form and express an opinion upon facts and items in dispute. The report will, unless rejected by the court, be admitted at the jury trial as evidence of facts and findings embodied therein; but it will be treated, at most, as prima facie evidence thereof. The parties will remain as free to call, examine, and cross-examine witnesses as if the report had not been made. No incident of the jury trial is modified or taken away either by the preliminary, tentative hearing before the auditor, or by the use to which his report may be put. An order of a court, like a statute, is not unconstitutional because it endows an official act or finding with a presumption of regularity or of verity. Marx v. Hanthorn, 148 U. S. 172, 182, 37 L. ed. 410, 413, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 508; Turpin v. Lemon, 187 U. S. 51, 59, 47 L. ed. 70, 74, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 20; Reitler v. Harris, 223 U. S. 437, 56 L. ed. 497, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 248. In Meeker v. Lehigh Valley R. Co., 236 U. S. 412, 430, 59 L. ed. 644, 657, P. U. R. 1915D, 1072, 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 328, Ann. Cas. 1916B, 691, it was held that the provision in § 16 of the Interstate Commerce Act, making the findings and order of the Commission prima facie evidence of the facts therein stated in suits brought to enforce reparation awards, does not infringe upon the right of trial by jury. See also Mills v. Lehigh Valley R. Co., 238 U. S. 473, 59 L. ed. 1414, 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 888; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Jones, 149 Ill. 361, 382, 24 L. R. A. 141, 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 683, 41 Am. St. Rep. 278, 37 N. E. 247. In the Meeker case this court relied especially upon Holmes v. Hunt, 122 Mass. 505, 23 Am. Rep. 381, and called attention to the fact that there the statute making the report of an auditor prima facie evidence at the trial before a jury was held to be a legitimate exercise of legislative power over rules of evidence, and in no wise inconsistent with the constitutional right of trial by jury. The reasons for holding an auditor's report admissible as evidence are, in one respect, stronger than for giving such effect to the report of an independent tribunal like the Interstate Commerce Commission. The auditor is an officer of the court which appoints him. The proceedings before him are subject to its supervision, and the report may be used only if, and so far as, acceptable to the court.

"That neither the hearing before the auditor, nor the introduction of his report in evidence, abridges in any way the right of trial by jury, was the conclusion reached in 1902 in the district of Massachusetts in Primrose v. Fenno, 113 Fed. 375, 56 C. C. A. 313, 119 Fed. 801, the first reported case in which an auditor was appointed with the powers here conferred. The practice there established has been followed in the southern district of New York (Vermeule v. Reilly, 196 Fed. 226); and in the eastern district of Tennessee (United States v. Brading-Marshall Lumber Co. v. Wells, 203 Fed. 146)."

8. Unanimity in Finding a Verdict (p. 508)

State courts enforcing rights under Federal Employers' Liability Act.—State courts, when enforcing rights under the federal Employers' Liability Act, may give effect to a local practice permitting a less than unanimous verdict. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Ward, (1920) 252 U. S. 18, 40 S. Ct. 275, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (Okla. 1918) 173 Pac. 212, following St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Brown, (1916) 241 U. S. 223, 36 S. I. GENERAL RESERVED POWERS (p. 523)

"The jurisdiction, both legislative and judicial, of the several states of this Union, is, subject to the powers granted to the federal government by the Federal Constitution, supreme and absolute over all persons and property within their respective jurisdictions." Palmer v. Sturgeon Bank, (Mo. 1920) 218 S. W. 873.

VI. AS TO RIGHTS OF PROPERTY (p. 528)

Amendment prohibiting manufacture or sale of intoxicating liquors.—In Ohio v. Cox, (S. D. Ohio 1919) 257 Fed. 334, which was a suit to restrain the governor of Ohio from submitting the Eighteenth Amendment (1919 Supp. Fed. Stat. Ann. 839) to the Ohio legislature, it was urged that the subject was within the powers reserved to the states or the people under this amendment. The court said:

"Counsel do not favor the court with decisions on this subject, but, granting to the claim all that may be argued for it, it must be said that the members of the Senate and the members of the House are the representatives of the states and the representatives of the people, respectively, to whom is given the power to propose amendments to the Constitution, which become such only when representatives of the people in three-fourths of the states concur. Reserved powers are so called because they have never been surrendered. When the requisite number of states concur, the people surrender to the United States additional power. It may be absolute, or it may be concurrent, becoming absolute only when Congress shows an intention of occupying the whole field embraced by the particular subject."

To the same effect as the original annotation see State v. State Board of Control, (W. Va. 1920) 102 S. E. 688, wherein the court said: "It was once held by the Supreme Court of the United States, in an opinion rendered by Chief Justice Marshall in Osborn v. Bank of U. S., 9 Wheat. 738, 6 U. S. (L. ed.) 204, that to constitute a suit against the state it was necessary for the state itself to be a party to the record; but this holding has been virtually overruled in a number of subsequent decisions, and the rule now followed by that court is that if the suit be one in which the state is vitally interested, and will have to satisfy the judgment or decree of the court, if satisfaction is made at all, then the suit is one against the state, within the meaning of the eleventh amendment to the Constitution of the United States, even though the suit nominally is one against the state's officers or agents. In re Ayers, 123 U. S. 443, 8 S. Ct. 164, 31 U. S. (L. ed.) 216, and cases reviewed in the opinion."

(2) As to Public Lands (p. 548)

Restraining cancellation of irrigation agreement.—A suit by an irrigation company against certain state officers, constituting the state board of land commissioners, to compel them to accept an irrigation system pursuant to a contract with the company and to enjoin them from cancelling the contract or impairing the company's lien on the lands embraced in the project, is a suit against a state within the meaning of this amendment and not within the jurisdiction of a federal court. Twin Falls Salmon River Land, etc., Co. v. Alexander, (D. C. Idaho 1919) 260 Fed. 270.

Vol. XI, p. 554, amend. 13, sec. 1.

III. SLAVERY AND INVOLUNTARY SERVITUDE

1. Involuntary Servitude

a. In General (p. 556)

Master employing another's servant as liable for damages to that master.—A master who employs another's servant with knowledge of that fact, and that the servant has broken his contract of employment with the first master, is not liable in damages to such master, for if a liability were to arise under such circumstances the effect would be to compel a servant to work for his master against his will or be without employment, which would be in violation of this amendment. Shaw v. Fisher, (S. C. 1920) 102 S. E. 325, wherein the court said: "If no one else could have employed Carver during the term of his contract with plaintiff, after he had elected to break that contract, without incurring liability to plaintiff for damages, the result would have been to coerce him to perform the labor required by the contract; for he had to work or starve. The compulsion would have been scarcely less effectual than if it had been induced by the fear of punishment under a criminal statute for breach of his contract, which was condemned, as violative of the thirteenth amendment, in Ex parte Hollman, 79 S. C. 9, 60 S. E. 19, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 242, 14 Ann. Cas. 1105. The prohibition is as effective against indirect as it is against direct actions and laws—statutes or decisions—which, in operation and effect, produce the condition prohibited. The validity of the law is determined by its operation and effect. Of course, the sanction of the obligation of the contract, and the liability to pay damages for breach thereof, inhere in every contract, and these alone do not amount to that compulsion which is prohibited so long as the employee has the liberty at any time to elect to break the contract, subject only to the legal consequences—an action for damages—just like any other contractor. But if the law should penalize all who give him employment, after he has breached his contract, the effect would be to deny to him the same freedom that every other contractor enjoys, to wit, that of election at any time to break his contract, subject only to his liability for damages. To that extent, liberty of action and freedom of contract is guaranteed by the fourteenth amendment."

1. In General (p. 636)

The term "person" as used in this amendment does not embrace the state. Scott v. Frazier, (D. C. N. D. 1919) 258 Fed. 669.

2. Corporations (p. 636)

Private corporations.—To same effect as original annotation, see Scott v. Frazier, (D. C. N. D. 1919) 258 Fed. 669.

VII. NATURE AND INCIDENTS OF DUE PROCESS OF LAW

1. In General (p. 639)

Federal decisions as controlling state decisions on question of what is due process of law.—State decisions as to due process of law must be controlled by decisions of the federal courts. Pembleton v. Illinois Commercial Men's Assoc., (1919) 289 Ill. 99, 124 N. E. 355.

IX. MEANING OF PROPERTY

2. Right to Sue (p. 647)

Workmen's Compensation Act.—There is no vested right in the beneficiaries of a cause of action for death by wrongful act, which will invalidate an election by the intestate in his lifetime to be bound by the provisions of the Workmen's Compensation Act. Grannison v. Bates, etc., Constr. Co., (1920) 187 Ky. 538, 219 S. W. 806.

X. STATE ACTION AFFECTING LIFE, LIBERTY OR PROPERTY

1. Exercise of Police Power (p. 647)

To same effect as original annotation, see Fisher Flouring Mills Co. v. Brown, (Wash. 1920) 187 Pac. 399, sustaining regulation as to "concentrated commercial feeding stuffs" for cattle.

Promotion of health and safety by municipality.—Every intendment is to be made in favor of the lawfulness of the exercise of municipal power in making regulations to promote the public health and safety, and it is not the province of the courts, except in clear cases, to interfere with the exercise of the power reposed by law in municipal corporations for the protection of local rights and the health and welfare of the people in the community. Sullivan v. Shreveport, (1919) 251 U. S. 169, 40 S. Ct. 102, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (1918) 142 La. 573, 77 So. 286.

Requiring street railway to sprinkle portion of streets.—A street railway company may, consistently with due process of law, be required by municipal ordinance to sprinkle the surface of the streets occupied by its tracks between the rails and tracks, and for a sufficient distance beyond the outer rails, so as effectually to lay the dust and prevent the same from arising when the cars are in operation. Pacific Gas, etc., Co. v. Police Ct., (1919) 251 U. S. 22, 40 S. Ct. 79, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (1915) 28 Cal. App. 412, 152 Pac. 928.

Promotion of general welfare.—In the process of the application of the police power to new and varied conditions affecting the public welfare, it has been gradually extended beyond its original scope. It was formerly concerned with the protection of the public health, morals and safety, but it is now recognized as extending to the promotion of the general welfare. State v. J. M. Seney Co., (1919) 134 Md. 437, 107 Atl. 189.

7. State Control Over Court Procedure

a. In General (p. 654)

Validity of provision in state constitution making defense of contributory negligence one of fact for jury.—A state law may consistently with due process of law abolish the defense of contributory negligence. It may therefore provide in its constitution that the defense of contributory negligence shall, in all cases whatsoever, be a question of fact, and shall, at all times, be left to the jury. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Cole, (1919) 251 U. S. 54, 40 S. Ct. 68, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (Okla. 1918) 177 Pac. 570), wherein the court said: "The argument that the Railroad Company had a vested right to that defense is disposed of by the decisions that it may be taken away altogether. Arizona Employers' Liability Cases, 250 U. S. 400, 39 Sup. Ct. 553, 63 L. Ed. —; Bowersock v. Smith, 243 U. S. 29, 34, 37 Sup. Ct. 371, 61 L. Ed. 572. It is said that legislation cannot change the standard of conduct which is matter of law in its nature into matter of fact, and this may be conceded; but the material element in the constitutional enactment is not that it called contributory negligence fact but that it left it wholly to the jury. There is nothing, however, in the Constitution of the United States or its Amendments that requires a state to maintain the line with which we are familiar between the functions of the jury and those of the court. It may do away with the jury altogether, Walker v. Sauvinet, 92 U. S. 90, 23 L. Ed. 678; modify its constitution, Maxwell v. Dow, 176 U. S. 581, 20 Sup. Ct. 448, 494, 44 L. Ed. 597; the requirements of a verdict, Minneapolis & St. Louis R. R. Co. v. Bombolis, 241 U. S. 211, 36 Sup. Ct. 595, 60 L. Ed. 961, L. R. A. 1917A, 86, Ann. Cas. 1916E, 505; or the procedure before it, Twining v. New Jersey, 211 U. S. 78, 111, 29 Sup. Ct. 14, 53 L. Ed. 97; Frank v. Mangum, 237 U. S. 309, 340, 35 Sup. Ct. 582, 59 L. Ed. 969. As it may confer legislative and judicial powers upon a commission not known to the common law, Prentiss v. Atlantic Coast Line Co., 211 U. S. 210, 29 Sup. Ct. 67, 53 L. Ed. 150; it may confer larger powers upon a jury than those that generally prevail. Provisions making the jury judges of the law as well as of the facts in proceedings for libel are common to England and some of the states, and the controversy with regard to their powers in matters of law more generally as illustrated in Sparf v. United States, 156 U. S. 51, 715, 15 Sup. Ct. 273, 39 L. Ed. 343, and Georgia v. Brailsford, 3 Dall. 1, 4, 1 L. Ed. 483, shows that the notion is not a novelty. In the present instance the plaintiff in error cannot complain that its chance to prevail upon a certain ground is diminished when the ground might have been altogether removed."

y. As to Witnesses and Evidence

(10) Refusal of Party to Give His Deposition (p. 670)

To the same effect as the original annotation, see Kwiatkowski v. Putzhaven, (Ind. 1920) 126 N. E. 3.

(16) Burden of Proof [New] (p. 671)

Shifting burden of proof.—A state statute providing that in case of delay in the delivery of a shipment the burden of showing that the delay was not due to negligence shall be on the carrier does not deny due process of law. Cunningham v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., (Mo. 1919) 215 S. W. 5.

a1. Judgment

(16) Amount of Judgment [New] (p. 675)

Judgment on motion for rents pendente lite.—Due process is not denied by a statute providing that in a possessory action "the plaintiff may have judgment for the rent or rental value of the premises which accrues after judgment and before delivery of possession, by motion in the court in which the judgment was rendered, ten days' notice thereof in writing being given, unless judgment is stayed by appeal and bond given to suspend the judgment, in which case the motion may be made after the affirmation thereof." Genardini v. Kline, (Ariz. 1920) 190 Pac. 568.

c1. Appellate Jurisdiction and Procedure

(1) Right of Appeal (p. 676)

Restriction on right.—A state statute does not violate this section because it makes a judgment of an intermediate appellate court final unless such court shall grant a certificate of importance and appeal to the Supreme Court, or the Supreme Court shall require, by certiorari or otherwise, the case to be certified to the Supreme Court. McGinnis v. McGinnis, (1919) 289 Ill. 608, 124 N. E. 562.

(7) Limiting Time to Appeal [New] (p. 679)

A state statute providing that if a motion for a new trial is filed after the time to appeal has expired it shall not extend the time to appeal does not deny due process of law. Bates v. Ransome-Crummey Co., (Cal. App. 1919) 184 Pac. 39.

(8) Overruling Previous Decision [New] (p. 679)

The overruling of a prior decision under which an oil lease has been obtained is not a taking of property without due process of law. McCray v. Miller, (1920) 78 Okla. 16, 184 Pac. 781, 186 Pac. 1089.

8. Notice and Opportunity to Be Heard

a. In General (p. 679)

Judicial review.—The provisions of the Oklahoma laws for the enforcement by penalties of rate-fixing orders of the state corporation commission violate this amendment, because the only judicial review of such orders possible under the state laws is that arising in proceedings to punish for contempt, in which the penalties imposed for a refusal to obey such an order may be $500 for each offense, each day's continuance of failure or refusal to obey the order constituting a separate offense. Oklahoma Operating Co. v. Love, (1920) 252 U. S. 331, 40 S. Ct. 338, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) — (followed in Oklahoma Gin Co. v. Oklahoma, (1920) 252 U. S. 339, 40 S. Ct. 341, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, reversing (Okla. 1916) 158 Pac. 629), wherein the court said: "The order of the Commission prohibiting the company from charging, without its permission, rates higher than those prevailing in 1913, in effect prescribed maximum rates for the service. It was, therefore, a legislative order; and under the Fourteenth Amendment plaintiff was entitled to an opportunity for a review in the courts of its contention that the rates were not compensatory. Chicago, etc., Railway Co. v. Minnesota, 134 U. S. 418, 456-458, 10 Sup. Ct. 462, 33 L. Ed. 970; Ex parte Young, 209 U. S. 123, 165, 166, 28 Sup. Ct. 441, 52 L. Ed. 714, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 932, 14 Ann. Cas. 764. The Constitution of the state prohibited any of its courts from reviewing any action of the Commission within its authority except by way of appeal to the Supreme Court (article 9, section 20); and the Supreme Court had construed the Constitution and applicable provisions of the statutes as not permitting a direct appeal from orders fixing rates. Harriss-Irby Cotton Co. v. State, supra. On behalf of the Commission it was urged at the oral argument that a judicial review of the order fixing rates might have been had also by writ of mandamus or of prohibition issuing out of the Supreme Court of the state. But, in view of the provision of the state Constitution just referred to, it must be assumed, in the absence of a decision of a state court to the contrary, that neither remedy, even if otherwise available, could be used to review an order alleged to be void because confiscatory. The proviso 'that the writs of mandamus and prohibition shall lie from the Supreme Court to the Commission in all cases where such writs, respectively, would lie to any inferior court or officer,' appears to have no application here. The challenge of a prescribed rate as being confiscatory raises a question, not as to the scope of the Commission's authority, but of the correctness of the exercise of its judgment. Compare Hirsh v. Twyford, 40 Okl. 220, 230, 139 Pac. 313.

"So it appears that the only judicial review of an order fixing rates possible under the laws of the state was that arising in proceedings to punish for contempt. The Constitution endows the Commission with the powers of a court to enforce its orders by such proceedings. Article 9, sections 18, 19. By boldly violating an order a party against whom it was directed may provoke a complaint; and if the complaint results in a citation to show cause why he should not be punished for contempt, he may justify before the Commission by showing that the order violated was invalid, unjust or unreasonable. If he fails to satisfy the Commission that it erred in this respect, a judicial review is opened to him by way of appeal on the whole record to the Supreme Court. But the penalties, which may possibly be imposed, if he pursues this course without success, are such as might well deter even the boldest and most confident. The penalty for refusal to obey an order may be $500; and each day's continuance of the refusal after service of the order, it is declared, 'shall be a separate offense.' The penalty may apparently be imposed for each instance of violation of the order. In Oklahoma Gin Co. v. State, 251 U. S. —, 40 Sup. Ct. 341, 64 L. Ed. —, decided this day, it appears that the full penalty of $500, with the provision for the like penalty for each subsequent day's violation of the order, was imposed in each of three complaints there involved, although they were merely different instances of charges in excess of a single prescribed rate. Obviously a judicial review beset by such deterrents does not satisfy the constitutional requirements, even if otherwise adequate, and therefore the provisions of the acts relating to the enforcement of the rates by penalties are unconstitutional without regard to the question of the insufficiency of those rates."

c. Trial According to Applicable Mode of Procedure (p. 682)

Failure to hear cause in banc.—No federal constitutional right is violated because of the refusal to transfer a cause from the division of the highest court of the state which heard it to the court in banc. Goldsmith v. George G. Prendergast Constr. Co., (1920) 252 U. S. 12, 40 S. Ct. 273, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (1918) 273 Mo. 184, 201 S. W. 354.

x. Inquisition in Lunacy (p. 690)

The state alone, as parens patriae, is charged with the duty of caring for the insane within its borders, and may adopt whatever method of procedure it may desire for inquisition into their condition and the necessity for their confinement, provided the same is not in contravention of the Constitution or laws of the United States. Thus, where pursuant to a state statute an alleged insane person is personally examined by the committing magistrate and two physicians and is given an opportunity to be heard, there is no violation of this amendment. Shapley v. Cohoon, (D. C. Mass. 1918) 258 Fed. 752.

ji. Service of Process

(7) On Domestic Corporations (p. 695)

Outside county where suit brought.—Due process of law is not denied by a statute providing that "service of summons and other process upon the agent designated under the provisions of section 825 at any place in this state shall be sufficient service to give jurisdiction over such corporation to any of the courts of this state, whether the service was had upon said agent within the county where the suit is brought or is pending or not." Pekin Cooperage Co. v. Duty, (1919) 140 Ark. 135, 215 S. W. 715.

(16) Constructive Service

(a) In General (p. 700)

Rule in Indiana.—In Temperly v. Indianapolis, (Ind. 1920) 127 N. E. 149, the court said:

"It has been uniformly held in this state that notice by publication, given in conformity to the statutes authorizing proceedings for the location and construction of highways, drains, sewers, and other works of quasi public character, is such legal notice as to authorize a judgment ordering the improvement and fixing a lien against real estate affected thereby. Such a notice in such a proceeding is sufficient to confer jurisdiction on the court, and such a judgment in pursuance thereof is rendered in accordance with due process of law."

17. Summary Destruction of Property

a. In General (p. 716)

Seizure of property without opportunity to dispose of same after passage of act making its possession unlawful.—Where a commodity constituting property, not inherently dangerous to persons or to their fundamental rights, or injurious to the public welfare because of its mere possession, is lawfully possessed before and at the time of the adoption or enactment of laws forbidding its possession, and such continued possession is not for an unlawful purpose or use, and is not an incipient nuisance, and does not jeopardize the rights of others or the public welfare, and when a reasonable opportunity to lawfully dispose of the commodity before its seizure is not afforded, the enforcement of such laws, as against such previously acquired lawful possession, may deprive persons of property without due process of law, in violation of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Federal Constitution. Such enforcement may also violate property rights secured by the state constitution. In re Seven Barrels of Wine, (Fla. 1920) 83 So. 627.

Summary destruction of animals.—A state statute is unconstitutional which authorizes any officer or agent of any society for the prevention of cruelty to animals to destroy forthwith any animal found abandoned or not properly cared for, appearing in the judgment of two reputable persons called by him to view the same in his presence, to be diseased or injured or in a condition from lack of food, water or shelter, past recovery, for any useful purpose. Randall v. Patch, (1919) 118 Me. 303, 108 Atl. 97, 8 A. L. R. 65, wherein the court said: "But the defendant urges that a horse which has been decided by two reputable persons to be injured or diseased and past recovery for useful purpose is no longer property. The word 'property,' he contends, does not include a 'wreck of what was once a steed,' having no utility and no value. This reasoning, however, begs the question. The plaintiff claims that his animal is not past recovery and that it has value. To conclusively determine this question against the plaintiff without notice or hearing would be to nullify the constitutional guaranty.

"The defendant argues that the determination of the necessity or expediency of any legal enactment is within the exclusive province of the Legislature. This is true. The court cannot declare a law to be void for the reason that it is unnecessary or inexpedient; but it may be the duty of the court to pronounce invalid an act which violates an express mandate of the Constitution, even if the act is expedient and has been determined by the Legislature to be necessary.

"Again, the defendant contends that section 59 is a valid exercise of the police power. No court has ever undertaken to define the limits of the police power of the state. New occasions teach new applications of it. It is based upon society's right of self-defense and is coextensive with that right. State v. Starkey, 112 Me. 12, 90 Atl. 431, Ann. Cas. 1917A, 196.

"Under the police power the use by the owner of many species of private property has been held to be subject to uncompensated restriction and regulation. For numerous illustrations see State v. Robb, 100 Me. 186, 60 Atl. 874, 4 Ann. Cas. 275; Opinion of Justices, 103 Me. 506, 69 Atl. 627, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 422, 13 Ann. Cas. 745; State v. Starkey, 112 Me. 10, 90 Atl. 431, Ann. Cas. 1917A, 196.

"In cases of extreme and urgent necessity, as conflagrations (Farmer v. Portland, 63 Me. 47), or epidemics (Seavey v. Preble, 64 Me. 121), it justifies the destruction of property without preliminary notice or hearing, and even without compensation.

"But section 59 provides for the destruction of property, and not for restrictions upon or regulation of its use, and it cannot be justified as a measure of urgent necessity.

"If section 59, now as in its original form in the act of 1883, related to abandoned animals merely, our conclusion might be different. The destruction by public authority of an abandoned animal deprives nobody of property. But the section in its present form does not refer to abandoned animals only. It purports to authorize the defendant to do, without notice or hearing, what the agreed statement says he did, to wit, that he 'took the horse from the plaintiff's possession against his objection' and killed it. It thus contravenes an explicit constitutional mandate."

c. Property Illegally Used (p. 717)

Seizure of automobile conveying contraband deer.—In Gemert v. Pooler, (Wis. 1920) 177 N. W. 1, it was held that a statute authorizing the confiscation of property used in transporting game during the closed season was constitutional where it appeared that while that particular statute did not provide for notice and hearing other statutes provided for the recovery back of forfeited property.

Vehicle used to transport intoxicating liquors.—A state statute providing for the condemnation of vehicles being used to transport prohibited liquors is valid. State v. Killens, (1920) 149 Ga. 735, 101 S. E. 911.

19. Regulating Priorities

a. Displacing Priority of Liens (p. 719)

A state insolvency law divesting attachments levied before the commencement of the insolvency proceeding is valid. Greene v. Rice, (1919) 32 Idaho 504, 186 Pac. 249.

d. Giving Water Rents Priority of Lien (p. 720)

Imposing lien on property for water furnished tenants.—A landlord's property is not taken without due process of law by the lien imposed upon the premises by a city charter for water supplied to a tenant by the city, since the landlord's consent may be implied from the leasing with knowledge of the law—especially as the lease as made contemplated the use of the water by the tenant and provided, so far as the landlord could, for the payment of the water charges; and it is of no consequence at whose request the water meters were installed. Dunbar v. New York, (1920) 251 U. S. 516, 40 S. Ct. 250, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) — (affirming (1917) 177 App. Div. 647, 164 N. Y. S. 519), wherein the court said:

"Plaintiff's argument is somewhat difficult to state briefly. It commences by declaring that the question presented was left open in Provident Inst. for Sav. v. Jersey City, 113 U. S. 506, 28 L. ed. 1102, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 612, which sustained the postponement of mortgages to the lien of water rents because it was said in that case that the complainant in the case knew what the law was when the mortgages were taken, and therefore 'its own voluntary act, its own consent,' was 'an element in the transaction.'"

"Counsel assumes that the case presented an instance of an express consent. In that counsel is mistaken. The consent was implied from the fact that the law imposing the water rents preceded the mortgages. And so in the water charge in controversy, it was imposed and made a lien on plaintiff's property by the charter of the city, and therefore the supreme court at the first instance, and afterwards in appellate division, and we may assume by the court of appeals, decided that the consent of plaintiff could be implied, and any other conclusion would have been impossible. A city without water would be a desolate place, and if plaintiff's property was in such condition it would partake of the desolation. And, as a supply of water is necessary, it is only an ordinary and legal exertion of government to provide means for its compulsory compensation.

"It is of no consequence, therefore, at whose request the meters were installed in the property. The meters, as observed by the appellate division, were 'not the instrumentalities for furnishing the water,' they only registered its consumption. And besides, the lease made by plaintiff contemplated the use of water by the lessees, and provided, as far as the lessor (plaintiff) could, for the payment of the charges for it. That her tenants defaulted in their obligation by reason of their bankruptcy was her misfortune, but it did not relieve the property, which, we may say, would be unfit for human habitation if it could not get water.

"Counsel appear to rely on prior decisions of the court for relief of plaintiff. One in the supreme court, in which, it is said, a doubt was intimated whether a statute making a lessor liable for the personal debt of a lessee for water would be constitutional; and one of the court of appeals, which, to quote counsel, 'having decided in 1910, three years prior to the inception of the charges for which the lien is claimed, that the statute meant what the earlier case had suggested, the lien became unconstitutional,' and plaintiff cannot be charged with an 'implication of assent' to it. Without attempting an estimate of the contention it is enough to say that the decisions in this case and other cases are opposed to the contention, and that, besides, no constitutional rights can be based on the error of prior decisions."

20. Relation of Employer and Employee

a. Regulating Payment of Wages (p. 721)

Wages and period of employment regulated.—A state statute is unconstitutional which undertakes to fix the wages which a person holding a theatrical license shall pay to a person employed by him to guard against danger by fire, to forbid the discharge of such person so employed without the consent of the board of fire commissioners and to forbid a reduction in the wages of such employee without the consent of the board of fire commissioners. O'Neil v. Providence Amusement Co., (R. I. 1920) 108 Atl. 887, wherein the court, after holding that the carrying on of a theatre or place of amusement was a private business, said: "The case of Wilson v. New, 243 U. S. 332, 37 Sup. Ct. 298, 61 L. Ed. 755, L. R. A. 1917E 938, Ann. Cas. 1918A 1024, is referred to in the brief of the complainant, and also in the brief of the defendant. It involves the constitutionality of an act of Congress popularly known as the Adamson Act [see 1918 Supp. Fed. Stat. Ann. p. 754]. We do not deem it necessary to discuss that case at great length. The act provided, among other things, that, pending the report of a commission to investigate and deal with the wages of trainmen on interstate railroads, the then existing rate of compensation should 'not be reduced below the present standard day's wage.' It differs materially from the case at bar, in that it was a temporary expedient, resorted to in the face of an emergency. It did not undertake to fix a permanent wage, but to retain the already existing wage for a limited period of 30 days, until, through an investigation then progressing, certain rights might be determined, 'leaving employers and employees free as to the subject of wages to govern their relations by their own agreements after the specified time.' The act was intended as an exercise of governmental power over a matter of interstate commerce or a business affected with a public interest. The act was passed to meet an emergency arising from a nation-wide dispute over wages between railroad companies and their train operatives, in which a general strike was threatened, which would bring about commercial paralysis and grave loss and suffering; the parties concerned being unable to agree. It was designed to bridge over a limited period within which the parties might reach an agreement. The question in that case, as stated by the court in its opinion, was:

"Did Congress have power under the circumstances stated, that is, in dealing with the dispute between the employers and employees as to wages, . . . to create by legislative action a standard of wages to be operative upon the employers and employees for such reasonable time as it deemed necessary to afford an opportunity for the meeting of the minds of employers and employees on the subject of wages? Or, in other words, did it have the power, in order to prevent the interruption of interstate commerce, to exert its will to supply the absence of a wage scale resulting from the disagreement as to wages between the employers and employees, and to make its will on that subject controlling for the limited period provided for?"

"The difference between the Adamson Law and the act which we are considering, which fixes a permanent wage in the absence of any emergency, is so apparent that it need not be specifically pointed out. That the court recognizes a distinction between employment in a private business and an employment in a business charged with a public interest, and that its decision is not intended to apply to the former, is fully evidenced in the opinion itself, wherein it is stated:

"Whatever would be the right of an employee engaged in a private business to demand such wages as he desires, to leave the employment if he does not get them, and by concert of action to agree with others to leave upon the same condition, such rights are necessarily subject to limitation when employment is accepted in a business charged with a public interest."

"And it may be fairly said that the court confined itself solely to dealing with an employment charged with a public interest."

h. Workmen's Compensation Law (p. 726)

Compensation for facial or head disfigurement.—The due process of law clause does not require a state to make loss of earning power the sole basis for a statutory compulsory compensation scheme for workmen injured with fault of the employer, and the embodiment by amendment in the New York compulsory Workmen's Compensation Law of a provision for a special allowance of compensation not to exceed $3,500 for serious facial or head disfigurement, irrespective of the compensation allowed for mere inability to work, is not forbidden by the due process of law clause as being arbitrary or oppressive, but is a valid exercise of the police power of the state.

Whether the compensation awarded for serious facial or head disfigurement should be made in combination with or independent of the compensation allowed for mere inability to work is a mere matter of detail for the state to determine, so far as any question of repugnancy to the due process of law clause is concerned, as is also the question whether the compensation should be paid in a single sum, or in instalments. New York Cent. R. Co. v. Bianc, (1919) 250 U. S. 596, 40 S. Ct. 44, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (1919) 226 N. Y. 586; American Knife Co. v. Sweeting, 250 U. S. 596, affirming 226 N. Y. 190, 123 N. 23. Railroad Companies

Right of private corporation operating railroad in connection with business to discontinue same.—A corporation carrying on a sawmill and lumber business, which has granted to the public an interest in a railroad operated in connection with its business by doing a small business as a common carrier thereon, may withdraw its grant by discontinuing the use of the road when such use can be kept up only at a loss. It cannot be compelled to continue the operation of the railroad after it has ceased to be profitable, merely because a profit would be derived from the entire business, including the operation of the railroad. And it cannot be compelled to continue the operation of the road at a loss on the ground that the owner had failed to petition the Commission for leave to discontinue the business of the railroad, as required by a local law, where the compulsory operation of the railroad would amount to a taking of property without due process of law. Brooks-Scanlon Co. v. Louisiana R. Commission, (1920) 251 U. S. 396, 40 S. Ct. 183, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, reversing (1919) 144 La. 1086, 81 So. 727.

c. Regulating Rates

(1) In General (p. 737)

Questions of fact.—The question what formula for dividing charges and expenses common to railway freight and passenger services, and not capable of direct allocation, the trial court should adopt in determining whether a statutory maximum passenger rate is confiscatory, is at present one of fact, not of law, and the trial court's decision in the matter will not be disturbed by appeal, where the appellate court is unable clearly to say that the trial court erred in adopting the method there pursued. Groesbeck v. Duluth, etc., R. Co., (1919) 250 U. S. 607, 40 S. Ct. 38, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —.

Order of reparation by Commission made prima facie evidence.—Where a state statute provides for a hearing before a commission on a complaint that rates are unjust, followed by an order of reparation to be prima facie evidence if an action is maintained to recover the amount of damages contained in the order, and awarded in consequence of unjust collections, such statute does not violate the due process clause of the Constitution. New York, etc., Co. v. New York Cent. R. Co., (Pa. 1920) 110 Atl. 286.

(2) To Establish Equality in Rates (p. 739)

Treble damages and attorney's fees.—A statute permitting the recovery of treble damages and attorney's fees in an action by a shipper against a carrier for unlawful discrimination does not deny due process of law. Alexander v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., (Mo. 1920) 221 S. W. 712.

(5) Regulating Passenger Fares

(a) In General (p. 741)

The imposition of severe penalties as a means of enforcing railway passenger rates prescribed by statute is not a denial of due process of law in a case in which it does not appear that the carrier was not afforded an adequate opportunity for safely testing the validity of the rate, or that its deviation therefrom proceeded from any belief that the rate was invalid. Moreover, so far as due process of law is concerned, the penalties imposed upon a railway company which exacts more than the prescribed passenger fares may be given to the aggrieved passenger, to be enforced by private suit, and such penalties need not be confined or apportioned to his loss or damage. Thus the penalties prescribed by a statute giving to a passenger aggrieved by a carrier's exaction of a fare in excess of the prescribed rate the right to recover in a civil suit not less than $50 nor more than $300 and costs of suit, including a reasonable attorney's fee, cannot be said to be so severe and oppressive as to be wholly disproportionate to the offense or obviously unreasonable, and hence to amount to a denial of due process of law. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Williams, (1919) 251 U. S. 63, 40 S. Ct. 71, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) — (affirming (1917) 131 Ark. 442, 199 S. W. 376), wherein the court said:

"It is true that the imposition of severe penalties as a means of enforcing a rate, such as was prescribed in this instance, is in contravention of due process of law, where no adequate opportunity is afforded the carrier for safely testing, in an appropriate judicial proceeding, the validity of the rate—that is, whether it is confiscatory or otherwise—before any liability for the penalties attaches. The reasons why this is so are set forth fully and plainly in several recent decisions and need not be repeated now. Ex parte Young, 209 U. S. 123, 147, 52 L. ed. 714, 723, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 932, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 441, 14 Ann. Cas. 764; Willcox v. Consolidated Gas Co. 212 U. S. 19, 53, 53 L. ed. 382, 400, 48 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1134, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 192, 15 Ann. Cas. 1034; Missouri P. R. Co. v. Nebraska, 217 U. S. 196, 207, 208, 54 L. ed. 727, 731, 732, 30 Sup. Ct. Rep. 461, 18 Ann. Cas. 989; Missouri P. R. Co. v. Tucker, 230 U. S. 340, 57 L. ed. 1507, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 961; Wadley Southern R. Co. v. Georgia, 235 U. S. 651, 659, et seq., 59 L. ed. 405, 410, P. U. R. 1915A, 106, 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 214.

"And it also is true that where such an opportunity is afforded and the rate adjudged valid, or the carrier fails to avail itself of the opportunity, it then is admissible, so far as due process of law is concerned, for the state to enforce adherence to the rate by imposing substantial penalties for deviations from it. Wadley Southern R. Co. v. Georgia, supra, p. 667 et seq.; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Texas, 246 U. S. 58, 62, 62 L. ed. 574, 578, 38 Sup. Ct. Rep. 236.

"Here it does not appear that the carrier had not been afforded an adequate opportunity for safely testing the validity of the rate, or that its deviation therefrom proceeded from any belief that the rate was invalid. On the contrary, it is practically conceded—and we judicially know—that if the carrier really regarded the rate as confiscatory, the way was open to secure a determination of that question by a suit in equity against the Railroad Commission of the state, during the pendency of which the operation of the penalty provision could have been suspended by injunction. Wadley Southern R. Co. v. Georgia, supra. See also Allen v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. 230 U. S. 553, 57 L. ed. 1625, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1030; Rowland v. Boyle, 244 U. S. 106, 61 L. ed. 1022, P. U. R. 1917C, 685, 37 Sup. Ct. Rep. 577; St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. McKnight, 244 U. S. 368, 61 L. ed. 1200, 37 Sup. Ct. Rep. 611. And the record shows that at the trial the carrier not only did not raise any question about the correct fare, but proposed and secured an instruction to the jury wherein the prescribed rate was recognized as controlling.

"It therefore is plain that the first branch of the company's contention cannot prevail.

"The second branch is more strongly urged, and we now turn to it. The provision assailed is essentially penal, because primarily intended to punish the carrier for taking more than the prescribed rate. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Gill, 54 Ark. 101, 106, 11 L. R. A. 452, 15 S. W. 18; St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Waldrop, 93 Ark. 42, 45, 123 S. W. 778. True, the penalty goes to the aggrieved passenger, and not the state, and is to be enforced by a private, and not a public, suit. But this is not contrary to due process of law; for, as is said in Missouri P. R. Co. v. Humes, 115 U. S. 512, 523, 29 L. ed. 463, 466, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 110, 'the power of the state to impose fines and penalties for a violation of its statutory requirements is coeval with the government; and the mode in which they shall be enforced, whether at the suit of the private party, or at the suit of the public, and what disposition shall be made of the amounts collected, are merely matters of legislative discretion.' Nor does giving the penalty to the aggrieved passenger require that it be confined or proportioned to his loss or damages; for, as it is imposed as a punishment for the violation of a public law, the legislature may adjust its amount to the public wrong rather than the private injury, just as if it were going to the state. See Marvin v. Trout, 199 U. S. 212, 225, 50 L. ed. 157, 162, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 31.

"The ultimate question is whether a penalty of not less than $50 and not more than $300 for the offense in question can be said to bring the provision describing it into conflict with the due process of law clause of the 14th Amendment.

"That this clause places a limitation upon the power of the states to prescribe penalties for violations of their laws has been fully recognized, but always with the express or tacit qualification that the states still possess a wide latitude of discretion in the matter, and that their enactments transcend the limitation only where the penalty prescribed is so severe and oppressive as to be wholly disproportioned to the offense and obviously unreasonable. Coffey v. Harlan County, 204 U. S. 659, 662, 51 L. ed. 666, 668, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 305; Seaboard Air Line R. Co. v. Seegers, 207 U. S. 73, 78, 52 L. ed. 108, 110, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 28; Waters-Pierce Oil Co. v. Texas, 212 U. S. 86, 111, 53 L. ed. 417, 430, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 220; Collins v. Johnston, 237 U. S. 502, 510, 59 L. ed. 1071, 1079, 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 649."

(6) Must be Reasonable

(b) Question of Reasonableness Is Judicial (p. 742)

Withholding from the courts power to determine the question of confiscation according to their own independent judgment, when the act of a state public service commission in fixing the value of a water company's property for rate-making purposes comes to be considered on appeal, as is done by the Pennsylvania Public Service Company Law of July 26, 1913, as construed by the highest state court, must be deemed to deny due process of law, in the absence of a ruling by that court that the remedy by injunction provided for by section 31 of that act affords adequate opportunity for testing judicially an order of the commission, alleged to be confiscatory. Ohio Valley Water Co. v. Ben Avon Borough, (1920) 253 U. S. 287, 40 S. Ct. 527, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —. reversing (1918) 260 Pa. St. 289, 103 Atl. 744.

(7) Must Admit of Earning Just Compensation (p. 744)

To same effect as original annotation, see San Antonio Public Service Co. v. San Antonio, (W. D. Tex. 1919) 257 Fed. 467.

Treating passenger service as whole.—The passenger service, including sleeping car, parlor car, and dining car service, should be treated as a whole in determining whether a statutory two cent per mile maximum passenger rate is confiscatory, notwithstanding the fact that a local statute permits railroads to make special charges for these special services in addition to the regular passenger fares allowed by law. Groesbeck v. Duluth, etc., R. Co., (1919) 250 U. S. 607, 40 S. Ct. 38, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —.

(10) Whether Compensatory as to Entire Line (p. 749)

Every part of the railway system over which a passenger is entitled by a state statute to ride for a fare of two cents per mile must, whether profitable or unprofitable, be included in the computation taken to determine whether the prescribed rate is confiscatory, at least in the absence of illegality or mismanagement in the acquisition or operation of the particular part of the system sought to be excluded from such computation—and it is immaterial that an extension of the railway company's service was furnished by acquiring traffic rights rather than by building an independent line. Groesbeck v. Duluth, etc., R. Co., (1919) 250 U. S. 607, 40 S. Ct. 38, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —.

n. Requiring Railroad to Install Scale at Station (p. 754)

Railway companies may not, consistently with due process of law, be compelled by a state administrative order to install cattle-weighing scales at stations from which cattle are shipped. Great Northern R. Co. v. Cahill, (1920) 253 U. S. 71, 40 S. Ct. 457, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, reversing (1918) 40 S. D. 55, 166 N. W. 306.

xI. Street Railways

(1) In General (p. 768)

Contractual duty to pave as dependent on financial status.—A street railway company's contractual duty to repave that part of a street which lies between its tracks and for one foot outside cannot be evaded on the theory that this additional burden will reduce its income below a reasonable return on the investment. Milwaukee Electric R., etc., Co. v. Wisconsin, (1920) 252 U. S. 100, 40 S. Ct. 306, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) — (affirming (1917) 166 Wis. 163, 164 N. W. 844), wherein the court said: "The financial condition of a public service corporation is a fact properly to be considered when determining the reasonableness of an order directing an unremunerative extension of facilities, or forbidding their abandonment. Mississippi R. Commission v. Mobile & O. R. Co. 244 U. S. 388, 61 L. ed. 1216, 37 Sup. Ct. Rep. 802; New York ex rel. New York & Q. Gas Co. v. McCall, 245 U. S. 345, 350, 62 L. ed. 337, 341, P. U. R. 1918A, 792, 38 Sup. Ct. Rep. 122. But there is no warrant in law for the contention that merely because its business fails to earn full 6 per cent upon the value of the property used, the company can escape either obligations voluntarily assumed or burdens imposed in the ordinary exercise of the police power. Compare Missouri P. R. Co. v. Kansas, 216 U. S. 262, 279, 54 L. ed. 472, 479, 30 Sup. Ct. Rep. 330; Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Arkansas, 219 U. S. 453, 55 L. ed. 290, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 275; Missouri P. R. Co. v. Omaha, 235 U. S. 121, 59 L. ed. 157, 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 82."

Regulations affecting railroad track laid in public street.—A railroad track laid in a public street, though by express public grant, is subject to such regulations as are reasonably necessary to secure the public safety; for this power "is inalienable even by express grant," and its legitimate exertion contravenes neither the contract clause of the Constitution nor the due process clauses of the Fourteenth Amendment. . . . Of course, all regulations of this class are subject to judicial scrutiny, and when they are found to be plainly unreasonable and arbitrary must be pronounced invalid, as transcending that power and falling within the condemnation of one or both, as the case may be, of those constitutional restrictions." Denver, etc., R. Co. v. Denver, (1919) 250 U. S. 241, 243, 39 S. Ct. 450, 451, 63 U. S. (L. ed.) 958, 961; Connecticut Co. v. Stamford, (Conn. 1920) 110 Atl. 554.

Requiring street railway to use two men in operating cars.—A municipal ordinance, confessedly a valid exercise of the police power when adopted, under which each street car used in the city streets must be operated during designated hours by two persons, a motorman and a conductor, cannot be said to be so arbitrary and confiscatory as to deny due process of law when so applied as to prohibit the use on a line on which the travel is heavy at times, and which has at least one steep grade, of a new type of car still in the experimental stage, so equipped that it may plausibly be contended that if all the appliances work as it is intended that they shall, it may be operated at a reduced cost by one motorman, with a high degree of safety to the public in streets where the traffic is not heavy. Sullivan v. Shreveport, (1919) 251 U. S. 169, 40 S. Ct. 102, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (1918) 142 La. 573, 77 So. 286.

26. Water Companies

a. In General (p. 773)

To compel a water company to continue business at a loss is a taking of property without due process of law and an order of a public service commission to that effect is invalid. Lyon v. Railroad Commission, (Cal. 1920) 190 Pac. 795.

c. Regulating Rates (p. 774)

Independently of a right to regulate and control the rates to be charged for public service reserved in a grant of a franchise or right to use the city streets, a city or other municipality has no power to regulate rates to be charged by water, lighting, or other public service corporations, in the absence of express or plain legislative authority to do so, nor does such authority arise from the power to regulate the opening and use of streets, nor from a grant of the general right to control and regulate the right to erect works and lay pipes in the city streets. Winchester v. Winchester Water Works Co., (1920) 251 U. S. 192, 40 S. Ct. 123, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —.

27. Gas and Electric Companies

b. Regulating Rates (p. 776)

Reasonable rates for electric energy, prescribed by a state in the exercise of its police power, through the instrumentality of its public service commission, are not repugnant to the contract or due process of law clauses of the Federal Constitution merely because, if given effect, they will supersede the rates designated in a private contract between the company and a customer, entered into prior to the enactment of the law creating the commission. Mill Creek Coal, etc., Co. v. Public Service Commission, (W. Va. 1919) 100 S. E. 556, 7 A. L. R. 1081.

f. Requiring Removal from Streets of Poles, Wires, and Conduits (p. 780)

A municipality may not, consistently with this amendment, as a matter of public right, clear a space for the construction of its own street lighting system by removing or relocating the instrumentalities of a privately owned lighting system occupying the public streets under a franchise legally granted, without compensating the owner of such system for the rights appropriated. Los Angeles v. Los Angeles Gas, etc., Corp., (1919) 251 U. S. 32, 40 S. Ct. 76, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (S. D. Cal. 1917) 241 Fed. 912.

37. Control of Municipal Corporations

a. In General (p. 792)

Regulation of municipal waterworks.—Chapter 47, Laws 1919, which limits and restricts the application of the revenue derived by municipalities from public utilities, and authorizes the appointment of a receiver for such public utility upon the failure of the municipal authorities to comply with the statute, does not deprive a municipality of its property without due process of law, because: (1) full judicial hearing is accorded; and (2) the property is not taken from the city, but is preserved and protected for the benefit of the city and its inhabitants. Dreyfus v. Socorro, (N. M. 1920) 189 Pac. 878.

38. Regulating Manufacture and Sale of Goods

b. Food Laws Generally (p. 801)

State price regulation measure giving to a trade commission power to establish maximum prices in respect to all commodities is invalid. A. M. Holter Hardware Co. v. Boyle, (D. C. Mont. 1920) 263 Fed. 134.

41. Eminent Domain

i. Of Water-Power to Generate Electricity (p. 821)

To the same effect as the original annotation, see Rockingham County Light, etc., Power Co. v. Philbrick, (N. H. 1919) 108 Atl. 813.

k. Question of Necessity (p. 822)

"Where the intended use is public, the necessity and expediency of the taking may be determined by such agency and in such mode as the state may designate. They are legislative questions, no matter who may be charged with their decision, and a hearing thereon is not essential to due process in the sense of the 14th Amendment. Mississippi & R. River Boom Co. v. Patterson, 98 U. S. 403, 406, 25 L. ed. 206, 207; A. Backus, Jr., & Sons v. Fort Street Union Depot Co., 169 U. S. 557, 568, 42 L. ed. 853, 858, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 445; Adirondack R. Co. v. New York, 176 U. S. 335, 349, 44 L. ed. 492, 499, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 460; Sears v. Akron, 246 U. S. 242, 251, 62 L. ed. 688, 698, 38 Sup. Ct. Rep. 245." Bragg v. Weaver, (1919) 251 U. S. 57, 40 S. Ct. 62, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —.

q. Providing for Hearing (p. 825)

"But it is essential to due process that the mode of determining the compensation be such as to afford the owner an opportunity to be heard. Among several admissible modes is that of causing the amount to be assessed by viewers, subject to an appeal to a court, carrying with it a right to have the matter determined upon a full trial. United States v. Jones, 109 U. S. 513, 519, 27 L. ed. 1015, 1017, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep. 346; A. Backus, Jr., & Sons v. Fort Street Union Depot Co., 169 U. S. 569, 42 L. ed. 859, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 445. And where this mode is adopted due process does not require that a hearing before the viewers be afforded, but is satisfied by the full hearing that may be obtained by exercising the right to appeal. Lent v. Tillson, 140 U. S. 316, 326, et seq., 35 L. ed. 419, 424, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 825; Winona & St. P. Land Co. v. Minnesota, 159 U. S. 526, 537, 40 L. ed. 247, 251, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 83; Wells, F. & Co. v. Nevada, 248 U. S. 165, 168, 63 L. ed. 190, 192, 39 Sup. Ct. Rep. 62. And see Capital Traction Co. v. Hof, 174 U. S. 1, 18-30, 45, 43 L. ed. 873, 879-883, 889, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 580." Bragg v. Weaver, (1919) 251 U. S. 57, 40 S. Ct. 62, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —.

a. Must Be Provision for Compensation

(1) In General (p. 825)

Due process of law requires compensation.—The property rights, if any, of one contracting with a state for the construction of a waterway, cannot be said to have been taken without due process of law by state legislation vacating a portion of such waterway and vesting title thereto in a municipal corporation, where there was adequate provision in the state law for assured payment without unreasonable delay of any compensation due such contractor on account of such taking. Hayes v. Seattle, (1920) 251 U. S. 233, 40 S. Ct. 125, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (W. D. Wash. 1915) 226 Fed. 287.

(9) May Authorize Possession Before Determination of Amount (p. 829)

Where adequate provision is made for the certain payment without unreasonable delay of compensation for property taken by eminent domain, the taking does not contravene due process of law merely because it precedes the ascertainment of what compensation is just. Bragg v. Weaver, (1919) 251 U. S. 57, 40 S. Ct. 62, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —.

42. Regulating Pursuit of Occupations

a. Practice of Medicine

(1) In General (p. 830)

Notice and opportunity to be heard are essential to the validity of a proceeding before the Board of Medical Examiners to revoke the license of a physician for unprofessional conduct. Suckow v. Medical Examiner, (Cal. 1920) 187 Pac. 965.

43. As Affecting Conveyance of or Title to Land

c. Restraining Right of Alienation (p. 837)

Foreign corporations.—A state statute under which conveyances to a foreign corporation of real property situated within the state are invalid, though executed and delivered in another state, if the grantee had not theretofore filed a copy of its charter with the secretary of state, does not take property without due process of law. Munday v. Wisconsin Trust Co., (1920) 252 U. S. 499, 40 S. Ct. 365, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (1918) 168 Wis. 31, 168 N. W. 393, 169 N. W. 612.

107. Taxation

a. In General (p. 860)

Imposition of occupational tax.—A state may constitutionally impose an occupational tax which is in no sense a tax upon property but is well understood to be a tax on the right to carry on trade or to transact business. State v. Carrel, (1919) 99 Ohio St. 220, 124 N. E. 134.

b. For Public Purposes (p. 861)

Carrying on of various enterprises by state.—State taxation to enable the state of North Dakota to carry out such enterprises as a state bank, a state warehouse, elevator, and flour mill system, and a state home building project, all of which have been sanctioned by united action of the people of the state, its legislature, and its courts, cannot be said to deny taxpayers the protection which the constitutional guaranty of due process of law affords against the taking of property for uses that are private. Green v. Frazier, (1920) 253 U. S. 233, 40 S. Ct. 499, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (N. D. 1920) 176 N. W. 11), wherein the court said: "What is a public purpose has given rise to no little judicial consideration. Courts, as a rule, have attempted no judicial definition of a 'public' as distinguished from a 'private' purpose, but have left each case to be determined by its own peculiar circumstances. Gray, Limitations of Taxing Power, § 176: 'Necessity alone is not the test by which the limits of state authority in this direction are to be defined, but a wise statesmanship must look beyond the expenditures which are absolutely needful to the continued existence of organized government, and embrace others which may tend to make that government subserve the general well-being of society, and advance the present and prospective happiness and prosperity of the people.' Cooley, Justice, in People ex rel. Detroit & H. R. Co. v. Salem, 20 Mich. 452, 4 Am. Rep. 400. Questions of policy are not submitted to judicial determination, and the courts have no general authority of supervision over the exercise of discretion which, under our system, is reposed in the people or other departments of government. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. McGuire, 219 U. S. 549, 569, 55 L. ed. 328, 339, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 259; German Alliance Ins. Co. v. Lewis, 233 U. S. 389, 58 L. ed. 1011, L. R. A. 1915C, 1189, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 612.

"With the wisdom of such legislation, and the soundness of the economic policy involved, we are not concerned. Whether it will result in ultimate good or harm it is not within our province to inquire.

"We come now to examine the grounds upon which the supreme court of North Dakota held this legislation not to amount to a taking of property without due process of law. The questions involved were given elaborate consideration in that court, and it held, concerning what may in general terms be denominated the 'banking legislation,' that it was justified for the purpose of providing banking facilities, and to enable the state to carry out the purposes of the other acts, of which the Mill & Elevator Association Act is the principal one. It justified the Mill & Elevator Association Act by the peculiar situation in the state of North Dakota, and particularly by the great agricultural industry of the state. It estimated from facts of which it was authorized to take judicial notice, that 90 per cent of the wealth produced by the state was from agriculture; and stated that upon the prosperity and welfare of that industry other business and pursuits carried on in the state were largely dependent; that the state produced 125,000,000 bushels of wheat each year. The manner in which the present system of transporting and marketing this great crop prevents the realization of what are deemed just prices was elaborately stated. It was affirmed that the annual loss from these sources (including the loss of fertility to the soil and the failure to feed the by-products of grain to stock within the state) amounted to fifty-five millions of dollars to the wheat raisers of North Dakota. It answered the contention that the industries involved were private in their nature, by stating that all of them belonged to the state of North Dakota, and therefore the activities authorized by the legislation were to be distinguished from business of a private nature having private gain for its objective.

"As to the Home Building Act, that was sustained because of the promotion of the general welfare in providing homes for the people, a large proportion of whom were tenants, moving from place to place. It was believed and affirmed by the supreme court of North Dakota that the opportunity to secure and maintain homes would promote the general welfare, and that the provisions of the statutes to enable this feature of the system to become effective would redound to the general benefit.

"As we have said, the question for us to consider and determine is whether this system of legislation is violative of the Federal Constitution because it amounts to a taking of property without due process of law. The precise question herein involved, so far as we have been able to discover, has never been presented to this court. The nearest approach to it is found in Jones v. Portland, 245 U. S. 217, 62 L. ed. 252, L. R. A. 1918C, 765, 38 Sup. Ct. Rep. 112, Ann. Cas. 1918E, 660, in which we held that an act of the state of Maine, authorizing cities or towns to establish and maintain wood, coal, and fuel yards for the purpose of selling these necessities to the inhabitants of cities and towns, did not deprive taxpayers of due process of law within the meaning of the 14th Amendment. In that case we reiterated the attitude of this court towards state legislation, and repeated what had been said before, that what was or was not a public use was a question concerning which local authority, legislative and judicial, had especial means of securing information to enable them to form a judgment; and particularly, that the judgment of the highest court of the state, declaring a given use to be public in its nature, would be accepted by this court unless clearly unfounded. In that case the previous decisions of this court, sustaining this proposition, were cited with approval, and a quotation was made from the opinion of the supreme court of Maine, justifying the legislation under the conditions prevailing in that state. We think the principle of that decision is applicable here.

"This is not a case of undertaking to aid private institutions by public taxation, as was the fact in Citizens' Sav. & L. Assn. v. Topeka, 20 Wall. 665, 22 L. ed. 461. In many instances states and municipalities have in late years seen fit to enter upon projects to promote the public welfare which, in the past, have been considered entirely within the domain of private enterprise.

"Under the peculiar conditions existing in North Dakota, which are emphasized in the opinion of its highest court, if the state sees fit to enter upon such enterprises as are here involved, with the sanction of its Constitution, its legislature, and its people, we are not prepared to say that it is within the authority of this court, in enforcing the observance of the 14th Amendment, to set aside such action by judicial decision."

In Scott v. Frazier, (D. C. N. D. 1919) 258 Fed. 669, wherein it was held that the final decision of whether a tax is for a public purpose is for the courts and not the legislature, the court said:

"The Fourteenth Amendment contains no express language limiting the taxing power of states. Laws have been condemned by holding that a tax for a purely private purpose deprives the taxpayer of his property without due process of law. When is a tax for a 'purely private purpose' within this rule?

"(a) The only cases in the federal courts in which laws have been condemned are those in which bonds or public funds were given as a mere gratuity to a privately owned manufacturing enterprise to encourage its establishment within the city. Such are the cases cited by counsel for plaintiff. Loan Association v. Topeka, 20 Wall. 655, 22 L. Ed. 456; City of Parkersburg v. Brown, 106 U. S. 487, 1 Sup. Ct. 442, 27 L. Ed. 238; Cole v. City of La Grange, 113 U. S. 1, 5 Sup. Ct. 416, 28 L. Ed. 896; Dodge v. Mission Township, 107 Fed. 827, 46 C. C. A. 661, 54 L. R. A. 242.

"(b) I have not been able to discover any instance in which the Supreme Court has held invalid an exercise of the taxing power of the state for establishing and maintaining an industry which was owned by the state or a municipality. Such is the character of all the laws here assailed. The industries are to be owned by the state or cities.

The latest expression of the Supreme Court on the subject is Jones v. City of Portland, 245 U. S. 217, 38 Sup. Ct. 112, 62 L. Ed. 252, L. R. A. 1918C, 766, Ann. Cas. 1918E, 660, sustaining a statute of the state of Maine authorizing cities to establish and maintain wood, coal, and fuel yards for the purpose of selling at cost wood, coal and fuel to their inhabitants. This decision is the more impressive because a similar law had been held invalid by the Supreme Court of Massachusetts and by some other state courts."

p. As to Whether Property Within or Outside the State

(1) In General (p. 866)

Income received by resident from nonresident trustee.—A state may, without denying due process of law, tax the income received by a resident from securities held for her benefit by the trustee in a trust created and administered by the law of another state, and not directly taxable to the trustee. Maguire v. Trefry, (1920) 253 U. S. 12, 40 S. Ct. 417, 64 U. S. L. ed. — (affirming (1918) 230 Mass. 503, 120 N. E. 162), wherein the court said: "Of the nature of the tax the chief justice of Massachusetts, speaking for the supreme judicial court, said: 'The income tax is measured by reference to the riches of the person taxed actually made available to him for valuable use during a given period. It establishes a basis of taxation directly proportioned to ability to bear the burden. It is founded upon the protection afforded to the recipient of the income by the government of the commonwealth of his residence in his person, in his right to receive the income, and in his enjoyment of the income when in his possession. That government provides for him all the advantages of living in safety and in freedom, and of being protected by law. It gives security to life, liberty, and the other privileges of dwelling in a civilized community. It exacts in return a contribution to the support of that government, measured by and based upon the income, in the fruition of which it defends him from unjust interference. It is true of the present tax, as was said by Chief Justice Shaw in Bates v. Boston, 5 Cush. 93, at page 99: 'The assessment does not touch the fund, or control it; nor does it interfere with the trustee in the exercise of his proper duties; nor call him, nor hold him, to any accountability. It affects only the income, after it has been paid by the trustee' to the beneficiary.'"

"We see no reason to doubt the correctness of this view of the nature and effect of the Massachusetts statute, and shall accept it for the purpose of considering the Federal question before us, which arises from the contention of the plaintiff in error that the imposition of the tax was a denial of due process of law within the protection of the 14th Amendment to the Federal Constitution, because, it is alleged, the effect of the statute is to subject property to taxation which is beyond the limits and outside the jurisdiction of the state. To support this contention the plaintiff in error relies primarily upon the decision of this court in Union Refrigerator Transit Co. v. Kentucky, 199 U. S. 194, 50 L. ed. 150, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 36, 4 Ann. Cas. 493. In that case we held that tangible, personal property, permanently located in another state than that of the owner, where it had acquired a situs, and was taxed irrespective of the domicile of the owner, was beyond the taxing power of the state, and that an attempt to tax such property at the owner's domicile was a denial of due process of law under the 14th Amendment. This ruling was made with reference to cars of the Transit Company permanently employed outside the state of the owner's residence. In that case this court, in the opinion of Mr. Justice Brown, speaking for it, expressly said that the taxation of intangible personal property was not involved. 199 U. S. 211.

"It is true that in some instances we have held that bonds and bills and notes, although evidences of debt, have come to be regarded as property which may acquire a taxable situs at the place where they are kept, which may be elsewhere than at the domicile of the owner. These cases rest upon the principle that such instruments are more than mere evidences of debt, and may be taxed in the jurisdiction where located, and where they receive the protection of local law and authority. Blackstone v. Miller, 188 U. S. 189, 206, 47 L. ed. 439, 445, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 277; People ex rel. Jefferson v. Smith, 88 N. Y. 576, 585. At the last term we held in De Ganay v. Lederer, 250 U. S. 376, 6 L. ed. 1042, 39 Sup. Ct. Rep. 524, that stocks and bonds issued by domestic corporations, and mortgages secured on domestic real estate, although owned by an alien nonresident, but in the hands of an agent in this country with authority to deal with them, were subject to the Income Tax Law of October 3, 1913 (38 Stat. at L. 166, chap. 16, 4 Fed. Stat. Ann. 2d ed. p. 236).

"In the present case we are not dealing with the right to tax securities which have acquired a local situs, but are concerned with the right of the state to tax the beneficiary of a trust at her residence, although the trust itself may be created and administered under the laws of another state.

"In Fidelity & Columbia Trust Co. v. Louisville, 245 U. S. 54, 38 Sup. Ct. 40, 62 L. Ed. 145, L. R. A. 1918C, 124, we held that a bank deposit of a resident of Kentucky in the bank of another state, where it was taxed, might be taxed as a credit belonging to the resident of Kentucky. In that case Union Transit Co. v. Kentucky, supra, was distinguished and the principle was affirmed that the state of the owner's domicile might tax the credits of a resident although evidenced by debts due from residents of another state. This is the general rule recognized in the maxim 'mobilia sequuntur personam,' and justifies, except under exceptional circumstances, the taxation of credits and beneficial interests in property at the domicile of the owner. We have pointed out in other decisions that the principle of that maxim is not of universal application and may yield to the exigencies of particular situations. But we think it is applicable here."

Property of foreign interstate railway company situated outside state.—A state, when taxing a foreign interstate railway company, cannot take into account the property of such railway company situated outside the state unless it can be seen in some plain and fairly intelligible way that such property adds to the value of the railway and the rights exercised in the state. Thus a state may not, consistently with the commerce and due process of law clauses of the Federal Constitution, fix the value of the property of foreign interstate railway companies for the purpose of levying a special excise tax upon the doing of business in the state by taking the total value of the stock and bonds of each railway company and assessing the proportion of this value that the main track mileage bears to the main track of the whole line, where, by reason of topographical conditions, the cost of the lines in that state was much less than in other states, and the great and very valuable terminals of the railways are in other states, and where the valuations as made include such items as bonds secured by mortgage of lands in other states, a land grant in another state, and other property that adds to the riches of the corporation, but does not affect that part of the railway in the state. Wallace v. Hines, (1920) 253 U. S. 66, 40 S. Ct. 435, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —.

Taxation of intangible property which is capital doing business in a state.—A state statute is constitutional which directs that a tax be assessed upon that portion of a corporation's intangible property which is capital doing business within the state. Mexican Petroleum Corp. v. Blies, (R. I. 1920) 110 Atl. 867.

q. Of Railroads

(1) On a Mileage Basis (p. 869)

Taxation on a mileage basis of property of public utilities operated as a continuous property in more than one county does not deny due process of law. State v. State Board of Equalization, (1919) 56 Mont. 413, 185 Pac. 708, 186 Pac. 697.

w. Of Capital Stock (p. 874)

A state may, consistently with the Fourteenth Amendment, tax a corporation organized under its laws upon the value of its outstanding capital stock, although the corporation's property and business are entirely in another state. Cream of Wheat Co. v. Grand Forks County, (1920) 253 U. S. 325, 40 S. Ct. 558, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) — (affirming (1918) 41 N. D. —, 170 N. W. 863), wherein the court said:

"The company concedes that the state of North Dakota might constitutionally have imposed a franchise tax upon a corporation organized under its laws, even though it had no property within the state. The contentions are that the supreme court of North Dakota erred in holding that the tax here in question was a franchise tax; that it was in reality a property tax upon intangible property; that the company's intangible property must be deemed to have been located where its tangible property was; and that in taxing property beyond its limits North Dakota violated rights guaranteed by the 14th Amendment. The view which we take of the matter renders it unnecessary to consider the question whether or not the law under discussion imposed a franchise tax or a property tax. Compare Hamilton Mfg. Co. v. Massachusetts, 6 Wall. 632, 18 L. ed. 904; Com. v. Hamilton Mfg. Co. 12 Allen, 298. The view also renders it unnecessary to consider whether the company, having been incorporated in North Dakota after the enactment of the law in question, is in a position to complain. Compare Interstate Consol. Street R. Co. v. Massachusetts, 207 U. S. 79, 84, 52 L. ed. 111, 114, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 26, 12 Ann. Cas. 555; International & G. N. R. Co. v. Anderson County, 246 U. S. 424, 433, 62 L. ed. 807, 816, 38 Sup. Ct. Rep. 370; Corry v. Baltimore, 196 U. S. 466, 49 L. ed. 556, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 297.

"The company was confessedly domiciled in North Dakota, for it was incorporated under the laws of that state. As said by Mr. Chief Justice Taney: 'It must dwell in the place of its creation, and cannot migrate to another sovereignty.' Bank of Augusta v. Earle, 13 Pet. 519, 588, 10 L. ed. 274, 307. The fact that its property and business were entirely in another state did not make it any less subject to taxation in the state of its domicile. The limitation imposed by the ... Amendment is merely that a state may not tax a resident for property which has acquired a permanent situs beyond its boundaries. This is the ground on which the ferry franchise involved in Louisville & J. Ferry Co. v. Kentucky, 188 U. S. 385, 47 L. ed. 513, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 463 (an incorporated hereditament partaking of the nature of real property), and the tangible personal property permanently outside the state, involved in Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. v. Pennsylvania, 198 U. S. 341, 49 L. ed. 1077, 25 Sup. Ct. 669, 49 L. Ed. 1077, and Union Transit Co. v. Kentucky, 199 U. S. 194, 26 Sup. Ct. 36, 50 L. Ed. 150, 4 Ann. Cas. 493, were held immune from taxation by the states in which the companies were incorporated. The limitation upon the power of taxation does not apply even to tangible personal property without the state of the corporation's domicile, if, like a seagoing vessel, the property has no permanent situs anywhere. Southern Pacific Co. v. Kentucky, 222 U. S. 63, 68, 32 Sup. Ct. 13, 56 L. Ed. 96. Nor has it any application to intangible property (Union Transit Co. v. Kentucky, supra, 199 U. S. 205, 26 Sup. Ct. 36, 50 L. Ed. 150, 4 Ann. Cas. 493; Hawley v. Malden, 232 U. S. 1, 11, 34 Sup. Ct. 201, 58 L. Ed. 477, Ann. Cas. 1916C, 842), even though the property is also taxable in another state by virtue of having acquired a "business situs" there (Fidelity & Columbia Trust Co. v. Louisville, 245 U. S. 54, 59, 38 Sup. Ct. 40, 62 L. Ed. 145, L. R. A. 1918C, 124). As stated in that case:

"It is unnecessary to consider whether the distinction between a tax measured by certain property and a tax on that property could be invoked in a case like this. Flint v. Stone-Tracy Co., 220 U. S. 107, 146, 162, 31 Sup. Ct. 342, 55 L. Ed. 389, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 1312, et seq. Whichever this tax technically may be, the authorities show that it must be sustained."

"Counsel for the company direct our attention to cases like Adams Express Co. v. Ohio, 165 U. S. 194, 227, 17 Sup. Ct. 305, 41 L. Ed. 683, and 166 U. S. 185, 17 Sup. Ct. 604, 41 L. Ed. 965, which hold that a state may tax a foreign corporation, not only on the value of its tangible property within the state, but also on that proportion of its entire intangible property which is fairly represented by and must be included in order to place a just value on the tangible property located and the business transacted there. The conclusion drawn by them is that the situs of the intangible property must be with the tangible; otherwise, they say, we must hold that it is in two places at once and that it may be subjected to double taxation. To this it is sufficient to say that the Fourteenth Amendment does not prohibit double taxation. Coe v. Errol, 116 U. S. 517, 524, 6 Sup. Ct. 475, 29 L. Ed. 715; Kidd v. Alabama, 188 U. S. 730, 732, 23 Sup. Ct. 401, 47 L. Ed. 669; Fidelity & Columbia Trust Co. v. Louisville, supra."

z. Succession or Inheritance Tax (p. 875)

A state does not in effect tax property beyond its territorial jurisdiction, and thus take property without due process of law, merely because it adopts as the measure of an inheritance tax upon the transfer of certain local property of a nonresident decedent passing by will or intestacy the proportion which the specified local property bears to the entire estate of the decedent, wherever situated. Maxwell v. Bugbee, (1919) 250 U. S. 525, 40 S. Ct. 2, 63 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (1917) 90 N. J. L. 707, 101 Atl. 248; Hill v. Bugbee, (1919) 250 U. S. 525, 40 S. Ct. 2, 63 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (1918) 92 N. J. L. 514, 105 Atl. 893.

a1. Income Tax (p. 876)

State law imposing income tax on non-residents.—A state may, consistently with due process of law, impose an annual tax upon the net income derived by nonresidents from property owned by them within the state, and from any business, trade, or profession carried on by them within its borders. Shaffer v. Carter, (1920) 252 U. S. 37, 40 S. Ct. 221, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, wherein the court said: "The contention that a state is without jurisdiction to impose a tax upon the income of nonresidents, while raised in the present case, was more emphasized in Travis v. Yale & T. Mfg. Co. decided this day [252 U. S. 60, post, 243, 40 Sup. Ct. Rep. —], involving the Income Tax Law of the state of New York. There it was contended, in substance, that while a state may tax the property of a nonresident situate within its borders, or may tax the incomes of its own citizens and residents because of the privileges they enjoy under its Constitution and laws and the protection they receive from the state, yet a nonresident, although conducting a business or carrying on an occupation there, cannot be required through income taxation to contribute to the governmental expenses of the state whence his income is derived; that an income tax, as against non-residents, is not only not a property tax, but is not an excise or privilege tax, since no privilege is granted; the right of the noncitizen to carry on his business or occupation in the taxing state being derived, it is said, from the provisions of the Federal Constitution."

"This radical contention is easily answered by reference to fundamental principles. In our system of government the states have general dominion, and, saving as restricted by particular provisions of the Federal Constitution, complete dominion over all persons, property, and business transacted within their borders; they assume and perform the duty of preserving and protecting all such persons, property, and business, and, in consequence, have the power normally pertaining to governments to resort to all reasonable forms of taxation in order to defray the governmental expenses. Certainly they are not restricted to property taxation, nor to any particular form of excises. In well-ordered society, property has value chiefly for what it is capable of producing, and the activities of mankind are devoted largely to making recurrent gains from the use and development of property, from tillage, mining, manufacture, from the employment of human skill and labor, or from a combination of some of these; gains capable of being devoted to their own support, and the surplus accumulated as an increase of capital. Then the state, from whose laws property and business and industry derive the protection and security without which production and gainful occupation would be impossible, is debarred from exacting a share of those gains in the form of income taxes for the support of the government, is a proposition so wholly inconsistent with fundamental principles as to be refuted by its mere statement. That it may tax the land but not the crop, the tree but not the fruit, the mine or well but not the product, the business but not the profit derived from it, is wholly inadmissible.

"Income taxes are a recognized method of distributing the burdens of government, favored because requiring contributions from those who realize current pecuniary benefits under the protection of the government, and because the tax may be readily proportioned to their ability to pay. Taxes of this character were imposed by several of the states at or shortly after the adoption of the Federal Constitution. New York Laws 1778, chap. 17; Report of Oliver Wolcott, Jr., Secretary of the Treasury, to 4th Congress, 2d Sess. (1796), concerning direct taxes; American State Papers, 1 Finance, 423, 427, 429, 437, 439. . . . The fact that it required the personal skill and management of appellant to bring his income from producing property in Oklahoma to fruition, and that his management was exerted from his place of business in another state, did not deprive Oklahoma of jurisdiction to tax the income which arose within its own borders. The personal element cannot, by any fiction, oust the jurisdiction of the state within which the income actually arises and whose authority over it operates in rem. At most there might be a question whether the value of the service of management rendered from without the state ought not to be allowed as an expense incurred in producing the income; but no such question is raised in the present case, hence we express no opinion upon it."

No violation of due process of law results from the exercise by the state of New York of its jurisdiction to tax incomes of non-residents arising from any business, trade, profession, or occupation carried on within its borders, and to enforce payment so far as it can by the exercise of a just control over persons and property within the state, and by a garnishment of credits (of which the withholding provision of such law is a practical equivalent). Travis v. Yale, etc., Mfg. Co., (1920) 252 U. S. 60, 40 S. Ct. 228, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (S. D. N. Y. 1919) 262 Fed. 576.

A nonresident whose entire property within the state consists of oil-producing land, oil and gas mining leaseholds, and other property used in the production of oil and gas, and whose entire net income in the state was derived from his oil operations, which he managed in that and other states as one business, having proceeded, with notice of a law of the state taxing incomes derived by non-residents from business carried on within its borders, to manage the property and conduct the business out of which arose the income taxed under such law, cannot claim that the state exceeded its power or authority so as to deny due process of law by treating his property interests and his business as a single entity and enforcing payment of the tax by the imposition of a lien to be followed by execution or other appropriate process upon all the property employed by him within the state in the business. Shaffer v. Carter, (1920) 252 U. S. 37, 40 S. Ct. 221, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —.

The Delaware Income Tax Law was held not violative of this section in State v. Pinder, (Del. 1919) 108 Atl. 43.

11. Assessments for Public Improvements

(1) In General (p. 879)

No provision for remonstrance.—Due process of law is not denied by a charter which does not provide for a remonstrance by abutters against the paving of streets used for business purposes. Brougham v. Kansas City, (W. D. Mo. 1920) 263 Fed. 115.

(5) With Regard to Special Benefits (p. 882)

Railway right of way.—A special assessment for a local drain upon a railway right of way if benefited is not violative of the 14th Amendment. Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Sargent County, (N. D. 1919) 174 N. W. 811, following Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Richland County, (1914) 28 N. D. 172, 148 N. W. 545, Ann. Cas. 1916E 574, L. R. A. 1915A 129.

(8) Taxing District in Legislative Discretion (p. 885)

The legislative determination as to what lands within a local improvement district will be benefited by an improvement is conclusive upon the owners and the courts, and can be assailed only where the legislative action is arbitrary, wholly unwarranted, a flagrant abuse, and, by reason of its arbitrary character, a confiscation of particular property. The declaration by the legislature that the real property of a railway company within a road improvement district will be benefited by the construction of a contemplated road improvement in such district cannot be said to be so arbitrary, capricious, or confiscatory as to invalidate an assessment for benefits against such real property of the railway company, where there is evidence that the improved road, by making more accessible a village terminus where the railway company in question had the only line, and by developing the adjacent country, would increase the company's business and would divert business from a place where there was a competing railroad, and that before the road was completed a large gas-producing district was discovered not far from the improved road which was tributary to it. Branson v. Bush, (1919) 251 U. S. 182, 40 S. Ct. 113, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, reversing (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1918) 248 Fed. 377, 160 C. C. A. 387.

m1. Notice and Opportunity to Be Heard

(2) In Assessments for Public Improvements

(a) In General (p. 890)

Hearing by board of supervisors sitting as board of equalization.—The hearing by a board of supervisors, sitting as a board of equalization, of all complaints and objections respecting assessments for public improvements, which was provided for by a city charter, satisfies the requirement of due process of law, although such board apparently is given power only to make recommendations to the board of public works for relief, where such charter provision is construed by the state courts as not taking away the legislative power and discretion of the board of supervisors and vesting it in the board of public works, but as empowering the former board to pass an assessing ordinance charging property with the cost of an improvement which, according to its judgment, would be just and equitable. Farncomb v. Denver, (1920) 252 U. S. 7, 40 S. Ct. 271, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (1918) 64 Colo. 13, 171 Pac. 66.

Drainage assessment.—The right of a person to contest judicially the validity of a drainage assessment is property and its denial constitutes a violation of the due process of law clause even though the validity of a bond issue is involved and a statute provides that "no court shall have jurisdiction to entertain any contest wherein their validity or constitutionality is questioned." Godchaux Co. v. Estopinal, (1920) 146 La. 405, 83 So. 690.

(b) On Question of Benefits (p. 891)

Hearing on protest sufficient.—The fact that no notice and hearing is required on the preliminary determination of benefits from a street improvement does not invalidate the statute if provision is made for a hearing on objections made by abutting owners. Pryor v. Western Pav. Co., (Okla. 1919) 184 Pac. 88.

(3) Judicial Proceeding Not Essential (p. 894)

In assessments for local improvements.—A state statute providing for review before municipal authorities only of the question whether a contract for local improvements has been let to the lowest responsible bidder does not violate the due process of law clause of the Constitution. People v. Omen, (1919) 290 Ill. 59, 124 N. E. 860.

(6) By Board of Revision (p. 897)

To same effect as original annotation, see Hayes Wheel Co. v. American Distributing Co., (C. C. A. 6th Cir. 1919) 257 Fed. 881, 169 C. C. A. 31, wherein it was said: "The fact that the statute declares final the decision of this board of appeal does not effect a denial of due process. The right of appeal from the decision of an administrative board in assessing taxes and valuing property is not necessary. 'One hearing is sufficient to constitute due process.' Mich. Central R. R. Co. v. Powers, 201 U. S. at pages 301, 302, 26 Sup. Ct. at page 466, 50 L. Ed. 744. 'A day in court is a matter of right in judicial proceedings, but administrative proceedings rest upon different principles.'"

1. In General (p. 903)

IV. THE EQUAL PROTECTION OF THE LAWS

4. As Affected by State Action

a. Power to Classify Subjects of Legislation

(1) In General (p. 922)

Civil service laws.—A county civil service act exempting from examination persons who have been on the pay roll of such county continuously for the four years immediately preceding the date upon which the civil service law took effect, and exempting persons being in the service and on the pay roll of the county less than four years, and requiring the latter class to take only a noncompetitive examination to retain their offices or positions, is not discriminatory and class legislation. State v. Buech, (Wis. 1920) 177 N. W. 781.

Prohibiting soliciting employment to collect claims.—Constitutional rights are not violated by a state statute which makes it a criminal offense for any person by personal solicitation to seek employment to prosecute or collect claims, including unliquidated claims for personal injuries, although the state may have made causes of action in tort, as well as in contract, assignable. McCloskey v. Tobin, (1920) 252 U. S. 107, 40 S. Ct. 306, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, wherein the court said:

"Article 421 of the Penal Code of Texas defined, with much detail, the offense of barratry. In McCloskey v. San Antonio Traction Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 192 S. W. 1116, a decree for an injunction restraining the plaintiff in error from pursuing the practice of fomenting and adjusting claims was reversed on the ground that this section had superseded the common law offense of barratry and that by the Code 'only an attorney at law is forbidden to solicit employment in any suit himself or by an agent.' Article 421 was then amended (Act March 29, 1917, c. 133 [Vernon's Ann. Pen. Code Supp. Tex. 1918, art. 421]) so as to apply to any person who 'shall seek to obtain employment in any claim, to prosecute, defend, present or collect the same by means of personal solicitation of such employment. . . .' Thereafter McCloskey was arrested on an information which charged him with soliciting employment to collect two claims, one for personal injuries, the other for painting a buggy. He applied for a writ of habeas corpus, which was denied both by the county court and the Court of Criminal Appeals. The case comes here under section 237 of the Judicial Code, McCloskey having claimed below, as here, that the act under which he was arrested violates rights guaranteed him by the Fourteenth Amendment.

"The contention is that, since the state had made causes of action in tort as well as in contract assignable (Railway v. Ginther, 96 Tex. 295, 72 S. W. 166), they had become an article of commerce; that the business of obtaining adjustment of claims is not inherently evil; and that therefore, while regulation was permissible, prohibition of the business violates rights of liberty and property and denies equal protection of the laws. The contention may be answered briefly. To prohibit solicitation is to regulate the business, not to prohibit it. Compare Brazee v. Michigan, 241 U. S. 340, 38 Sup. Ct. 561, 60 L. Ed. 1034, Ann. Cas. 1917C, 522. The evil against which the regulation is directed is one from which the English law has long sought to protect the community through proceedings for barratry and champerty. Co. Litt. p. 368 (Day's Edition, 1812, vol. 2, § 701, [368, b]); 1 Hawkins, Pleas of the Crown (6th Ed.) 524; Peck v. Heurich, 167 U. S. 624, 630, 17 Sup. Ct. 927, 42 L. Ed. 302. Regulation which aims to bring the conduct of the business into harmony with ethical practice of the legal profession, to which it is necessarily related, is obviously reasonable.

Ford v. Munroe (Tex. Civ. App.) 144 S. W. 349. The statute is not open to the objections urged against it."

d. Exercise of Police Power

(1) In General (p. 927)

Requiring street railway to sprinkle portion of streets.—The equal protection of the laws is not denied to a street railway company by a municipal ordinance under which it is required to sprinkle the surface of the streets occupied by its railway between the rails and tracks, and for a sufficient distance beyond the outer rails, so as effectually to lay the dust and prevent the same from arising when the cars are in operation. Pacific Gas, etc., Co. v. Police Ct., (1919) 251 U. S. 22, 40 S. Ct. 79, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (1915) 28 Cal. App. 412, 152 Pac. 928.

e. State Control Over Court Procedure

(1) In General (p. 931)

Lack of uniformity of judicial decisions.—One against whom a judicial decision has been rendered can base no rights, under the equal protection of the laws clause of the Federal Constitution, upon a later decision between strangers which is asserted to be irreconcilable on a matter of law with the earlier decision. This constitutional provision does not assure uniformity of judicial decisions. Milwaukee Electric Ry., etc., Co. v. Wisconsin, (1920) 252 U. S. 100, 40 S. Ct. 306, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) — (affirming (1917) 166 Wis. 163, 164 N. W. 844), wherein the court said:

"The company also insists that the ordinance is void because it denies equal protection of the laws. The contention rests upon the fact that since entry of the judgment below, the supreme court of the state has decided Superior v. Duluth Street R. Co. 166 Wis. 487, 165 N. W. 1081, which the company alleges is not reconcilable with its decision in this case. The similarity of the ordinances and conditions in the two cases does not seem to us as clear as is asserted. But, however that may be, the 14th Amendment does not, in guaranteeing equal protection of the laws, assure uniformity of judicial decisions (Backus Jr. & Sons v. Fort Street Union Depot Co. 169 U. S. 557, 569, 42 L. Ed. 853, 859, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 445), any more than, in guaranteeing due process, it assures immunity from judicial error (Central Land Co. v. Laidley, 159 U. S. 103, 40 L. ed. 91, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 80; Tracey v. Ginzberg, 205 U. S. 170, 51 L. ed. 755, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 461). Unlike Gelpcke v. Dubuque, 1 Wall. 175, 17 L. ed. 520, and Muhler v. New York, 197 U. S. 544, 49 L. ed. 872, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 522, where protection was afforded to rights acquired on the faith of decisions later overruled, the company seeks here to base rights on a later decision between strangers, which, it alleges, is irreconcilable on a matter of law with a decision theretofore rendered against it. The contention is clearly unsound."

Abrogating defenses of certain sureties.—A statute providing that "no change or alteration in the plans, building, construction or method of payment shall in any way avoid or affect" the liability on a building contractor's bond limiting sureties to such defense as the principal could make, does not deny the equal protection of the laws. Wright v. A. G. McAdams Lumber Co., (Tex. Civ. App. 1920) 218 S. W. 571.

(5) Venue (p. 933)

To same effect as original annotation, see People v. Evanoff, (Cal. App. 1919) 187 Pac. 54.

(20) Costs Generally (p. 938)

Dispensing with cost bond.—A statute permitting eminent domain proceedings to condemn land for highway purposes to be instituted without the giving of a cost bond is not "a suspension of general law for the benefit of particular individuals." State Highway Dept. v. Mitchell, (Tenn. 1919) 216 S. W. 336.

(21) Allowance of Attorney's Fees and Damages

(a) In General (p. 938)

Action for wages.—A state statute allowing an attorney's fee to be taxed in an action against a corporation for wages is invalid. Anderson v. Uncle Sam Oil Co., (Kan. 1920) 186 Pac. 198.

h. Relating to Crimes

(4) Different Sentences (p. 948)

Statute allowing discretion to court.—A penal statute does not deny equal protection of the law because it provides for a wide range between the minimum and the maximum sentence which may be imposed. Ex p. McGee, (Nev. 1920) 189 Pac. 622.

(5) Different Penalties for Different Offenses (p. 949)

Allowing jury to fix place of imprisonment in certain cases.—A statute penalizing carnal intercourse with a female under the age of eighteen is not invalid because it permits the jury to award imprisonment either in the county jail or in the state prison where the female is over sixteen but requires imprisonment in the state prison if she is under sixteen. Ex p. Todd, (Cal. App. 1919) 186 Pac. 790.

A statute making certain acts inimical to the morals of children a felony is valid though other closely related offenses against children are misdemeanors only. People v. Camp, (Cal. App. 1919) 183 Pac. 845.

I. Race Distinctions and Discriminations

(1) Exclusion of Negroes from Juries

(a) In General (p. 950)

Must be discrimination.—The constitution does not guarantee the presence of members of the same race as the accused on each jury. It protects only against discrimination on account of race or color. Owens v. Com., (Ky. 1920) 222 S. W. 524.

1. Corporations, Officers and Stockholders

(1) Individuals and Corporations (p. 968)

Punishing corporations more severely than individuals.—An anti-trust law imposing on corporations penalties more severe than those provided in case of the violation of the same law by individuals does not deny the equal protection of the law. Com. v. Hatfield Case Co., (1919) 186 Ky. 411, 217 S. W. 125.

(2) Foreign Corporations

(e) Nonresident Domestic Corporations and Foreign Corporations (p. 971)

Discrimination between domestic corporations which do no business in state and those which do business both outside and inside state.—The exemption of domestic corporations doing business outside the state, but none within the state, except the holding of stockholders' meetings, from the payment of any income tax, while domestic corporations doing business both within and without the state are required to pay a tax on income derived from their business transacted outside the state as well as upon the income derived from that done within the state, which is the result of Va. Laws 1916, chap. 472, read in connection with Laws 1916, chap. 495, amounts to an arbitrary discrimination forbidden by the equal protection of the laws clause of the 14th Amendment to the Federal Constitution. F. S. Royster Guano Co. v. Virginia, (1920) 253 U. S. 412, 40 S. Ct. 560, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, wherein the court said: "It is unnecessary to say that the 'equal protection of the laws' required by the 14th Amendment does not prevent the states from resorting to classification for the purposes of legislation. Numerous and familiar decisions of this court establish that they have a wide range of discretion in that regard. But the classification must be reasonable, not arbitrary, and must rest upon some ground of difference having a fair and substantial relation to the object of the legislation, so that all persons similarly circumstanced shall be treated alike. The latitude of discretion is notably wide in the classification of property for purposes of taxation and the granting of partial or total exemptions upon grounds of policy. Bell's Gap R. Co. v. Pennsylvania, 134 U. S. 232, 237, 33 L. ed. 892, 896, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 533; Michigan C. R. Co. v. Powers, 201 U. S. 245, 293, 50

L. ed. 744, 701, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 459; Keeney v. New York, 222 U. S. 525, 536, 56 L. ed. 299, 305, 38 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1139, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 105; Citizens' Teleph. Co. v. Fuller, 229 U. S. 322, 329, 57 L. ed. 1206, 1213, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 833; Northwestern Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Wisconsin, 247 U. S. 132, 139, 62 L. ed. 1025, 1037, 38 Sup. Ct. Rep. 444. Nevertheless, a discriminatory tax law cannot be sustained against the complaint of a party aggrieved if the classification appear to be altogether illusory. Now both of the taxing provisions here in question relate to corporations organized under the laws of Virginia. It is the object of chapter 495 to exempt such corporations from income taxes (as well as taxes upon intangible property) where they do no business within the state except holding their stockholders' meetings therein; manifestly in recognition of the fact that Virginia corporations so circumstanced derive no governmental protection from the state warranting the imposition of taxes upon their incomes derived from without the state, or property taxes upon their intangibles, and in recognition of the impolicy, if not injustice, of imposing such taxes upon them while they are liable, and presumably subjected, to taxation in the state or states where their income-producing business is conducted. But no ground is suggested, nor can we conceive of any, sustaining this exemption which does not apply with equal or greater force as a ground for exempting from taxation the income of Virginia corporations derived from sources without the state where they also transact income-producing business within the state. Corporations of this class derive no more protection from the state of their origin with respect to their outside business, and are no less subject to taxation by the states in which such business is conducted, than corporations of the other class; and they are required to comply with the same laws as to the payment of organization taxes and annual registration fees and franchise taxes to the state of origin. Their business done within the state presumably is of some general benefit to the state, certainly enriches its treasury by the amount of the taxes they pay upon the income derived therefrom; and the imposition upon them under chapter 472 of taxes not only upon this income but also upon income that they derive from business conducted outside of the state (similar income of the favored corporations being exempted) has the effect of discriminating against them for that which ought to operate, if at all, in their favor. It is obvious that the ground upon which the discrimination is rested has no fair or substantial relation to the proper object sought to be accomplished by the legislation. It follows that it is arbitrary in effect; and none the less because it is probable that the unequal operation of the taxing system was due to inadvertence rather than design."

m. Railroad Companies

- (4) Distinguishing Between Street Railway and Steam Railroad (p. 977)

Employers' Liability Act.—A state statute making the provisions of the federal Employers' Liability Act applicable to intrastate railroads is not class legislation, though employees on street railways and the like are not included in the benefits thereof. Archibald v. Northern Pac. R. Co., (1919) 108 Wash. 97, 183 Pac. 95.

w. Banking and Trust Companies

- (1) Licensing Banking Business (p. 1000)

Discretionary power to charter bank.—A state statute providing that a bank shall be chartered by the superintendent of banks "if in his opinion the organization of such bank is justified," does not deny equal protection of the law. Mulkey v. Bennett, (1920) 95 Ore. 70, 186 Pac. 1115.

A statute imposing upon the state securities commission the duty of determining whether a certificate of authority to do business as a bank should be issued, applies to proceedings pending before the superintendent of banks at the time of its enactment, and so construed the statute is not unconstitutional as in contravention of the Fourteenth Amendment. Carlson v. Pearson, (Minn. 1920) 176 N. W. 346.

d1. Vesting Discretion in Municipal Council and Officers

- (1) In General (p. 1027)

Permits for street stands for public livery cars.—An ordinance which leaves it to the unregulated discretion of the department of public safety as to whom permits should be issued to occupy any part of the streets with a public livery car is unconstitutional. New Orleans v. Badie, (1920) 146 La. 550, 83 So. 826, wherein the court said:

"We were informed in oral argument that this was done because the city conceded to the property owners abutting the public streets the right to say who shall occupy the streets in front of their places of business, since they have the right to keep same clear for the use of their customers and themselves. However, this only renders the system all the more obnoxious, for, as was also stated in argument, such proprietors are permitted to award such stands to the one who will pay the largest rental, thus not only allowing an individual to rent the public streets for his private benefit, but also placing in the hands of the department, or officer to whom the discretion of granting or refusing the permit is given, a formidable weapon for oppression or corruption, depending solely upon the wisdom and integrity of the officer."

f1. Regulating Pursuit of Occupations

- (1) Practice of Medicine

- (a) In General (p. 1038)

Discrimination against osteopaths.—The exception of physicians and surgeons but not osteopaths from an Optometry Act is valid. Ex p. Rust, (Cal. 1919) 183 Pac. 548.

- (b) Requiring Physicians to Report Contagious Diseases (p. 1039)

Discrimination against osteopaths in matter of reporting vital statistics.—A state statute requiring physicians to furnish birth and death certificates to municipal officers but prohibiting such officers from accepting such certificates from osteopathic practitioners is not in violation of the equal protection clause of the Fourteenth Amendment. Keiningham v. Blake, (1919) 135 Md. 320, 109 Atl. 65, 8 A. L. R. 1766, wherein the court said:

"The vital question in the case is whether the prohibition against the acceptance of birth and death certificates from licensed osteopaths is a violation of any of their constitutional rights. It is contended that this provision is a denial of the equal protection of the law to those practicing osteopathy, and is therefore in contravention of the Fourteenth Amendment of the federal Constitution.

"The enactment in question forms part of the Code article entitled 'Health,' and its relation to that subject is obvious. It is therefore within the scope of the police power of the state, and should be sustained as an exercise of that power unless the discrimination it makes can be held to be plainly arbitrary and without any perceptible relation to the objects sought to be accomplished. All reasonable presumptions must be made in favor of the validity of the provision. The judgment of the Legislature that such a regulation is proper and desirable should be respected and enforced by the courts if there is any rational theory upon which it can be supported.

"The separate classification, for licensing purposes, of practitioners of medicine and surgery and those practicing by manipulation only, cannot be held to be unreasonable. Practitioners of the former class were licensed in this state many years before such a provision was made as to osteopaths. The methods of treatment, and the prescribed qualifications, differ in important particulars for the two classes of practitioners, and the differences by which they are actually distinguished suggest an adequate reason for their separate classification by statute. . . .

"The certificates of birth and death to which the statute refers are required to contain such 'items of information as the state registrar of vital statistics shall deem important or necessary,' in addition to such facts as the date and place of a birth or death, the name, sex and color of a child reported born, the name, age, color, occupation, condition, and birthplace of a person reported to have died, the cause of death, duration of illness, and the name and address of the attending physician. It was the evident theory of the Legislature that some of the information which the law directed, or the state registrar of vital statistics might deem necessary, to be included in the birth or death certificates, could be furnished more satisfactorily by a physician having the qualifications demanded by the statute of practitioners of medicine and surgery than by those who were licensed to practice osteopathy exclusively. As to the real necessity for making such a distinction, this court has no right to decide. The only inquiry we are authorized to make is whether the action of the Legislature in restricting the means and agencies by which vital statistics are to be obtained is clearly unreasonable."

g1. Game and Fish Laws

(3) Regulating Catching Fish (p. 1042)

Act applicable to single county.—An act prohibiting the taking of salt water crabs in one certain county is valid. State v. Savage, (Ore. 1919) 184 Pac. 567.

f2. Regulating Erection of Buildings (p. 1052)

Laundry near church.—"In the instant case, plaintiffs attempted to install machinery and operate a laundry within ten feet of the First Presbyterian Church of the City of Norman, in violation of an ordinance prohibiting the installation and operation of an oil mill, tannery, cotton gin, steam laundry, machine shop, garage, or blacksmith shop within 150 feet of a church, school, or hospital, on the theory that the ordinance was void and in violation of the fourteenth amendment of the federal Constitution. Held, that such an ordinance is of a regulatory nature and reasonable, and within the police and sanitary powers of a city to enact and enforce, and not in violation of the fourteenth amendment to the federal Constitution." Walcher v. First Presbyterian Church, (1919) 76 Okla. 9, 184 Pac. 106, 6 A. L. R. 1593.

x2. State Taxation

(1) Equality

(a) In General (p. 1057)

Double taxation.—The 14th Amendment to the Federal Constitution no more forbids double taxation than it does doubling the amount of the tax, short of confiscation or proceedings unconstitutional on other grounds. Ft. Smith Lumber Co. v. Arkansas, (1920) 251 U. S. 532, 40 S. Ct. 304, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (1919) 138 Ark. 581, 211 S. W. 662.

Nothing in the Federal Constitution or in the 14th Amendment prevents the states from imposing double taxation or any other form of unequal taxation so long as the inequality is not based upon arbitrary distinctions. Shaffer v. Carter, (1920) 252 U. S. 37, 40 S. Ct. 221, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —.

(b) Power of Classification

aa. In General (p. 1058)

Discriminating between corporations and individuals.—A state may, so far as the Federal Constitution is concerned, tax its own corporations in respect of the stock held by them in other domestic corporations, although individuals are exempt. Ft. Smith Lumber Co. v. Arkansas, (1920) 251 U. S. 532, 40 S. Ct. 304, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) — (affirming (1919) 138 Ark. 581, 211 S. W. 662), wherein the court said: "We are of opinion that it is also within the power of a state, so far as the Constitution of the United States is concerned, to tax its own corporations in respect of the stock held by them in other domestic corporations, although unincorporated stockholders are exempt. A state may have a policy in taxation. Quong Wing v. Kirkendall, 223 U. S. 59, 63, 56 L. ed. 350, 352, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 192. If the state of Arkansas wished to discourage, but not to forbid, the holding of stock in one corporation by another, and sought to attain the result by this tax, or if it simply saw fit to make corporations pay for the privilege, there would be nothing in the Constitution to hinder. A discrimination between corporations and individuals with regard to a tax like this cannot be pronounced arbitrary, although we may not know the precise ground of policy that led the state to insert the distinction in the law."

Confining recovery of back taxes to those due from corporations.—Confining the recovery of back taxes to those due from corporations does not offend against the Federal Constitution. Ft. Smith Lumber Co. v. Arkansas, (1920) 251 U. S. 532, 40 S. Ct. 304, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (1919) 138 Ark. 581, 211 S. W. 662.

Taxation of intangible property which is capital doing business in a state.—A state statute is constitutional which directs that a tax be assessed upon that portion of a corporation's intangible property which is capital doing business within the state. Mexican Petroleum Corp. v. Bliss, (R. I. 1920) 110 Atl. 867.

Taxation of employers employing workmen having no dependents.—A state cannot tax as a class all employers who employ workmen having no dependents who would be entitled to compensation in case of fatal accident. Bryant v. Lindsay, (N. J. 1920) 110 Atl. 823, wherein the court said:

"Such a tax has manifestly no relation to the police power; it is plainly not a property tax, and when we consider that it is restricted not merely to employers generally who have in their employ workmen with no dependents entitled to claim, but employers of that character who are within section 2 of the Compensation Act, we reach a tenuity of classification that seems to us to deprive the class of any logical validity and of all substantial basis. Southern Railway Co. v. Green, 216 U. S. 400, 30 Sup. Ct. 287, 54 L. Ed. 536, 17 Ann. Cas. 1247.

"From another standpoint the act seems to be simply a taking of the property of this class of employers without any compensation therefor. They are in effect penalized for employing men or women who are without dependents qualified to claim compensation. If we were permitted to comment upon the question of legislative policy which tends to dissuade an employer conducting a hazardous occupation from receiving into his service a workman who, if killed in that service, would not leave a widow and infant children destitute of support, it would be apposite to remark that this is the precise opposite of the policy of the United States in the selective service draft. But, looking at the matter in its purely legal aspect, we are clear that it is an attempted exercise of the power of taxation which runs counter to our constitutional system, both national and state, and that it cannot be supported on that theory or on any other that has been suggested."

(7) Exemption from Taxation

(a) In General (p. 1085)

Number of persons affected by tax exemption statute as material question.—A tax exemption statute which rests upon a rational classification is not to be stricken down merely because affecting a few or even one in its practical operation. Massachusetts General Hospital v. Belmont, (1919) 233 Mass. 190, 124 N. E. 21.

(10) Assessments for Local Improvements

(a) In General (p. 1089)

Franchises of railroad company.—The consideration by assessing officers, conformably to state law, of the franchises of a railway company, when assessing for a public improvement the real estate of a railroad company within the taxing district, does not, without more, justify invalidating the tax as a denial of the equal protection of the laws, on the theory that the franchises of the railway company were included as a separate personal-property value in the real property assessment, thus taxing the railway property at a higher rate than other real property in the district. Branson v. Bush, (1919) 251 U. S. 182, 40 S. Ct. 113, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, reversing (C. C. A. 8th Cir. 1918) 248 Fed. 377, 160 C. C. A. 387.

All abutting property not included in sewer assessment district.—The federal Supreme Court will not interfere on constitutional grounds with sewer assessments merely because certain abutting property, a part of which might be drained into the sewer, was omitted from such district by the local authorities, where the state courts have upheld the assessments, and the action of the state authorities cannot be said to be arbitrary or wholly unequal in operation and effect. Goldsmith v. George G. Prendergast Constr. Co., (1920) 252 U. S. 12, 40 S. Ct. 273, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (1918) 273 Mo. 184, 201 S. W. 354.

(b) Giving Residents Privilege of Protesting against Improvements (p. 1070)

A statute giving the right to resident owners occupying property on a street to be improved by special assessment to defeat the work by a majority of the residents in such street petitioning against the work, is a limitation on the power of the city to make the improvement in the nature of a veto, legislative in its nature, and does not deny the equal protection of the law to nonresidents. It is equal protection of the law, and not the equal right to make laws, that the Fourteenth Amendment to the Federal Constitution provides. Union Sav. Bank, etc., Co. v. Jackson, (Miss. 1920) 84 So. 388.

(24) Graduated Income Tax (p. 1076)

Distribution of income tax collected by state among taxing districts.—A state income tax act which provides for the distribution among the several cities, towns and taxing districts of the income tax collected by the state is not in violation of the equal protection clause of the constitution. Duffy v. Burrill, (Mass. 1919) 125 N. E. 135, wherein the court said:

"It has been argued that the statute contravenes the guaranty of equal protection of the laws and that against being deprived of property without due process of law contained in the Fourteenth Amendment to the United States Constitution. Of course, the provisions of that amendment are the law of the land and the exposition of their meaning by the Supreme Court of the United States is of binding force. We are unable to perceive anything in the present statute which violates those provisions. The income tax is levied by the state equally upon all made subject to the tax, according to valid classifications, for public purposes, and can be expended only for those purposes. Attention was called in argument to the decisions in Thomas v. Gay, 169 U. S. 264, 276, 18 Sup. Ct. 340, 42 L. Ed. 740, and Cole v. La Grange, 113 U. S. 1, 5 Sup. Ct. 416, 28 L. Ed. 896. No discussion seems to us to be required to demonstrate that the principles declared and applied in those decisions do not invalidate the present statute. While it was held in those decisions that taxes could be levied only for public purposes and expended only for public objects, and that the duty and obligations to pay taxes is founded on participation in benefits arising from the promotion of the public welfare, it also was recognized that in the practical administration of these principles it was not necessary that a specific personal advantage be pointed out as accruing to each taxpayer or taxpaying district. It is enough if some general plan be followed which is not discriminatory, arbitrary or fanciful in its operation, and which confines expenditures to public purposes."

The Delaware Income Tax Law was held not violative of this section in State v. Pinder, (Del. 1919) 108 Atl. 43.

(32) Succession or Inheritance Taxes

(a) In General (p. 1078)

Property without state considered in determining tax on property within state.—Nonresident testators and intestates are not denied the equal protection of the laws by a state inheritance tax law under which the tax on the transfer by will or intestacy of the estate of a nonresident decedent, consisting of property both within and without the state, is first ascertained on the entire estate as though it were the estate of a resident with all the decedent's property, both real and personal, situated within the state, and is then apportioned and assessed in the proportion that the taxable estate within the state bears to the entire estate, wherever situated, although by reason of the graduation of the tax the application of the apportionment formula fixed by the statute may result in a greater tax on the transfer of the property of the estate subject to the state's jurisdiction than would be assessed for the transfer of an equal amount, in similar manner, of the property of a resident decedent. Maxwell v. Bugbee, (1919) 250 U. S. 525, 40 S. Ct. 2, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (1917) 90 N. J. L. 707, 101 Atl. 248; Hill v. Bugbee, (1919) 250 U. S. 525, 40 S. Ct. 2, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming (1918) 92 N. J. L. 514, 106 Atl. 893.

(40) Occupation Taxes

(b) Discriminating against Foreign Corporation (p. 1082)

A state statute imposing license taxes on the manufacturer or other person engaged in the business of selling automobiles in this state, reducing the rate if three-fourths of the entire assets of the manufacturer are invested and returned for taxes herein, applies indiscriminately to the manufacturers of every state, and being for the object of reducing the license tax for selling automobiles in this state when the seller is already paying a tax here on three-fourths of his assets, is not in violation of this section. Bethlehem Motors Corp. v. Flynt, (1919) 178 N. C. 399, 100 S. E. 693.

(m) Use of Trading Stamps (p. 1087)

Requiring a license fee from persons or corporations giving trading stamps or other similar devices redeemable in merchandise is a proper subject of state legislation. State v. J. M. Seney Co., (1919) 134 Md. 437, 107 Atl. 189, wherein the court said:

"In three recent cases the Supreme Court of the United States has decided that the use of trading stamps, redeemable in articles of merchandise, is subject to regulation, restriction, or prohibition by a state in the exercise of its police power, and hence is not within the protection of the federal Constitution. Rast v. Van Deman & Lewis Co., 240 U. S. 342, 36 Sup. Ct. 370, 60 L. Ed. 679, L. R. A. 1917A, 421, Ann. Cas. 1917B, 455; Tanner v. Little, 240 U. S. 369, 36 Sup. Ct. 379, 60 L. Ed. 691; Pitney v. Washington, 240 U. S. 387, 36 Sup. Ct. 395, 60 L. Ed. 703. These decisions were based on the theory that such a business is not so clearly devoid of any injurious effect upon the public welfare as to justify a judicial declaration that the effort of the Legislature to apply the police power to the subject is manifestly arbitrary and unreasonable and therefore ineffective.

The statute, however, exempts from the $1,500 license charge any manufacturer or packer who issues trading stamps or similar devices in connection with his own products. For the use of trading stamps under such conditions a license fee of only $50 is required to be paid. This classification is alleged to result in an arbitrary and unconstitutional discrimination. In our opinion, the statute should not be held invalid on that ground. An essential element of the police power is the right of the Legislature to classify the conditions to which the power is applicable. There may be different phases or degrees of an injury to which the public is believed to be exposed and against which it is sought to be protected by measures of regulation and restraint properly differing in their nature and effect. Unless a classification adopted by the Legislature in the application of the police power is plainly arbitrary and capricious, its judgment on the subject should be respected and sustained."

Vol. XI, p. 1110, amend. 16.

"Income" as including stock dividend.—The word "income" as used in this amendment does not include a stock dividend. Such a dividend is capital and not income and can be taxed only if the tax is apportioned among the several states in accordance with art. 1, sec. 2, cl. 3 (see vol. X, p. 335) and art. 1, sec. 9, cl. 4 (see vol. X, p. 887) of the Constitution. Eisner v. Macomber, (1920) 252 U. S. 189, 40 S. Ct. 189, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) — (following Towne v. Eisner, (1918) 245 U. S. 418, 38 S. Ct. 158, 62 U. S. (L. ed.) 372), wherein the court said: "The Sixteenth Amendment must be construed in connection with the taxing clauses of the original Constitution and the effect attributed to them before the amendment was adopted. In Pollock v. Farmers' Loan & Trust Co., 158 U. S. 601, 15 Sup. Ct. 912, 39 L. Ed. 1108, under the Act of August 27, 1894 (28 Stat. 509, 553, c. 349, § 27), it was held that taxes upon rents and profits of real estate and upon returns from investments of personal property were in effect direct taxes upon the property from which such income arose, imposed by reason of ownership; and that Congress could not impose such taxes without apportioning them among the states according to population, as required by article 1, § 2, cl. 3, and section 9, cl. 4, of the original Constitution.

"Afterwards, and evidently in recognition of the limitation upon the taxing power of Congress thus determined, the Sixteenth Amendment was adopted, in words lucidly expressing the object to be accomplished: 'The Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes on incomes, from whatever source derived, without apportionment among the several states, and without regard to any census or enumeration.' As repeatedly held, this did not extend the taxing power to new subjects, but merely removed the necessity which otherwise might exist for an apportionment among the states of taxes laid on income. Brushaber v. Union P. R. Co., 240 U. S. 1, 17-19, 60 L. ed. 493, 501, 502, L. R. A. 1917D, 414, 36 Sup. Ct. Rep. 236, Ann. Cas. 1917B, 713; Stanton v. Baltic Min. Co., 240 U. S. 103, 112 et seq., 60 L. ed. 546, 553, 36 Sup. Ct. Rep. 278; William E. Peck & Co. v. Lowe, 247 U. S. 165, 172, 173, 62 L. ed. 1049-1051, 38 Sup. Ct. Rep. 432.

"A proper regard for its genesis, as well as its very clear language, requires also that this Amendment shall not be extended by loose construction, so as to repeal or modify, except as applied to income, those provisions of the Constitution that require an apportionment according to population for direct taxes upon property, real and personal. This limitation still has an appropriate and important function, and is not to be overridden by Congress or disregarded by the courts.

"In order, therefore, that the clauses cited from article 1 of the Constitution may have proper force and effect, save only as modified by the Amendment, and that the latter also may have proper effect, it becomes essential to distinguish between what is and what is not 'income,' as the term is there used; and to apply the distinction, as cases arise, according to truth and substance, without regard to form. Congress cannot by any definition it may adopt conclude the matter, since it cannot by legislation alter the Constitution, from which alone it derives its power to legislate, and within whose limitations alone that power can be lawfully exercised.

"The fundamental relation of 'capital' to 'income' has been much discussed by economists, the former being likened to the tree or the land, the latter to the fruit or the crop; the former depicted as a reservoir supplied from springs, the latter as the outlet stream, to be measured by its flow during a period of time. For the present purpose we require only a clear definition of the term 'income,' as used in common speech, in order to determine its meaning in the Amendment; and, having formed also a correct judgment as to the nature of a stock dividend, we shall find it easy to decide the matters at issue.

"After examining dictionaries in common use (Bouvier's Law Dict.; Standard Dict.; Webster's Int. Dict.; Century Dict.), we find little to add to the succinct definition adopted in two cases arising under the Corporation Tax Act of August 5, 1909 (Stratton's Independence v. Howbert, 231 U. S. 399, 415, 58 L. ed. 285, 292, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 136; Doyle v. Mitchell Bros. Co., 247 U. S. 179, 185, 62 L. ed. 1054, 1059, 38 Sup. Ct. Rep. 467): 'Income may be defined as the gain derived from capital, from labor, or from both combined,' provided it be understood to include profit gained through a sale or conversion of capital assets, to which it was applied in the Doyle Case (pp. 183, 185).

"Brief as it is, it indicates the characteristic and distinguishing attribute of income, essential for a correct solution of the present controversy. The government, although basing its argument upon the definition as quoted, placed chief emphasis upon the word 'gain,' which was extended to include a variety of meanings; while the significance of the next three words was either overlooked or misconceived,—'derived — from — capital';— 'the gain — derived — from — capital,' etc. Here we have the essential matter: not a gain accruing to capital, not a growth or increment of value in the investment; but a gain, a profit, something of exchangeable value proceeding from the property, severed from the capital, however invested or employed, and coming in, being 'derived,' that is, received or drawn by the recipient (the taxpayer) for his separate use, benefit, and disposal; that is income derived from property. Nothing else answers the description.

"The same fundamental conception is clearly set forth in the 16th Amendment — 'incomes, from whatever source derived,' — the essential thought being expressed with a conciseness and lucidity entirely in harmony with the form and style of the Constitution."

Salary of federal judges as affected by this amendment.—This amendment does not extend the taxing power to new or excepted subjects, but merely removes all occasion otherwise existing for an apportionment among the states of taxes laid on income, from whatever source derived. Evans v. Gore, (1920) 253 U. S. 245, 40 S. Ct. 550, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, reversing (W. D. Ky. 1919) 262 Fed. 550, and holding that the salary of a federal judge was immune from an income tax by virtue of article III, sec. 1 of the Constitution prohibiting the diminishing of a judge's salary during his term of office.

1919 Supp., p. 839, amend. 18.

Prohibition amendment as part of Constitution.—The Prohibition Amendment to the Federal Constitution by lawful proposal and ratification has become a part of that Constitution, and must be respected and given effect the same as other provisions of that instrument. National Prohibition Cases, (1920) 253 U. S. 350, 40 S. Ct. 486, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming Feigenspan v. Bodine, (D. C. N. J. 1920) 264 Fed. 186.

Prohibition amendment as binding on legislative bodies, courts, etc.—That part of the Prohibition Amendment to the Federal Constitution which embodies the prohibition is operative throughout the entire territorial limits of the United States, binds all legislative bodies, courts, public officers, and individuals within those limits, and of its own force invalidates every legislative act, whether by Congress, by a state legislature, or by a territorial assembly, which authorizes or sanctions what the amendment prohibits. National Prohibition Cases, (1920) 253 U. S. 350, 40 S. Ct. 486, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming Feigenspan v. Bodine, (D. C. N. J. 1920) 264 Fed. 186.

Liquors manufactured before amendment became effective.—The power of Congress to enforce the Prohibition Amendment to the Federal Constitution may be exerted against the disposal for beverage purposes of liquors manufactured before the amendment became effective, just as it may be against subsequent manufacture for those purposes. National Prohibition Cases, (1920) 253 U. S. 350, 40 S. Ct. 486, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming Feigenspan v. Bodine, (D. C. N. J. 1920) 264 Fed. 186.

Concurrent power of states to enforce Prohibition Amendment.—The declaration in the Prohibition Amendment to the Federal Constitution that "the Congress and the several states shall have concurrent power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation" does not enable Congress or the several states to defeat or thwart the prohibition, but only to enforce it by appropriate means. National Prohibition Cases, (1920) 253 U. S. 350, 40 S. Ct. 486, 64 U. S. (L. ed.) —, affirming Feigenspan v. Bodine, (D. C. N. J. 1920) 264 Fed. 186, which further held that the words "concurrent power" do not mean joint power, or require that legislation thereunder by Congress, to be effective, shall be approved or sanctioned by the several states or any of them, nor do they mean that the power to enforce is divided between Congress and the several states along the lines which separate or distinguish foreign or interstate commerce from intrastate affairs. It was further said that the power confided to Congress that "the Congress and the several states shall have concurrent power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation," while not exclusive, is territorially coextensive with the prohibition of that amendment, embraces manufacture and other intrastate transactions as well as importation, exportation, and interstate traffic, and is in no wise dependent on or affected by action or inaction on the part of the several states or any of them.

In Ex p. Dillon, (N. D. Cal. 1920) 232 Fed. 563, wherein the constitutionality of this amendment was considered, it was said: "The claim that the Eighteenth Amendment itself is unconstitutional and void is based upon two grounds: first, because the amendment is in derogation of the Constitution, and not an amendment at all; and, second, because Congress was without power or authority to submit a conditional amendment, or an amendment limiting the time within which it must be ratified. The length of this opinion and the limited time at my disposal forbid an extended discussion of these objections, if, indeed, such a discussion be called for by this court. After receiving the approval of two-thirds of the membership of both houses of Congress and after ratification by the Legislatures of more than three-fourths of the states, the defects in a constitutional amendment must be plain indeed before a court of inferior jurisdiction will be justified in declaring it null and void. No such case is presented here. Briefly stated the contention of the petitioner is this:

"An amendment 'implies such an addition or change within the lines of the original instrument as will effect an improvement, or better carry out the purpose for which it was framed.' Livermore v. Waite, 102 Cal. 118, 36 Pac. 426, 25 L. R. A. 312.

"And from this it is argued that inasmuch as the original Constitution was silent on the question of the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors there is nothing to be amended or to amend by and therefore the amendment itself is void. The term 'amend,' as defined by Webster, means:

“‘To change or alter, as a law, bill, motion, or constitutional provision, by the will of a legislative body, or by competent authority; as to amend a charter.’

“That the amendment in question changes the original Constitution does not admit of question, and while it does not change any provision relating to this particular matter it does change the instrument as a whole. The Constitution is a mere grant of power to the federal government by the several states and any amendment which adds to or in any manner changes the powers thus granted comes within the legal and even within the technical definition of that term. The Thirteenth Amendment, abolishing and prohibiting slavery within the states, has been recognized as a part of the Constitution for upwards of half a century.’ The amendment in question does no more, only the prohibition extends to a different subject-matter. It seems to me therefore that the objections are without substantial merit. Again it is urged that the Constitution does not authorize the submission of conditional amendments. This is no doubt true, but it is equally true that the Constitution does not forbid them. The framers of the Constitution could not foresee the form or character of amendments which might become necessary in the future and wisely left all such questions in the hands of those who might be charged with official duty when the necessity for the change and the character of the change to be made became apparent.”
